WHEREAS the Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland have in the third and fourth years of His Majesty's reign passed an Act, intituled, "An Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies, for promoting the Industry of the Manumitted Slaves, and for compensating the persons hitherto entitled to the services of such Slaves:" And whereas the legislature of Barbadoes, relying on the justice of the British nation to afford a just compensation to the proprietors of slaves within this Island for the loss they will sustain by being deprived of their property, will co-operate with the Imperial Parliament in so desirable an object as the abolition of slavery: Be it therefore enacted, by his Excellency Sir Lionel Smith, Knight Commander of the most honourable Military Order of the Clause 1. All persons who, on the 1st of August 1834, shall have been registered as slaves, and shall appear on the registry to be six years old or upwards, shall from that day become apprenticed labourers.

the Bath, His Majesty's Captain-general and Governor-in-chief of this Island, Chancellor Ordinary and Vice-admiral of the same, the honourable the members of His Majesty's Council and General Assembly of this Island, and by the authority of the same, that from and after the 1st day of August 1834, all persons who in conformity with the laws now in force in this Island shall on or before the 1st day of August 1834 have been duly registered as slaves in this Island, and who on the said 1st day of August 1834 shall be actually within this Island, and who shall by such registry appear to be on the said 1st day of August 1834 of the full age of six years or upwards, shall by force and virtue of this Act, and without the previous execution of any indenture of apprenticeship, or other deed or instrument for that purpose, become and be apprenticed labourers; provided that for the purposes aforesaid any slave belonging to this Island, and engaged in his ordinary occupation on the seas, shall be deemed and taken to be within this Island.

Clause 2. Persons entitled to the services of apprenticed labourers.

And be it further enacted, that during the continuance of the apprenticeship of any such apprenticed labourer, such person or persons shall be entitled to the services of such apprenticed labourer as would for the time being have been entitled to his or her services as a slave if this Act had not been made.

Clause 3. Slaves and apprenticed labourers carried to the United Kingdom, declared free.

Provided also, and be it further enacted, that all slaves who may at any time previous to the passing of this Act have been carried with the consent of their possessors, and all slaves and apprenticed labourers who may hereafter with the like consent be carried from this Island into any part of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, are hereby declared to be absolutely and entirely free and discharged from all slavery or apprenticeship, and to be entitled to their freedom and discharge accordingly, to all intents and purposes whatsoever: provided always, that nothing herein contained shall prevent or be construed to prevent the owners of such slaves thus manumitted and set free being entitled to receive compensation for the value of such slaves, in like manner as if such slaves had been made apprenticed labourers.

Proviso: Owners to be compensated.

Clause 4. Apprenticed labourers divided into classes of prædial attached, prædial unattached, and non-prædial.

And be it further enacted, that all such apprenticed labourers shall for the purposes of this Act be divided into three distinct classes; the first of such classes consisting of prædial apprenticed labourers attached to the soil, and comprising all persons who in their state of slavery were usually employed in agriculture, or in the manufacture of colonial produce or otherwise, upon lands belonging to their owners, or otherwise engaged in labour or occupations not continuous; the second of such classes consisting of prædial apprenticed labourers not attached to the soil, and comprising all persons who in their state of slavery were usually employed in agriculture, or in the manufacture of colonial produce or otherwise, upon lands not belonging to their owners, or otherwise engaged in labour or occupations not continuous; and the third of such classes consisting of non-prædial apprenticed labourers, and comprising all apprenticed labourers not included within either of the preceding classes: provided always, that no person of the age of 12 years and upwards shall be included in either of the said two classes of prædial apprenticed labourers, unless such person shall for 12 calendar months, at the least, next before the passing of this Act, have been habitually employed in agriculture, or in the manufacture of colonial produce or otherwise as aforesaid; or unless such person shall have been subsequently to that period dismissed from domestic service for any of the offences hereinafter enumerated, for which a special justice of the peace may adjudge any non-prædial apprenticed labourer to be placed in the class of prædial apprenticed labourers: provided always nevertheless, and be it enacted, that it shall and may be lawful for any apprenticed labourer who may have been so dismissed to appeal to the special justice of the district, who shall inquire into the circumstances of the case, and shall determine to which class of apprenticed labourers such person shall belong.

Proviso.

Clause 5. Registrar of slaves to deliver original returns to owners, who are to distinguish the classes.

And be it further enacted, that the registrar of slaves shall deliver to the owners of slaves applying for the same the latest lists or schedules of their slaves so soon as he shall have completed the present registration, and of which he shall give due notice in the public newspapers in this Island; and between the 1st day of May and the 1st day of August now next ensuing, every owner of slaves by himself or herself, or by his or her constituted attorney in this Island in case of absentees, or in case any such owner be an invalid or incompetent, then by some other person or persons, shall return back to the registrar such lists or schedules, distinguishing, in reference to each slave therein mentioned, to which of the said three classes such slave will belong; and every such return shall be made on oath before the registrar, who is hereby authorized and required to administer the same as follows: "I, A. B., do swear, that the distinctions made in the return now presented of the classes to which the respective slaves therein named will belong as apprenticed labourers correspond with the occupations usually pursued by such slaves for 12 months previous to the passing of an Act of this Island, intituled, 'An Act for the Abolition of Slavery, for the Government of Apprenticed Labourers, and for ascertaining and enforcing the Reciprocal Duties between them and their Employers,' according to the best of my knowledge, information and belief;" adding, if the fact be so, "except the slave or slaves named A. B. and C. D., who subsequently to that period hath or have been dismissed from domestic service for [stating the offence], and for no other cause whatsoever. So help me God."

Clause 6. If the registrar shall doubt the accuracy of returns made, he is to institute an inquiry.

And be it further enacted, that if in any case the registrar shall see cause to doubt the accuracy of any such return, he shall retain the same, and shall appoint a time and place at which the person making the return shall attend him to substantiate the accuracy of such return; and at the time and place to be appointed, the person to whom the notice thereof shall be addressed shall attend the said registrar, and, if required, bring with him any slave, respecting whom such doubt may have arisen, and the registrar shall then proceed to examine such person making such return, and the slave respecting whom such doubt has arisen, and any witnesses who may be adduced respecting the truth of such return, and may if necessary adjourn such examination from time to time; and the registrar, after making due inquiry, shall either confirm or correct any such return as he may think fit, giving notice to the party making such return, and the slave respectively, of such his decision.

Clause 7. Registrar to deliver back the return to the party making it.

And be it further enacted, that after such proceedings shall have taken place, the registrar shall deliver back to the party making such return the original thereof corrected, if necessary, and certified by him as having been duly entered in the registry.

Clause 8. Distinguishing letters to be affixed to the name of each apprenticed labourer.

And be it further enacted, that when such proceedings as aforesaid shall have taken place, there shall be affixed to the entry of the name of each prædial attached slave in the registry the letters P. A.; of each prædial unattached, the letters P. U.; and of each non-prædial slave, the letters N. P.

Clause 9. Penalty on persons omitting to make returns.

And be it further enacted, that any person omitting to make the return on oath by this Act required, shall incur a penalty of not more than 10*l.*, nor less than 20*s.*; and in the event of the wilful absence of any person when summoned, it shall be lawful for the registrar to proceed to decide any such question, as though such party had attended.

Clause 10. Registry to be deposited in the secretary's office.

And be it further enacted, that during the continuance of the aforesaid apprenticeship, such slave registry shall be deposited in the secretary's office of this Island; and when any question shall arise respecting the class to which any apprenticed labourer belongs, the original return, corrected and certified as above directed, or a certified copy or extract from such registry, shall be taken as conclusive evidence of the fact; and for every copy of, or extract from any such return, the secretary shall be paid a fee of 3*s.* 1½*d.*, if such copy or extract shall contain the names, ages and classes of 100 or more slaves or apprenticed labourers; and a fee of 1*s.* 6¾*d.* for any number under 100: provided nevertheless, and be it also enacted, that it shall and may be lawful for any apprenticed labourer to appeal from any such decision of the registrar to the special justice of the peace of the district in which such apprenticed labourer shall reside, who is hereby authorized to hear and determine any such appeal, and to summon all necessary parties and witnesses before him for that purpose; and in case such special justice shall decide that such apprenticed labourers ought to belong to any other class than the one in which he or she shall have been registered, it shall be lawful for the secretary of the Island, and he is hereby required to make such alteration in the said registry as shall correspond with the decision of such special justice, anything hereinbefore contained to the contrary notwithstanding.

Appeal allowed an apprenticed labourer to a special justice, from the decision of the registrar.

Clause 11. Remuneration of 200*l.* current money to be paid the registrar.

And be it further enacted, that the registrar of slaves shall be paid the sum of 200*l.*, current money of this Island, out of the public treasury, for the performance of the duties required of him by this Act.

Clause 12. Domestics, for certain offences, may be put to the work of prædial labourers, and dealt with as such.

Provided nevertheless, and be it further enacted, that in case any non-prædial apprenticed labourer shall be convicted before a special justice of the peace, on the complaint of his or her master, mistress or employer, of habitual drunkenness, stealing, committing or attempting to commit any serious injury to the person or property of his or her master or mistress, or other gross misdemeanor, such special justice, with the consent of such master or mistress, shall remove such non-prædial apprenticed labourer into the class of prædial apprenticed labourers, and such non-prædial apprenticed labourer shall upon such removal be subject and liable to all the rules and regulations to which a prædial apprenticed labourer is or shall be subject.

Clause 13. Apprenticeship of prædial labourers not to continue beyond the 1st August 1840.

And be it further enacted, that no person who by virtue of this Act shall become a prædial apprenticed labourer, whether attached or not attached to the soil, shall continue in such apprenticeship beyond the 1st day of August 1840; and that during such his or her apprenticeship, no such prædial apprenticed labourer, whether attached or not attached to the soil, shall be bound or liable by virtue of such apprenticeship to perform any labour in the service or for the benefit of the person or persons entitled to his or her services, for more than 45 hours in the whole in any one week, unless he or she shall enter into some contract for that purpose, except as is hereinafter excepted; and that such 45 hours' labour shall be performed between the Monday morning and Friday evening of every week, leaving Saturday and Sunday at the disposal of such prædial labourer: provided always, and be it further enacted, that in all such cases where such prædial apprenticed labourers are under the age of 12 years, then and in such cases such prædial apprenticed labourers shall perform such their 45 hours' labour between the Monday morning and Saturday evening of each week.

And not to perform more than 45 hours' work per week, between Monday and Friday. But those under 12 years of age to perform the 45 hours between Monday and Saturday.

Clause 14. Prædial labourers, whilst employed as watchmen or cattle-keepers, to receive wages for extra time.

And be it further enacted, that nothing herein contained shall extend, or be construed to extend to any prædial apprenticed labourer who may be employed in the protection of any crops, buildings, or property of any kind, or in care of cattle or any other stock, but that all such prædial apprenticed labourers during the time of such their employment shall be compelled to perform their several services for the whole week, and shall be entitled to such wages or remuneration for such extra services as shall be agreed on by and between any such prædial apprenticed labourer and his or her employer or employers; and in case of any disagreement, then to such wages or remuneration as shall be sanctioned by the special justice of the peace for the district to which such prædial apprenticed labourer shall belong.

Clause 15. In cases of necessity, prædial labourers to be compelled to perform services during their own time, but to be remunerated for the same.

And be it further enacted, that in all cases of urgent necessity it shall be lawful for the owner, or other person in management of any property, where such necessity shall occur, to require and compel the immediate and continued service of all or any of the apprenticed labourers attached to such property during such emergency; and any apprenticed labourer who may refuse when called on to perform any such services, shall be liable to all such penalties as he would be liable to for the undue performance or neglect of work during any time his or her employer may be entitled to his or her services: provided nevertheless, that such apprenticed labourers be remunerated by a portion of time equivalent to the number of hours so employed, or by pecuniary payment according to the current price of labour.

Clause 16. Apprenticeship of non-prædials not to continue beyond the 1st August 1838.

And be it further enacted, that no person who by virtue of this Act shall become a non-prædial apprenticed labourer, shall continue in such apprenticeship beyond the 1st day of August 1838.

Clause 17. Apprentices may be discharged by voluntary act of employer.

And be it further enacted, that if before any such apprenticeship shall have expired, the person or persons entitled for and during the remainder of any such term to the services of such apprenticed labourer, shall be desirous to discharge him or her from such apprenticeship, it shall be lawful for such person or persons so to do by his or her last will and testament, to be executed in such manner as is required by the law of this Island to pass lands of inheritance, or by any deed to be made by him, her or them, in the manner and form following:

Form of the discharge.

"Barbadoes:—I (A. B., of the parish of) do hereby discharge (C. D., of the district of) my prædial apprenticed labourer, attached to the soil (or, as the case may be), from all further services to me and my heirs. Witness my hand and seal this day of 183 ."

Which deed shall be signed, sealed and delivered by the person or persons discharging such apprentice, in the presence of one or more credible witness or witnesses, in duplicate, one part whereof shall be filed in the office of the special justice of the district within one month from the execution thereof, and the other part delivered to the apprentice discharged: provided nevertheless, that if any person so discharged from any such apprenticeship by any such voluntary act as aforesaid shall at that time be of the age of 50 years or upwards, or shall then be labouring under any such disease, or mental or bodily infirmity as may render him or her incapable of earning his or her subsistence, then and in every such case the person or persons so discharging any such apprenticed labourer as aforesaid shall continue and be liable to provide for the support and maintenance of such apprenticed labourer during the remaining term of such original apprenticeship as fully as if such apprenticed labourer had not been discharged therefrom; unless such discharge in the case of an apprenticed labourer above the age of 50 years, and not labouring under any such disease, or mental or bodily infirmity, be with the voluntary consent of such apprenticed labourer, declared in the presence of the special justice of the district.

If of the age of 50 years, or being infirm, employer liable for their support, unless discharged with consent of special justice.

Clause 18. Apprenticed labourers may purchase their discharge, and apply to justices to proceed thereon.

And be it further enacted, that when any apprentice under this Act shall be able and willing to purchase his or her discharge, and the person entitled to the services of such apprentice shall refuse or be unwilling to sell such discharge, such apprentice shall be at liberty to apply to the nearest magistrate, to be appointed by special commission, who shall thereupon give notice to the person entitled to the services of such apprentice, or his or their representative or agent, and such last-mentioned person shall thereupon appoint a justice of the peace of the precinct in which the apprentice shall reside, who shall and he is hereby required to associate himself with such special justice of the peace, and the said two justices shall also associate with them one other justice of the peace, who is also hereby required to associate himself as aforesaid; and in case the said special justice and general justice of the peace cannot agree on the third justice so to be called in, then the chief judge for the said precinct shall name and appoint such third justice; provided, that in case such chief judge shall have any interest in the question, the next assistant judge in seniority shall appoint such third justice.

Clause 19. Manner of proceeding by justices in fixing the value of apprenticeship.

And be it further enacted, that the said three justices shall meet at such place as the justices themselves shall appoint, and shall proceed to fix a value upon such apprentice, which valuation shall be binding and conclusive on all parties, and upon the amount of such valuation being paid to the person entitled to receive the same, or to the treasurer as hereafter mentioned, such apprentice shall be absolutely discharged from the remainder of the term of apprenticeship, and the three justices shall grant a certificate under their hands in the form following:

Form of justices' discharge to an apprentice.

"We do certify and declare that A. B., the apprentice of C. D., of the parish of , hath this day been discharged and released from the remainder of the term of his [or her] apprenticeship. Given under our hands this day of ."

Provided that notice of the time and place of meeting shall be given to the person entitled to the services of such apprentice, or to his legal representative, or left at his or her usual place of residence, at least 14 days before such meeting; and that the said justices shall and may issue their summons to any witness of whose materiality they shall be satisfied either on the part of the apprentice or the person entitled to his or her services, and shall examine such witness on oath, touching the value of the services of such apprentice; and in case any person so summoned to attend shall refuse or neglect to attend, the said three justices shall and they are hereby empowered and required to issue their warrant, authorizing ing any lawful constable to apprehend and bring any such person so summoned before them, in order that he or she may be examined in the premises.

Clause 20. Should claims be made on the appraised value, the money to be paid to the treasurer of the Island, until the rights of parties are settled.

And be it further enacted, that in case any person shall by virtue of any estate tail or limitation, or remainder, or any security, claim any right to the services of the said apprentice for the remainder of the term of his apprenticeship, expectant upon the death of the person then entitled to his or her services, or by virtue of such security, and shall by reason thereof claim a right to participate in the amount paid for the discharge of such apprentice, the said three justices shall direct such amount to be paid to the treasurer of this Island, until the rights of the parties are ascertained and decided as hereinafter mentioned, and such sum shall bear interest at 6*l.* per cent. until again paid out, and shall in the meantime be used as the public funds of the Island.

Clause 21. Governor and council to settle such rights.

And be it further enacted, that any party claiming to be entitled to the sum so paid to the treasurer, shall be at liberty to apply, by summary petition or special motion, to the Governor and Council, who shall, upon hearing the matter, adjudge and determine how and to whom such sum of money shall be paid and applied, and the treasurer shall thereupon, unless such decision shall be appealed from, pay such amount as the Governor and Council shall by their order direct.

Clause 22. How to proceed, should employer refuse to name a justice to fix the value of the apprenticeship.

And be it further enacted, that in case the person entitled to the service of any apprentice so applying to be discharged, shall refuse or neglect to appoint a justice, such special justice shall associate with him a general justice of the peace, and such two justices shall thereupon proceed in manner hereinbefore directed, and with the same powers as hereinbefore enacted respecting the said three justices.

Clause 23. Apprentices convicted of theft, to be stayed for a given time from purchasing their discharge.

Provided also, and be it further enacted, that if before any order shall be made by the said justices, or any such appraisement so to be made as aforesaid, it shall be alleged before the said justices that such apprenticed labourer purposed to be discharged, hath at any time during his or her apprenticeship been convicted in a due course of law of any robbery or theft, or in case such apprenticed labourer shall be charged before any justice of the peace, or any criminal court, with having committed any theft or robbery, the said justices shall inquire into the truth of such allegation, and if it shall be made to appear to them by good and sufficient evidence upon oath, that such apprenticed labourer hath during such his or her apprenticeship been so convicted of any robbery or theft, the said justices shall and they are hereby required not to make any order on such appraisement, and thereupon the same and all other proceedings for the discharge of any such apprenticed labourer shall be stayed until the expiration of three years of the term of his or her apprenticeship from the time of the conviction of such apprenticed labourer of any such theft or robbery: and if such apprenticed labourer shall be under such charge before such justice or court, such justices shall suspend further proceeding on such appraisement, until such apprenticed labourer shall be convicted or acquitted of any such charge, and if convicted the aforesaid proceedings shall be stayed for the period last aforesaid.

Clause 24. Apprentices not removable from the Island.

And be it further enacted, that no apprenticed labourer shall be subject or liable to be removed from this Island, and that no prædial apprenticed labourer who may, in manner aforesaid, become attached to the soil, shall be subject or liable to perform labour in the service of his or her employer or employers, except upon or in or about the works and business of the plantations or estates to which such prædial apprenticed labourer shall have been attached, or on which he or she shall have been usually employed on or previously to the said 1st day of August 1834: provided nevertheless, that with the consent in writing of any two or more justices of the peace holding such special commission as hereinafter mentioned, it shall be lawful for the person or persons entitled to the services of any such attached prædial apprenticed labourer or labourers, to transfer his, her or their services to any other estate or plantation in this Island to such person or persons belonging, which written consent shall in no case be given, or be of any validity, unless such justices of the peace shall first have ascertained that such transfer would not have the effect of separating any such attached prædial apprenticed labourer from his or her wife or husband, parent or child, provided the child be under the age of 18 years, or from any person or persons reputed to bear any such relation to him or her, and that such transfer would not probably be injurious to the health or welfare of such attached prædial apprenticed labourer; and such consent shall be in the form annexed, marked (A.); and every such consent shall be recorded in a book by the special justice into whose district such prædial apprenticed labourer as aforesaid shall be removed, or should such removal be in the same district, then by the special justice of such district: provided nevertheless, that nothing herein contained shall hinder or prevent the temporary employment of any such prædial apprenticed labourer, attached to the soil on any other estate or plantation belonging to the person or persons entitled to the services of such prædial apprenticed labourer, nor the hiring out of any surplus labour, for the cultivation of any neighbouring lands or manufacture of any sugar or other produce thereon, provided that such prædial apprenticed labourer shall be allowed sufficient time for going to and returning from such other estate or plantation, or such neighbouring lands, to be deducted out of the portion of time during which such person or persons shall be entitled to the services of such prædial labourer; provided also, that nothing herein contained shall prevent or be construed to prevent the employment of any prædial apprenticed labourer in repairing any of the roads, highways or streets where any assessments of labour shall be made for that purpose, such labour to be deducted out of the 45 hours' labour to which their employers are entitled.

Prædials to be employed on the plantations to which they may be attached prior to 1 Aug. 1834.

May be removed from one plantation to another belonging to same proprietor, but so as not to separate families, or children of 18 years from their parents.

Proviso for temporary employment, or the hiring out of apprentices on other properties.

Prædials may be employed in repairing roads.

Clause 25. Services of apprentices may be transferred, but so as not to separate families.

And be it further enacted, that the right or interest of any person or persons to and in the service of any such apprenticed labourers as aforesaid, shall pass and be transferred by bargain and sale, contract, deed, conveyance, will or descent, in the same manner as lands of inheritance, and be subject to the same rules of law as are required to pass lands of inheritance, and by none other, notwithstanding the abridged duration of such property; provided that no such apprenticed labourer shall, by virtue of any such bargain and sale, contract, deed, conveyance, will or descent, be subject or liable to be separated from his or her wife or husband or parent or child, or from any person or persons reputed to bear any such relation to him or her.

Clause 26. Prædials to pass along with plantations sold in Chancery.

And be it further enacted, that in all cases where any plantations or lands shall be sold under any decree of the Court of Chancery in this Island, the right and interest of the mortgagee, seller or debtor of, in or to the services of all prædial apprenticed labourers attached to the soil of such plantations or lands, shall be transferred and go along with such plantations and lands; and the purchasers of such plantations or lands shall be entitled to the services of such prædial apprenticed labourers so attached to the soil of such plantations or lands, and be liable to the duties hereinbefore required by this Act from persons entitled to such services.

Clause 27. Clothing and food to be supplied to apprenticed labourers by their employers.

And be it further enacted, that during the continuance of any such apprenticeship as aforesaid, the person or persons for the time being entitled to the services of every such apprenticed labourer, shall be and is and are hereby required to supply or cause to be supplied to him or her, such food, clothing, lodging, medicine and medical attendance as hereinafter mentioned; that is to say, each and every such apprenticed labourer above the age of 16 years shall receive in each week not less than 30 pounds of plantains, potatoes, yams or eddoes, or 10 pints of Guinea or Indian corn, and a pound of cod fish or herrings, shads or other pickled fish, or other salted provisions equal thereto; and every such apprenticed labourer, from the age of 12 years to the age of 16 years, shall receive two-thirds of the above allowances of food; and every such apprenticed labourer, from the age of six to the age of 12, shall receive the one-half of the first-mentioned allowances of food; and children under six years of age, being apprenticed labourers, shall be provided with proper and sufficient food for their support: provided nevertheless, that the person or persons entitled to the services of any such apprenticed labourer, or any person or persons acting in his or her behalf, who may be unable or unwilling to procure such provisions as hereinbefore mentioned, may, with the authority in writing of the special justice of the peace of the district in which such apprenticed labourer or labourers is or are resident, substitute for the same, or any part or parts thereof, any other kind of provisions, or any money-payment or allowance of time for such apprenticed labourer or labourers, to work for his, her or their own benefit and advantage, as shall, in the judgment of such special justice, be equivalent to the allowances hereinbefore prescribed; and all provisions so to be delivered and supplied to the apprenticed labourers, shall be sound and fit for consumption, and of good average merchantable quality; and the same shall be delivered and supplied to such apprenticed labourer once or oftener in each week, on any other day than Saturday or Sunday; and if any such person or persons as aforesaid, subject and liable so to do, shall not deliver or supply to such apprenticed labourer provisions of such amount and quality, and at such times as he, she or they is or are hereinbefore required to deliver and supply the same, such person or persons shall incur and become liable to a penalty (provided complaint thereof be made within 14 days,) equal to twice the value of the provisions which ought so to have been supplied for the use and benefit of such apprenticed labourer injured by such omission or neglect, unless it can be proved that the same cannot be purchased in any of the towns or markets of this Island; provided that, if, before any complaint shall be lodged by any such apprenticed labourer, the person or persons so omitting or neglecting to deliver or supply such provisions, shall have actually delivered and supplied or tendered all arrears of provisions to such apprenticed labourer, then and in such case such person or persons shall be released and discharged from all such penalty or penalties: provided nevertheless, that in time of scarcity the Governor, by and with the advice of the Council, may from time to time by proclamation, to be by him for that purpose issued, authorize the substitution of any other provisions or allowances which can be procured in lieu of the aforesaid allowances: provided always nevertheless, that whilst apprenticed labourers shall be imprisoned in any house of correction or public prison of this Island, the employer or employers of such apprenticed labourers shall not be bound to provide them with any allowance of food, or money to purchase food, but that they shall be fed at the public expense; and in all such cases where a weekly payment shall be agreed on as aforesaid, then such weekly money-payment or wages shall be recovered before the special justice of the district where such apprenticed labourer shall reside.

Substitution of other food, or of money, or time, permitted.

Penalty on employers for any default.

In time of scarcity, the Governor may, by proclamation, substitute other provisions or rations.

Clause 28. Employers may appropriate land for the maintenance of their prædials, under certain regulations.

Provided always, and be it further enacted, that if any person or persons subject and liable to supply and deliver such food as aforesaid be willing to maintain any prædial apprenticed labourer or labourers by the appropriation of land, to be by such apprenticed labourer or labourers cultivated for that purpose, such person or persons shall be at liberty to do so under the following conditions, that is to say, for every prædial apprenticed labourer so to be maintained, and being of the age of 16 years and upwards, such person or persons shall be bound to set apart half an acre of land properly adapted for the growth of ground provisions or corn, and not more than a mile distant from the place of residence of such prædial apprenticed labourer; and in respect of every apprenticed labourer so to be maintained and being under the age of 16 years, every such person or persons as aforesaid shall be bound to set apart for the father or reputed father or mother of every such infant apprentice half the quantity quantity of like land; or if such infant shall have no parent to whose services such person or persons shall be entitled, then such land shall be set apart for any other prædial apprenticed labourer or other person who shall be willing to be charged with the cultivation thereof, for the benefit of such infant; and every such person or persons who shall be willing to maintain any prædial apprenticed labourer by the appropriation of land as aforesaid, shall within the first week of April in each and every year deliver, or cause to be delivered, to the special justice of the district in which such prædial apprenticed labourer shall reside, a written declaration in the form annexed, marked (B.), which written declaration shall be signed by the person or persons aforesaid, or in his, her or their name or names, by his, her or their constituted attorney or attornies in this Island, and recorded at the office of the special justice of the district aforesaid; and every such person or persons aforesaid shall, during the period to which such declaration shall apply, be bound to maintain such prædial apprenticed labourer in the manner thereby proposed, unless such special justice as aforesaid shall, by a written licence under his hand, authorize such person or persons within that period to change the mode of maintaining such his prædial apprenticed labourers; and it shall not be lawful for any person or persons aforesaid, or his, her or their creditor or creditors, or other person or persons claiming under him, her or them, to dispossess any such apprenticed labourer of any land so cultivated by him, her or them, until he, she or they shall have had full time and opportunity for reaping and gathering in all crops by him or her planted and growing upon such ground; and if such prædial apprenticed labourer shall, by a due course of law, be dispossessed of such land on which any crops are growing, then and in such case it shall and may be lawful for the special justice of the district in which such land lies to summon any five freeholders of the vicinity of the same to appraise the value of such crops growing on such land, who, and the said special justice, shall repair to the place where such land lies, and such special justice is hereby authorized to administer to such freeholders, or any three or more of them who shall be present, the following oath:

"You and each and every of you do swear, that, according to the best of your judgment, you will make a true, just and impartial appraisement of the value of the crop or crops of corn (or whatever other crop or crops shall be planted on such land,) growing on the land now shown to you. So help you, God."

And the appraisement so to be made shall be reduced to writing, and signed by the freeholders who shall make such appraisement, and the amount of such appraisement shall be paid to the apprenticed labourer from whom such crops shall have been taken, within 14 days from the date of such appraisement, by the person or persons who or in whose behalf such written declaration as aforesaid for the appropriation of land shall have been made and signed; and in default thereof the same shall be recoverable as servants' wages, on complaint before such special justice by such apprenticed labourer or labourers as aforesaid; and every prædial apprenticed labourer for or in respect of whom any land shall be so appropriated and set apart, shall in each year be allowed 26 days, exclusive of Saturdays, for the cultivation thereof, between the 1st day of April and the 1st day of December, and each of such 26 days shall be understood to consist of 24 hours, commencing at the hour of six in the morning, and terminating at the hour of six the next succeeding morning; and if any person or persons as aforesaid who shall undertake to maintain such prædial apprenticed labourer by the appropriation of land, shall not set apart for every apprenticed labourer who is maintained by the cultivation of land, such land of such quality and quantity, and so situate as hereinbefore required, or shall dispossess any such apprenticed labourer of any land by him or her cultivated, until such apprenticed labourer shall have had full time and opportunity for reaping and gathering in all crops by him or her planted and growing upon such land, every person so offending shall incur and be liable to a penalty equal to twice the amount of loss sustained by such apprenticed labourer, by every such act, omission or neglect, which penalty shall be ascertained by appraisement of freeholders, in manner hereinbefore required in cases of dispossession by due course of law, and the same shall be recovered on complaint before such special justice as aforesaid, for the use and benefit of the apprenticed labourer so injured, and every such freeholder who shall have received five days' notice in writing for that purpose, shall omit, neglect or refuse, to attend at the time and place stated in such notice or summons, a copy of which shall be served on him, shall pay a fine of 25 s., unless such cause as would excuse or exempt such freeholder from attending as a juror in any of the courts of common pleas in this Island shall be shown by such absent freeholder within 14 days from the date of such non-attendance, or by some person on his behalf, to such special justice, and execution shall be signed at the expiration of 14 days by such special justice for the amount of such fine, and such execution shall be lodged with the provost-marshal of the Island, to be proceeded on by him as in cases of execution against jurors for not attending at any court of common pleas, and the amount thereof paid into the public treasury.

Twenty-six days to be allowed in each year for cultivating such land.

Provided always, and be it further enacted, that all persons who by the laws of this Island are exempted from serving as jurors in the respective courts of common pleas of this Island, shall also be, and they are hereby declared to be exempted from serving as freeholders for any of the purposes whatsoever in and by this Act prescribed with respect to freeholders.

Clause 29. Exemption of freeholders.

And whereas the slaves of this Island have been permitted by their owners to keep hogs, goats, sheep and feathered stock, and the markets of this Island are supplied to great extent with butchers' meat, and almost exclusively with poultry so raised: and whereas it frequently happens that such slaves suffer their stock to stray about the lands belonging to their owners, and

and destroy or injure the crops growing thereon, and it has been thought necessary to make a law authorizing the destruction of the stock belonging to slaves so straying: and whereas it becomes necessary to provide against the damage which the owners of lands may be subject to from the stock of apprenticed labourers; be it therefore enacted, that if the owners of any plantations or lands shall suffer their apprenticed labourers to keep any cattle, hogs, goats, sheep or feathered stock, and which shall be found trespassing on such plantations or lands, it shall and may be lawful for the owners of such plantations or lands, or their representatives, to cause every such hog, or such feathered stock, either to be killed or impounded on such plantations or lands, and to cause such cattle, goat or sheep, that shall be so found trespassing, to be impounded on such plantation or land; and for every one of such cattle, hog, goat, or sheep so impounded, the owner of such plantation or land shall be entitled to a quarter dollar, and for every head of feathered stock, 5 d., which, if not paid in seven days, the owner, or his manager or representative, may sell such cattle, hog, goat, sheep or feathered stock, and after deducting the sum or sums aforesaid, and the expense of feeding such cattle, hog, goat, sheep or feathered stock, such owner, or his manager or representative, shall pay the overplus to the apprenticed labourers to whom the cattle, hogs, goats, sheep or feathered stock, so impounded and sold, shall belong; or the owners of such plantations or lands which shall be so trespassed upon, or his or her manager or representative, may lodge a complaint with the special justice of the district, who is hereby required to issue a summons to three of the neighbouring freeholders to the land trespassed on, directing them to appraise such damage done by any such cattle, hogs, goats, sheep or feathered stock, which freeholders are hereby required to attend and appraise such damage accordingly, and return such appraisement to the said special justice, under the penalty of 25 s. for every neglect by any such freeholder without reasonable cause, to be allowed by the said justice, to be recovered and paid into the public treasury, in the manner hereinbefore prescribed, in case of default made by freeholders; and if the apprenticed labourer to whom any such cattle, hog, goat, sheep or feathered stock shall belong, shall not within seven days pay the amount of such damage, the special justice is hereby authorized to direct any police officer or constable to sell and dispose of the stock so impounded, and after payment of the amount of damage so appraised to pay the overplus to the apprenticed labourer, and if the damage shall exceed the value of the stock so impounded and sold, the special justice shall adjudge such apprenticed labourer to make good the difference out of his or her extra labour.

Or damage may be assessed and recovered.

Clothing to prædials in each year.

And be it further enacted, that it shall be the duty of every person or persons entitled to the services of such apprenticed labourers, and they are hereby required to deliver to every apprenticed labourer, not being a domestic, for his or her use, between the 1st day of March and the 1st day of June in each and every year, the following articles; that is to say, to every male apprenticed labourer one worsted or Kilmarnock cap, one woollen or Pennistone jacket, one Oznaburg shirt, and one pair of Oznaburg trousers; to every female apprenticed labourer one worsted or Kilmarnock cap or one printed cotton handkerchief, one woollen or Pennistone jacket, and one Oznaburg petticoat, and one Oznaburg or check shift: provided nevertheless, that for all non-prædial apprenticed labourers who may be domestics, the person or persons entitled to his, her or their services shall be at full liberty to provide any other fit and sufficient clothing he, she or they shall think proper: provided always, that with the consent and authority in writing of the special justice of the district, in which any such prædial apprenticed labourers are resident, the person or persons entitled to their services, or any person acting in his or her behalf, may, and he, she and they are and is hereby authorized to substitute, for the articles hereinbefore enumerated, any other articles of clothing which shall in the judgment of such special justice be equivalent to the articles hereinbefore enumerated, directed and prescribed; and all the articles hereinbefore enumerated, and so to be supplied to such apprenticed labourers as aforesaid, or substituted in manner aforesaid, shall be of good average merchantable quality; and if any person or persons subject and liable to provide any such enumerated articles as aforesaid shall neglect or omit, within the time or times hereinbefore for that purpose limited, to supply and deliver to and for the use of any such apprenticed labourers aforesaid, such articles of clothing as are hereinbefore enumerated, the person or persons so offending shall incur and become liable to a fine equal to twice the value of the article or articles withholden, for the use and benefit of the apprenticed labourer injured by such neglect.

Domestics to be furnished with such clothing as employers may think more suitable.

Other articles of clothing may be substituted.

Penalty of double the value of clothing not supplied.

Clause 32.
Employers may allow their prædial labourers a day in every fortnight, in lieu of fish and clothing.

And whereas it may be mutually beneficial to employers and their apprenticed labourers, that a substitution of time shall be allowed to such apprenticed labourers in lieu of the fish and clothing to which they are hereinbefore entitled; be it therefore enacted, that in every case where any master, mistress or employer shall prefer to give time in lieu of fish and clothing to any of his or her apprenticed labourers, being above the age of 12 years, he or she shall be at liberty so to do, by and with the consent of the special justice of the district, provided that such master, mistress or employer shall give and allow to such apprenticed labourer one day in every fortnight to enable such apprenticed labourers out of the earnings of his or her labour to supply himself or herself with fish and clothing; and the master, mistress or employer, with such consent as aforesaid, shall within the first week in April in each and every year, deliver or cause to be delivered to the special justice of the district in which he or she may reside, a written declaration in the form annexed, marked (C.), which written declaration shall be signed by such master, mistress or employer, or in his or her name by his or her constituted attorney or attornies in this Island, and recorded at the office of the special justice of the district last aforesaid; and every such master, mistress or employer shall, during the period to which such declaration shall apply, be bound to allow such apprenticed apprenticed labourer such day in every fortnight, exclusive of Saturday, Christmas-day and Good Friday, or forfeit and pay to such apprenticed labourer the sum of 2*s.* 6*d.* for each day withheld.

Clause 33. Apprentices to be allowed to attend Divine worship.

And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, that it shall and may be lawful for every apprenticed labourer, and every apprenticed labourer is hereby authorized, at his or her free will and pleasure, on each and every Sunday throughout the year, and on Good Friday and Christmas-day, to attend at the celebration of Divine worship in any church or chapel whatsoever; provided nevertheless, that every apprenticed labourer whose services for the protection of property, or tending of cattle, or for the performance of any domestic duties, shall be rendered necessary on Sunday, shall be subject to such regulations respecting the times which shall be allowed to such apprenticed labourer for the attendance on Divine worship as the employer of every such apprenticed labourer shall make for that purpose; provided nevertheless, that no apprenticed labourer shall be prevented by any such regulation from attending once at some place of worship on the Sabbath-day, and on Christmas-day and Good Friday.

Clause 34. Proprietors of 40 or more apprentices to engage a medical practitioner, to visit them at least once a week; and in every other case when necessary.

And be it further enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that the proprietor or proprietors of any estate in which there shall be 40 apprenticed labourers and upwards, shall, and he, she or they are and is hereby required to engage a medical practitioner to visit such apprenticed labourers in such his medical capacity, not less than once in every week; and during the illness or indisposition of such apprenticed labourer, his or her usual allowances, in a dressed state, or some other appropriate diet, shall be provided for him or her; and every other person entitled to the services of any apprenticed labourer shall be and is hereby required to provide medical assistance for every such apprenticed labourer when necessary; provided always nevertheless, that no apprenticed labourer shall be compelled or permitted to quit the hospital or sick-house without the permission of the medical practitioner of the plantation or estate to which he or she shall belong, and it shall and may be lawful to keep the doors of such hospital or sick-house locked, to prevent apprenticed labourers from disobeying the orders of such medical practitioner.

Clause 35. Penalty for not providing medical attendance for apprentices.

And be it further enacted, that if any proprietor or proprietors as aforesaid, or any other person or persons entitled to the services of any apprenticed labourer or labourers, shall refuse or neglect or omit to provide such medical attendance as hereinbefore mentioned, and such medicines as shall be required, the person so offending shall for and in respect of every such offence incur and become liable to a fine of not less than 5*l.*, or more than 15*l.*, to be recovered before the special justice of the district in which such apprenticed labourer shall reside; one half of which fine shall go to the informer, and the other half shall be paid into the public treasury of the Island.

Clause 36. Place of nightly lodging to be provided for apprentices.

And be it further enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that every person entitled to the services of any apprenticed labourer shall furnish such apprenticed labourer nightly with a wholesome place of lodging; and if such apprenticed labourer be a prædial apprenticed labourer, attached to the soil, such place of lodging shall be provided on the plantation or estate to which he or she shall be attached, under a penalty in default thereof for each and every omission of not less than 2*s.* 6*d.* or more than 5*s.*, for the use of such apprenticed labourer in respect of whom such default shall be made, to be recovered before the special justice of the district to which such apprenticed labourer shall belong; provided that complaint be made within seven days after the default.

Clause 37. Slavery to cease on the 1st August 1834.

And be it further enacted, that, subject to the obligations imposed by this Act upon apprenticed labourers as aforesaid, all and every the persons who on the 1st day of August 1834 shall be holden in slavery within this Island, shall, upon and from and after the said 1st day of August 1834, become and be to all intents and purposes free and discharged of and from all manner of slavery, and shall be absolutely and for ever manumitted, and that the children thereafter to be born to any such persons, and the offspring of such children, shall in like manner be free from their birth; and that from and after the 1st day of August 1834, slavery shall be and is hereby utterly and for ever abolished and declared unlawful within this Island.

Clause 38. Children under six years of age may be apprenticed, if their parents cannot support them.

And whereas it may happen that children who have not attained the age of six years on the said 1st day of August 1834, or that children who after that day may be born to any female apprenticed labourers, may not be properly supported by their parents, and that no other person may be disposed voluntarily to undertake the support of such children, and it is necessary that provision should be made for the maintenance of such children in such contingency; be it therefore enacted, that if any child who on the said 1st day of August 1834 had not completed his or her sixth year, or if any child to which any female apprenticed labourer might give birth on or after the said 1st day of August 1834, shall be brought before any justice of the peace holding any such special commission as hereinafter mentioned; and if it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of such justice that any such child is unprovided with an adequate maintenance, and that such child hath not completed her or his age of 12 years, it shall be lawful for such justice, and he is hereby required on behalf of any such child, to execute an indenture of apprenticeship in the form annexed, marked (D.), thereby binding such child as an apprenticed labourer to the person or persons entitled to the services of the mother of such child, or who had been last entitled to the services of such mother; but in case it shall be made to appear to any such justice that any such person or persons as aforesaid is or are unable or unfit to enter into such indenture, and properly to perform the conditions thereof, then it shall be lawful for such justice, and he is hereby required by such indenture to bind any such child to any other person or persons to be by him for that purpose approved, and who may be willing and able properly to perform such conditions; and it shall by every such indenture of apprenticeship be declared whether such child shall thenceforward belong to the class of attached prædial apprenticed labourers, or to the class of unattached prædial apprenticed labourers, or to the class of non-prædial apprenticed labourers; and the term of such apprenticeship of any such child shall by such indenture be limited and made to continue in force until such child shall have completed his or her 21st year and no longer; and every child so apprenticed as aforesaid, by the order of any such justice of the peace as aforesaid, shall during his or her apprenticeship be subject to all such and the same rules and regulations respecting the work or labour to be by them done or performed, and respecting the food and other supplies to be by him or her furnished, as any other such apprenticed labourer as aforesaid: provided always, that the said indenture of apprenticeship shall contain sufficient words of obligation upon the employer to allow reasonable time and opportunity for the education and religious instruction of such child; and every indenture of apprenticeship executed by virtue of this enactment shall be recorded in the office of the special justice of the district where such apprenticed labourer shall belong: provided also, and be it further enacted, that if any child or children under the age of 12 years, whose parent or parents, or other person or persons, have undertaken to maintain such child or children, and who may have been allowed by the employer of his or her parent or parents, or of such other person or persons as aforesaid, to reside on the plantation or lands of such employer, shall have been detected three times in plundering or stealing from the lands or buildings of such employer any of the growing or other crops, or any other articles whatsoever, the same shall be evidence that such child or children is or are not properly supported by his or her parent or parents, or such other person or persons as have undertaken the maintenance of such child or children: provided also, that if the person or persons entitled to the services of the mother of any such child as aforesaid, or who shall have been last entitled to the services of such mother, shall not be possessed of lands, such person or persons shall not be compelled to accept and receive any such child as an apprenticed labourer, nor shall any such person or persons, although possessing lands, be compelled to accept and receive any such child as an apprenticed labourer, except such child be bound to such person or persons as a prædial apprenticed labourer.

Indenture to provide that time and opportunity be allowed for education and religious instruction.

Persons not possessing lands shall not be compelled to take an apprentice.

Persons only compelled to take prædial attached apprentices.

Clause 39. Regulations for the government of apprenticed labourers.

Island to be divided into districts.

And whereas it is necessary that various rules and regulations shall be framed and established for the government and protection of such apprenticed labourers; be it therefore enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that for the purposes of this Act the Island of Barbadoes shall be and the same is hereby declared to be divided into judicial districts, in the manner that shall be hereafter determined by the Governor and Council, by an Order in Council, to be made and published for that purpose.

Clause 40. One or more special justice to reside in each district.

And be it further enacted, that one or more special justice of the peace, to be nominated as hereinafter mentioned, shall be appointed to each of the said districts, who shall reside within the district to which he or they shall be appointed, unless when prevented by sickness or other reasonable cause, to be allowed by the Governor.

Clause 41. Special justices to be accessible at all seasonable hours, and to keep an office.

And be it further enacted, that every such special justice of the peace shall be accessible at all seasonable hours to receive complaints; and every such special justice of the peace shall keep an office open for the receiving, hearing and determining all such complaints and cases as are cognizable by him from 10 o'clock in the morning until four o'clock in the afternoon in every day in the week (except Sunday) if necessary.

Clause 42. Special justices to repair to plantations, when required.

Provided three or more apprenticed labourers be implicated in the charge.

And be it further enacted, that every such special justice who shall be called on and applied to by the proprietor or manager of any plantation for that purpose, shall repair to such plantation, being within his district, there to take cognizance of such case or cases as shall be brought before him: provided nevertheless, that such special justice shall not be compelled to repair to any such plantation, or attend any such call or application, unless three or more apprenticed labourers shall be implicated in the charge or accusation preferred against them by the proprietor or manager of such plantation, and unless such charge shall be of a serious nature, and made or supported on oath before such special justice by any such proprietor or manager, or some credible witness or witnesses.

And be it further enacted, that every such special justice of the peace shall keep a journal of all the cases brought before him, in which he shall enter, 1stly, the date of the complaint; 2dly, the name of the complainant; 3dly, the substance of the complaint; 4thly, the names of the witnesses adduced on either side; 5thly, the substance of the evidence; 6thly, his decision on the case; 7thly, whether the decision has been carried into effect; 8thly, any general remarks which he may think desirable; and all such journals shall be kept in one uniform manner, to be prescribed for that purpose by the Governor and Council.

Clause 44. Duplicate of journals to be transmitted to the Governor and Council quarterly.

And be it further enacted, that at the end of each quarter every special justice of the peace shall transmit to the Governor and Council a duplicate of his journal for the preceding quarter, with an affidavit thereof annexed, to the effect that it has been faithfully kept, and that with the exception of unintentional errors it contains a true account of all the proceedings in which the deponent has been engaged as such special justice during the quarter to which it refers; and until the Governor and Council shall have actually received the duplicate cate journal so verified, such special justice shall not be entitled to receive his salary for that quarter.

Clause 45. Complaints to be reduced to writing by the special justices.

And be it further enacted, that on receiving any complaint it shall be the duty of the special justice to reduce it to writing, and to cause it to be read by, or to read it over to the complainant, by whom it shall be then subscribed; and if the complaint shall appear to such justice immaterial, and not to deserve further inquiry, he may at once dismiss the complaint; but if he shall think inquiry necessary, he shall call upon the complainant to make oath that the complaint is true according to his information, if the person making the complaint be not a witness himself; after which the said special justice shall either issue his warrant for the arrest of the party charged, or shall issue a summons for his attendance, as the case may require, which warrant of arrest shall be in the form annexed, marked (E.), and which summons is in the form annexed, marked (F.)

And they are to issue warrants of arrest or summons.

Clause 46. Warrant of arrest to be issued in capital or transportable offences.

And be it further enacted, that such warrant of arrest shall be issued in all cases in which the party is charged with a capital or transportable offence, in all cases where there is reason to apprehend that the party charged would endeavour to escape, and in all cases where there is reason to apprehend danger to the public peace from delay, and in all other cases such special justice shall proceed in the first instance by summons.

Clause 47. Summons of witnesses to be issued.

And be it further enacted, that in all cases in which it may be necessary to adduce witnesses in support of or in answer to any such complaint, the said special justices shall issue a summons for the attendance of witnesses in the annexed form, marked (G.)

Clause 48. Manner of proceeding on complaints.

And be it further enacted, that at the time and place appointed by any such warrant or summons for proceeding upon any such complaint, such special justice shall in the presence of all parties first read over the written complaint, and then take down in writing the answer of the party charged, and then proceed to examine on oath the party complaining and the witnesses, taking down in writing the deposition of each witness, which shall be read over to and signed by such witness.

Clause 49. May adjourn and commit party charged; or take bail.

And be it further enacted, that such special justice may from time to time adjourn any such proceedings for further inquiry, and if he has reason to apprehend that the party or parties charged will escape, may commit him, her or them to custody, pending such adjournment, or take bail for his, her or their appearance; and every such commitment or bail-bond shall be in the annexed forms marked (H.) and (I.)

Clause 50. Judgment to be in writing.

And be it further enacted, that at the close of such proceedings the said special justice shall pronounce his decision thereupon, which decision he shall reduce into writing, and subscribe with his hand, by which decision he shall, as law and reason may seem to him to require, either dismiss the complaint, or sanction any compromise between the parties he may think just, or convict the party or parties charged, or commit him, her or them to prison to take his, her or their trial for any felony or capital offence imputed to him, her or them.

Clause 51. When complaint be dismissed, the cause to be stated.

And be it further enacted, that if such complaint shall be dismissed, the said special justice shall in such his written decision state whether it was dismissed as being unproved, or as being frivolous, or as being vexatious and malicious.

Clause 52. Liabilities of apprentices for preferring vexatious complaints; and on employers for doing the like.

And be it further enacted, that if any complaint shall be dismissed as being vexatious and malicious, the said special justice may adjudge the complainant, if an apprenticed labourer, to work in the service of his or her employer or employers for any number of extra days; provided that the time of extra work in any one week shall not exceed nine hours, or to imprisonment with hard labour for any time not exceeding one month, or to solitary confinement not exceeding one week, or to whipping not exceeding 20 stripes if a male; and if the employer of any apprenticed labourer be the complainant, to a fine not exceeding 40 s., for the benefit of the party charged; which judgment shall be a bar to any suit, action or prosecution against such complainant for calumny, defamation, malicious prosecution or otherwise, in respect of such his or her complaint.

Clause 53. Form of conviction.

Of commitment.

Of execution.

And be it further enacted, that if the special justice by such his decision convict the party charged, or convict the complainant of preferring a vexatious and malicious complaint, such conviction shall be severally drawn up according to the forms annexed, marked (K.) and (L.); and if such special justice shall commit the party charged to take his trial for any imputed felony or capital offence, such commitment shall be drawn up in the form annexed, marked (M.), and upon any such conviction as aforesaid of any apprenticed labourer, such special justice shall issue a warrant for the execution thereof, which warrant shall be in the form annexed, marked (N.)

Clause 54. Process to be executed by police officer of district or other person.

And be it further enacted, that all summonses, warrants, commitments and other orders so to be issued by such special justice as aforesaid, shall be executed by the police officers of his district; provided nevertheless, that such special justice is hereby authorized, as occasion may require, to address the same to any other person or persons jointly with or instead of such officers of police as to him may seem requisite; and any summons, warrant, writ or order issued by any such special justice within his own district, may without any further authority be carried into execution in any part of this Island though beyond the limits of such district.

Clause 55. Mode of compelling the attendance of apprentices as witnesses.

And whereas, as well to discourage the bringing of frivolous, vexatious and malicious complaints, actions and prosecutions, as in some measure to indemnify the employers of apprenticed labourers for the loss of their services, and apprenticed labourers for the loss of their extra time where such apprenticed labourers shall be summoned as witnesses; be it enacted, that no summons for an apprenticed labourer shall be considered as duly executed, unless at the time of summoning such apprenticed labourer notice of summons be left with the proprietor of the plantation or estate to which such apprenticed labourer is attached, or on which he or she shall be employed, or with the person or persons entitled to the services of such apprenticed labourer, or with his or her manager or representative; and along with such notice, if the summons be at the suit, or on the prosecution or complaint of any other person than an apprenticed labourer, shall be left the sum of 1*s.* 6$\frac{3}{4}$d. in respect of every apprenticed labourer so summoned, for the use of the person or persons entitled to the services of the apprenticed labourer summoned; and in case such summons shall require the attendance of any such apprenticed labourer out of the district to which he or she belongs, then at the time of leaving such notice as aforesaid there shall be left the sum of 2*s.* 6*d.* for each and every such apprenticed labourer so summoned, for the use of the person or persons aforesaid; and in case such summons shall be for the attendance of any prædial apprenticed labourer as a witness on any day during which such apprenticed labourer shall be entitled to his or her own earnings, then such summons shall not be considered as duly executed, unless at the time of leaving such summons the person executing the same shall, if the attendance of such apprenticed labourer as a witness be required within the district to which he or she belongs, leave with or for the use of such apprenticed labourer the sum of 1*s.* 6$\frac{3}{4}$d.; and if the attendance of such apprenticed labourer be required by such summons out of such district, the sum of 2*s.* 6*d.* shall be left; and in case such summons shall require the attendance of such apprenticed labourer out of his or her district, at the suit or on the prosecution or complaint of any other apprenticed labourer, then there shall be left with such notice as aforesaid the sum of 1*s.* 6$\frac{3}{4}$d. for the use of the person or persons so entitled as aforesaid to the services of such summoned apprenticed labourer, or for the use of the apprenticed labourer summoned, in case he or she shall be summoned on any day to which he or she shall be entitled to the earnings of his or her labour, or otherwise such summons shall not be considered as duly executed: provided nevertheless, that nothing in this enactment contained shall extend or be construed to extend to any case where any person or persons whomsoever shall be summoned as a witness on the inquiry or trial of any felony or capital crime; and the officer who shall be entrusted with the execution of such summons shall make a return thereof, and the manner of executing the same, on oath before the special justice of the peace who shall have issued such summons, before any process shall issue against any person or persons for disobeying any such summons.

Clause 56. Penalty on witnesses for disobeying a summons;

And be it further enacted, that if any person shall be duly summoned by the authority of any such special justice of the peace, not being an apprenticed labourer, as a witness, and shall not appear in obedience to such summons, he or she shall incur a fine not exceeding the sum of 40*s.* current money of this Island, to be paid into the public treasury, to be adjudged by such special justice of the peace, unless it shall appear to such special justice at or within five days after the time specified in such summons for the appearance of such person as a witness, that the party summoned was prevented by illness or other reasonable cause, to be admitted by such special justice; and if such person be an apprenticed labourer, and unable to pay the fine, he or she shall be subject to confinement, with hard labour or solitary confinement for any time not exceeding a week, or to whipping, if a male, not exceeding 20 stripes; and if any person so summoned, and appearing in obedience to such summons, shall refuse to be sworn or examined, or to answer any question proposed to him or her by such special justice in relation to the matters pending before him, which question such person would be compelled to answer in any court of record, it shall be lawful for such special justice to commit such offender to prison in any place of confinement within the district of such special justice, or in the common gaol, there to remain in close custody until he or she shall submit to be sworn and examined, and to make such answer as aforesaid, and every such warrant of arrest or commitment shall be in the form annexed, marked (O.) or refusing to answer questions.

Clause 57. Forms of proceedings may be altered by the Governor and Council.

And be it further enacted, that if it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the Governor and Council that the forms of proceeding hereinbefore prescribed are needlessly burdensome upon the justices of the said districts, or that they impede or interfere with the prompt and effective execution of the law, the Governor, with the advice of his Council, shall and he is hereby authorized to suspend any of the preceding rules, or to adapt the same to the circumstances of the case, so as more effectually to promote the punctual, orderly and effective execution of the law, and for that purpose to issue a proclamation, which shall be transmitted for His Majesty's confirmation, and which until disallowed shall be in full force.

Clause 58. Penalty on apprenticed labourers absenting themselves.

And whereas it is necessary to provide penalties and punishments for the non-performance of their duties by apprenticed labourers towards their employers, be it therefore enacted, that every apprenticed labourer who shall absent himself or herself from his or her employer's service without the leave of his or her employer or employers, or of some other person acting in his, her or their behalf, unless taken suddenly ill during any extra time such apprenticed labourer may be entitled to and out of any plantation, estate or place to which he or she is attached, or on which he or she shall be employed, and of which illness the earliest notice shall be conveyed to his or her employer; or unless he or she shall report himself or herself sick or ill, and shall be actually in the hospital or sick-house on the plantation, estate or place to which he or she is attached, or unless he or she shall be compelled by any legal process to attend before any court or justice of the peace, such apprenticed labourer shall be compelled to serve his or her employer two extra hours for every hour he or she shall be absent without such leave or cause, or he or she shall be punished by confinement with hard labour, or solitary confinement not exceeding three days for the first offence, and for the second or any subsequent offence by any increase of the aforesaid punishments not exceeding a month's confinement with hard labour, or solitary confinement not exceeding one week, or if a male, by whipping not exceeding 20 stripes.

Clause 59. Apprentices to make good the loss of time.

And be it further enacted, that every apprenticed labourer shall make good out of his or her extra days to his or her employer the time that his or her employer shall have been deprived of his or her services by the sentence of any special justice of the peace or court.

Clause 60. Deserter.

And be it further enacted, that if any apprenticed labourer shall absent himself or herself without such leave or cause as aforesaid for more than nine hours in any one week, he or she, on conviction thereof before the special justice of the peace of the district to which he or she shall belong, shall be adjudged a deserter.

Clause 61. Vagabond.

And be it further enacted, that if any apprenticed labourer shall absent himself or herself without such leave or cause as aforesaid for two days during one week, he or she, on conviction thereof before the special justice of the peace of the district to which he or she shall belong, shall be adjudged a vagabond.

Clause 62. Runaway.

And be it further enacted, that if any apprenticed labourer shall absent himself or herself without such leave or cause as aforesaid for five days in any one week, he or she, on conviction thereof before the special justice of the peace of the district to which he or she shall belong, shall be adjudged a runaway.

Clause 63. Punishment of deserters, vagabonds or runaways.

And be it further enacted, that every apprenticed labourer adjuged a deserter shall be sentenced by such special justice as aforesaid to confinement with hard labour, or solitary confinement for any time not exceeding one week; every apprenticed labourer adjudged a vagabond shall be sentenced by such special justice as aforesaid to confinement with hard labour for any time not exceeding two weeks, or solitary confinement not exceeding 10 days, and to any number of stripes not exceeding 15, if a male; and every apprenticed labourer adjudged a runaway shall be sentenced by such special justice as aforesaid, to confinement with hard labour for any time not exceeding one month, or solitary confinement not exceeding 14 days, and to any number of stripes not exceeding 30, if a male: and in all cases of wilful absence, apprenticed labourers shall not be entitled to their allowances of food for the time they shall be absent from their employer's service.

Clause 64. Prolongation of apprenticeship for absence from employer's service.

Provided nevertheless, and be it further enacted, that if any apprenticed labourer shall during his or her apprenticeship wilfully absent himself or herself from the service of his or her employer, it shall and may be lawful for the special justice of the peace of the district to which such apprenticed labourer shall or may belong, and such special justice is hereby required and directed, on conviction of such apprenticed labourer, to adjudge him or her either to serve his or her employer after the expiration of his or her apprenticeship for so long a time as he or she shall have absented himself or herself from such service, or to make satisfaction to his or her employer for the loss sustained by such absence (except so far as he or she shall have made satisfaction for such absence, either out of such extra hours as aforesaid or otherwise); but nevertheless, so that such extra services or compensation shall not be compellable after the expiration of seven years next after the termination of the apprenticeship of such apprentice.

Not to exceed seven years.

Clause 65. Punishment of apprentices for performing work indolently, carelessly or negligently.

And be it further enacted, that if any apprenticed labourer shall be convicted of performing his or her work indolently, carelessly or negligently, he or she shall for the first offence be adjudged to labour in his or her employer's service for any number of extra days, or to confinement with hard labour, or solitary confinement not exceeding three days; for the second offence, he or she shall be adjudged to labour in his or her employer's service as aforesaid, or to confinement with hard labour or solitary confinement for any time not exceeding one week, or to whipping, not exceeding 12 stripes, if a male; for the third or any subsequent offence he or she shall be adjudged to labour in his or her employer's service as aforesaid, or to confinement with hard labour for any time not exceeding one fortnight, or solitary confinement not exceeding 10 days, or with whipping, not exceeding 20 stripes, if a male: provided nevertheless, that if there shall have been an interval of one month between the commission of the said offences, the offender shall only be liable to be punished as for a first offence; and if such apprenticed labourer be a watchman or a cattle-keeper, he shall be adjudged to make good any damage that the crops or cattle or property under his charge shall have received by his negligence or misconduct, or he shall be punished for the first offence by whipping, not exceeding 30 stripes, and for the second and every subsequent offence by confinement with hard labour, or solitary confinement not exceeding one month.

Clause 66. Punishment of apprentices for endangering or injuring property by the careless use of fire, or ill-using cattle, or exposing their employers' property to danger.

And be it further enacted, that if any apprenticed labourer by the careless use of fire shall injure or endanger the property of his or her employer or employers, or of any other person or persons, or shall wilfully or wantonly injure any growing crop, tree or other property of his or her employer or employers, or shall ill-use or injure any horse, mule, ass, cattle or other live stock of his or her employer or employers, or shall negligently or wilfully expose the property of his or her employer or employers to any damage or injury, such apprenticed labourer labourer shall for every such offence be adjudged, in the discretion of the special justice of the peace before whom he or she shall be convicted, either to extra labour in his or her employer's service for any number of extra days, or to confinement with hard labour for any time not exceeding one month, or solitary confinement not exceeding 10 days; and if a male to any number of stripes not exceeding 30, or to any two or more of such punishments: provided nevertheless, that this enactment shall not exempt any such apprenticed labourer from his or her liability to such actions or prosecutions as other persons of free condition may be subject and liable to, in respect of any such acts by him or her done or committed: provided nevertheless, that no such apprenticed labourer shall be liable to be sued or prosecuted both under this Act and under the general law.

Not exempt from the general law.

Clause 67. Punishment of apprentices for drunkenness, disobedience and other misconduct.

And be it further enacted, that if any apprenticed labourer shall be in a state of drunkenness, or shall be found fighting, quarrelling, using obscene language, cockfighting or gaming, or shall conduct himself or herself in an insolent or insubordinate manner towards his or her employer, or towards any person in the superintendence of his or her labour, or shall contumaciously disobey the lawful commands of his or her employer, or any person in the superintendence of his or her labour, he or she shall for every such offence be liable on conviction to imprisonment with hard labour for any time not exceeding one month, or solitary confinement not exceeding 14 days, or to whipping, not exceeding 20 stripes, if a male, or to any two or more of such punishments; and if any apprenticed labourer shall assault or strike his or her master, mistress or employer, or any person in the immediate superintendence of his or her labour, he or she shall on conviction thereof be liable to imprisonment with hard labour for any time not exceeding 12 months, or solitary confinement not exceeding three months, or to whipping, if a male, not exceeding 39 stripes: provided nevertheless, that this enactment shall not exempt any such apprenticed labourer from his or her liability to such actions or prosecutions as other persons of free condition may be subject and liable to, in respect of any such acts by him or her done or committed: provided nevertheless, that no such apprenticed labourer shall be liable to be sued or prosecuted both under this Act and under the general law.

Clause 68. Punishment for three or more apprentices combining together to resist the employer's commands.

And be it further enacted, that if any three or more apprenticed labourers shall agree together to make any resistance to the lawful commands of their employer or employers, or of any other person or persons acting under the authority of such employer or employers, they shall be deemed guilty of an unlawful conspiracy, and on conviction shall be sentenced to confinement with hard labour for any period not exceeding six months, or solitary confinement not exceeding six weeks, with whipping, not exceeding 39 stripes, if males; and any three or more apprenticed labourers who shall be engaged in a combined and open resistance to the lawful commands of their employer or employers, or other person or persons acting under the authority of such employer or employers, shall on conviction be adjudged to the punishments last aforesaid, or to any one of them: provided nevertheless, that any or either of the aforesaid punishments may, at the discretion of the special justice of the peace before whom such conviction shall take place, be commuted for labour, to be performed in the service of his or her employer or employers by such apprenticed labourers, or any or either of them, out of his or her extra hours, in the manner hereinbefore by this Act provided with respect to extra hours.

Clause 69. Apprentices not to be adjudged to work more than nine extra hours in a week in employer's service as a punishment.

And be it further enacted, that it shall not be lawful for any special justice of the peace to adjudge any apprenticed labourer to perform any extra work in his or her employer's service for more than nine hours in any one week; and that for every extra day that any apprenticed labourer shall be adjudged to labour for the benefit of his or her employer, such apprenticed labourer shall be bound to work nine hours in the service of his or her employer, and no longer.

Clause 70. Special justices only to have power to punish apprentices.

Females not to be punished by whipping.

Subject to the operation of the general law.

And be it further enacted, that nothing in this Act contained shall authorize or be construed to authorize any person or persons other than the justices of the peace holding any such special commissions as hereinafter mentioned, to punish any apprenticed labourer for any offence by him or her committed or alleged to have been committed, by the whipping, beating or imprisonment of his or her person, or by any other personal or other correction or punishment whatsoever, or by any addition to the hours of labour hereinbefore limited, nor to authorize any justices of the peace holding such special commission as aforesaid to punish any apprenticed labourer, being a female, for any offence by her committed, by whipping or beating her person: provided always, that nothing in this Act contained doth or shall exempt any apprenticed labourer from the operation of any law or police regulation, which is or shall be in force for the prevention or punishment of any offence, such law or police regulation being in force against and applicable to other persons of free condition.

Clause 71. Apprentices not to acquire an interest in any lands or dwellings which they may occupy during their apprenticeship.

And whereas many persons during their state of slavery, by the permission and sufferance of the proprietors of plantations, lands or houses, have occupied or may occupy divers parcels of land, and divers dwellings or buildings belonging to such proprietors, which said parcels of land and which said dwellings and buildings are the property of such proprietors: and whereas it is expedient to make provision in respect of any such lands, dwellings and buildings as may continue to be occupied, or of any other lands, dwellings or buildings which may be occupied by any person or persons during their state of apprenticeship; be it therefore enacted, that no apprenticed labourer shall be entitled to have or claim any interest whatsoever in or to any such lands, dwellings or buildings which he or she shall continue to occupy or shall occupy during his or her state of apprenticeship, by the permission and sufferance ance of his or her employer or employers; and all such lands, dwellings and buildings are hereby declared to belong to the owners or proprietors of the plantations or estates of which they form a part, or to the owners of the lands, dwellings or buildings by whose permission or sufferance any such lands, dwellings or buildings may have been occupied; and all and every such apprenticed labourer or labourers occupying such lands, dwellings or buildings, are hereby declared to be tenants at will, and removable at the pleasure of his, her or their landlord or landlords: provided nevertheless, and be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, that where any apprenticed labourer shall by the permission or sufferance of such landlord or landlords have planted any crop or crops on such lands, he or she shall be allowed a reasonable time, not exceeding six months, to reap the same for his or her benefit.

To be considered as tenants at will.

But allowed to reap their crops.

Clause 72.
Special justices to dispossess apprentices who refuse to deliver up lands or buildings to their employers.

And be it further enacted, that if any apprenticed labourer, being such tenant or occupant, shall refuse to quit and deliver up peaceable possession of any such lands, dwellings or buildings to his or her landlord or landlords, or to any person acting on his, her or their behalf, it shall be lawful for the special justice of the peace of the district where such lands, dwellings or buildings lie, and he is hereby required on the complaint of any landlord or landlords, or any person acting on his, her or their behalf, to dispossess such labourer from such land, dwellings or buildings, and to adjudge such apprenticed labourer to imprisonment with hard labour, or to solitary confinement, for any time not less than three days and not exceeding one week, or to labour in his, her or their employers' service for any number of extra days: provided nevertheless, that any employer requiring any such apprenticed labourer to quit any such dwelling or building shall at the same time provide some other place of lodging, as by this Act prescribed for such apprenticed labourer.

Employers to furnish other places of lodging.

Clause 73.
Apprentices refusing, after expiration of apprenticeship, to quit and deliver up the lands and buildings occupied by them, to be considered forcible detainers.

And be it further enacted, that if after the expiration or other determination of the term of apprenticeship of any apprenticed labourer, he or she shall refuse to quit and deliver up possession of any land, dwelling or building which he or she shall have been permitted or suffered to occupy during his or her state of apprenticeship, to his or her landlord or landlords, or to any person or persons acting on his, her or their behalf, every such person shall be deemed and considered a forcible detainer of such land, dwelling or building, and shall be subject and liable to the same penalties as any other person of free condition is liable by the laws of this Island, for making a forcible entry or detainer.

Clause 74.
When five or more apprentices are confined in a house of correction, they may be employed in repairing the public roads.

And be it further enacted, that at any time there shall be five or more apprenticed labourers in any house of correction, who may have been sentenced to confinement with hard labour, it shall and may be lawful for the nearest special justice of the peace to such house of correction to cause such five or more apprenticed labourers to be employed in repairing the highways, or any other public works in their district, under the discretion of such police officer or officers as such justice shall think proper; and such justice shall be and he is hereby authorized to direct such means to be taken by such police officer or officers to prevent the escape of such apprenticed labourers as he shall think proper.

Clause 75.
Apprentices may be worked on the treadmill.

And be it further enacted, that it shall and may be lawful for any special justice, and he is hereby authorized and empowered to substitute any given number of hours of work on the treadmill in the town-hall, or any other treadmill that may hereafter be erected in any of the districts of this Island, for any of the punishments imposed by this Act on apprenticed labourers, as he in his discretion shall consider necessary and proper.

Penalties on employers for breach of duty to their apprentices.

And whereas it is necessary to provide penalties for the non-performance of their duties by employers towards their apprenticed labourers; be it therefore further enacted, that if any employer of any prædial apprenticed labourer shall, by force or fraud, protract the weekly services of such labourer beyond the period by this Act allowed for that purpose, he or she shall forfeit, for the benefit of such labourer, the sum of 1*s.*, in respect of every hour which such service shall be so protracted.

Signals to be made for the commencement and close of labour by apprentices.

And be it further enacted, that it shall be the duty of every such employer to intimate to the labourers in his employment the commencement and close of the legal hours of labour, by the usual mode of ringing a bell, or sounding a shell or horn, or any other signal, which signal shall be always of such a nature as to be distinctly visible or audible to the several prædial apprenticed labourers in the service of such person.

Apprentices not bound to undertake task work, unless the majority of the gang consent.

And be it further enacted, that no apprenticed labourer shall be bound to undertake any task-work, except with his own free assent to the same, save as is hereinafter excepted: provided always nevertheless, and be it enacted, that if the majority of any prædial apprenticed labourers attached to any plantation or estate shall be willing, in the distribution or apportionment amongst the whole body of such labourers on such plantation or estate, to undertake any task-work upon such plantation or estate, any contract made between the employer or employers of such labourers, or any person acting on his, her or their behalf, and the majority of such labourers as aforesaid, shall be binding on the minority, in the same manner as if the whole body had willingly entered into such contract.

Contract for task-wor to be entered in a bo for the inspection of the special justice.

And be it further enacted, that every contract entered into between any employer or employers and any prædial apprenticed labourer for the performance of any specific work, as a task, and in lieu of the prescribed weekly labour, or for the performance of any labour in extra hours, shall, by such employer, be reduced into writing, and entered in a book to be kept for that purpose on the plantation or place, which book the special justice of the district may inspect as often as he may think proper.

Clause 80. Contract for services between employer and apprentices not binding beyond 14 days, unless approved by the special justice.

And be it further enacted, that no contract between any employer and any prædial apprenticed labourer for the performance of any such specific or task-work, or for the performance of any labour in extra hours, shall endure or continue in force, or be binding upon the parties entering into the same, or either of them, after the expiration of 14 days from the making thereof, unless the same shall have been made and entered into by such parties, in the presence or with the approbation of such special justice of the peace, or unless, having been entered into in his absence, the same shall be confirmed and approved by him before the expiration of such 14 days; and every such approbation of any such contract shall, by such special justice, be attested under his hand in the book so kept as aforesaid; and it is hereby declared, that it shall be the duty of the special justice, before approving any such contract, to ascertain that the terms thereof are distinctly understood by the apprenticed labourers entering into the same, and that such labourers have entered into such contract freely and voluntarily.

Clause 81. Contract for services to be distinctly expressed, and not to be binding for more than one year.

And be it further enacted, that in every such contract for task-work, or for extra service extending beyond the period of one fortnight, the nature and amount of the extra labour to be performed, and the amount of the consideration to be given for the same, and the time and manner of paying such consideration, shall be distinctly expressed, and no such contract shall continue in force for more than one year from the day of the date thereof.

Clause 82. Apprentices may receive wages for task-work or extra services before special justices.

And be it further enacted, that on proof being made, to the satisfaction of such special justice, of the performance of any such task-work or extra service, and the non-payment of the consideration stipulated for in any such contract as aforesaid, whether for task-work or for extra services, it shall be competent to such justice, and he is hereby authorized to give judgment against the employer or employers of such prædial apprenticed labourer, for the amount of such consideration, if a money consideration, or the value in money, if any other than a money consideration; and if the same shall not be paid within one week next after such judgment, to issue execution for the recovery of the same, as in the case of servants' wages in the form annexed, marked (P.), and which execution shall be executed by the serjeant of police of the district, or by a constable, by attaching the goods and chattels, or in default of those, the lands or houses of the defendant or defendants, and selling the same, and applying the proceeds thereof in the same manner as a constable, acting under the authority of a justice of the peace for the body of the Island, is authorized to sell and dispose of goods and chattels, or lands and houses, attached for servants' wages; and such serjeant shall be entitled to the same fees, to be paid out of the proceeds of the property attached, as such constable is entitled.

Clause 83. Apprentices competent witnesses to recover their wages, in the absence of other proof, or refusal of defendant to be examined.

Provided always nevertheless, and be it further enacted, that for the want of sufficient other evidence on the part and behalf of any complainant or complainants, for the non-payment of any wages due for extra service or task-work, to substantiate his, her or their contract, or for the performance thereof, it shall and may be lawful for such special justice to examine the defendant or defendants on oath; and in case the defendant or defendants shall not attend the hearing of such complaint, after being duly summoned for such purpose, or in case he or she shall refuse to be examined, then such justice is hereby authorized to examine the complainant or complainants on oath, which shall be considered as good and legal evidence in support of any such complaint.

Clause 84. Liabilities of apprentices for violating contracts entered into for performance of task-work or extra services.

And be it further enacted, that if any apprenticed labourer shall violate the terms of such contract as aforesaid for task-work, or for extra service, he or she shall be liable to the same pains and penalties as are before provided in respect of the violation by such labourer of the duties by him or her to be performed in the discharge of the services owing by him or her by law to his or her employer: provided nevertheless, that no apprenticed labourer shall be liable to such pains and penalties for the non-performance of any task-work or services performed during his or her extra hours in the service of any stranger or strangers, or person or persons not entitled by law to his or her services, which may prejudice the person or persons entitled by law to his or her services.

Clause 85. Female married apprentices, and apprentices of 12 years and upwards, competent to contract for task-work, &c.

And be it further enacted, that every married female apprenticed labourer, notwithstanding her coverture, and every child of 12 years and upwards, notwithstanding his or her infancy, shall be competent to enter into such contracts as aforesaid, for task-work or for extra services.

Clause 86. Penalties on employers for beating or punishing apprenticed labourers.

And be it further enacted, that if any employer of any apprenticed labourer shall whip, beat or imprison, or shall otherwise subject to any other bodily punishment any apprenticed labourer, such employer shall incur a penalty, to be imposed by such special justice as aforesaid, not exceeding 5*l.*; and in default of payment thereof, or sufficient effects to satisfy the same within 14 days, such justice may sentence such offender to imprisonment for any time not exceeding one month in the common gaol of this Island, unless the fine be sooner paid.

Clause 87. Apprentices may appeal to special justices against their employers, or proceed against them under the general law.

Provided nevertheless, and be it further enacted, that in any such case as last aforesaid it shall be competent to any apprenticed labourer, instead of preferring his complaint to such special justice, to maintain any civil suit or action as in the case of any other free person for damages for any such battery, imprisonment or corporal punishment as aforesaid; and it shall also be competent to any such special justice, if he shall see occasion, to abstain from imposing such penalty as aforesaid, and to bind over, or to commit for the want of bail, the offender, to take his or her trial at the court of grand sessions, in such manner as any other justice of the peace is authorized in the case of any other free person.

And

Clause 88. Apprentices to be discharged from apprenticeship, if improperly treated by their employers.

And be it enacted, that if any person or persons, entitled under the second clause of this Act to the services of any apprenticed labourer, shall be convicted before any court of competent jurisdiction of any cruelty towards his or her apprenticed labourer, or if any such person shall be twice convicted of inflicting any corporal punishment upon the person of such labourer, then such labourer shall be discharged from his or her apprenticeship by order of the court before which such conviction shall be had.

Clause 89. Apprentices to be at liberty to resort to a special justice to complain; but not to go without a pass, unless it be refused.

And be it further enacted, that every apprenticed labourer shall be allowed to resort to the special justice of the district to which he or she belongs, for the purpose of laying before him any complaint against his or her employer, or person having the superintendence of his or her labour: provided that no such apprenticed labourer shall be at liberty to resort to any special justice on any day to which his or her employer shall be entitled to his or her services, without a pass from his or her employer, or the person in the immediate superintendence of his or her labour, unless such apprenticed labourer shall first have applied for such pass, and been refused; and any such apprenticed labourer resorting to such special justice without a pass, unless the same hath been refused, shall be considered as absent from his or her employer's service without leave, and liable to be punished accordingly.

Clause 90. Limitation for bringing complaints.

And be it further enacted, that all complaints which shall be brought either by any employer or by any apprenticed labourer for the recovery of any fine or penalty, or in respect of any of the offences hereinbefore mentioned, shall be brought and made before the special justice of the peace having jurisdiction thereof, and entered in the book of such special justice within one month next after the cause of such complaint.

Clause 91. Provision for extending the time of bringing complaints.

Provided also, that if any apprenticed labourer shall be hindered by any forcible means to be used by any such employer, or by his or her agency, from making any such complaint within the time aforesaid, that in every such case such complaint may be made within 14 days after the ceasing of such forcible means; and it shall not be competent for any such special justice of the peace to entertain any complaint as aforesaid which shall not be commenced and made within the time hereinbefore limited: provided nevertheless, that such limitation shall not extend to any case of felony.

And be it further enacted, that all complaints which shall be brought for the recovery of wages, or the recovery of money, or other consideration for the performance of any task-work or extra service, shall be commenced within 12 months next after the same shall become due: provided nevertheless, that nothing herein contained shall extend, or be construed to extend, to any promissory note or other acknowledgment in writing, whereby the amount due in respect of any such wages or contract shall be ascertained and expressed.

Clause 93. Proceedings to be observed towards apprentices, and their responsibilities, in cases of riot.

And whereas, it is expedient to make special provision for the punishment of certain offences which may be committed by apprenticed labourers against the state; be it therefore enacted, that if any three or more apprenticed labourers shall unite together in any riot or tumultuous assemblage, any justice of the peace, acting either under the general commission or by any special commission of the peace, who shall be present at the same, shall cause a flag or some other conspicuous signal to be exhibited, as a warning to all persons to separate and disperse quietly; and all apprenticed labourers who at the expiration of 10 minutes from the exhibition of such flag or signal shall continue present at any such riotous assemblage, shall be bound over to the court of grand sessions, and for want of bail committed to the common gaol to take his or her trial, and on conviction shall be liable to imprisonment, with hard labour, for any time not exceeding 12 months.

Clause 94. How to act in cases of riot.

And be it further enacted, that the police of the district, or of any adjoining district, shall, on requisition for that purpose, repair to the spot where such riotous or tumultuous assemblage shall take place, and (act) as they shall be directed by any justice of the peace as aforesaid.

Clause 95. Apprentices found beyond the limits of their district, except in certain cases, to be adjudged vagabonds. Proviso.

And be it further enacted, that every apprenticed labourer found beyond the limits of his or her district, except on Saturday, or with a written pass from his or her employer, or on Sunday, Christmas-day or Good Friday, in his or her way to and from some place of public worship, shall be liable to be apprehended and detained, and shall on conviction be adjudged a vagabond, and punished accordingly: provided always, that nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent the apprehension of any apprenticed labourer running away, or for any other offence (for) which he or she may be liable to be apprehended on either of the aforesaid excepted days.

Clause 96. Apprentices establishing themselves in any part of the Island as a separate community, to be dislodged by the police of the district. The militia to be aiding therein, if requisite.

And be it further enacted, that if it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of any special justice of the peace that any apprenticed labourers have, without lawful authority, established themselves in any part of the Island as a distinct community, habitually abandoning and neglecting to perform the duties imposed on them by law, such justice of the peace shall cause any such community to be dislodged by the police of the district, and if necessary, shall also cause their habitations to be taken down and removed; and all officers and privates of the colonial militia, if required, shall be aiding in carrying into effect any directions of any such special justice of the peace for dislodging any such community as aforesaid.

Clause 97. Punishment of apprentices members of any such community.

And be it further enacted, that any apprenticed labourer who shall be convicted before such special justice of the peace of having been a member of any such community as aforesaid, shall be adjudged to imprisonment, with hard labour, for any term not exceeding 12 months; and if a male, to whipping, not exceeding 39 stripes.

Clause 98.
Apprentices not to quit the Island without the Governor's passport and the employer's sanction.
Penalty on the secretary of the Island for issuing a passport without the employer's consent.

And be it further enacted, that no apprenticed labourer shall quit the Island without a ticket from the secretary's office of this Island, which ticket shall not be issued by the secretary, except with the written consent of the employer of such apprenticed labourer; and the secretary of the Island shall be liable to a penalty of 50*l.* for every ticket he shall issue to any apprenticed labourer without such consent, to be recovered as servants' wages, on complaint to any justice of the peace, to the use of the employer of such apprenticed labourer; and every apprenticed labourer quitting or attemping to quit the Island without such ticket, and his or her aiders and abettors, being apprenticed labourers, shall be liable, on conviction before the special justice of the district to which the apprenticed labourer who shall quit or attempt to quit the Island, shall belong, to imprisonment, with hard labour, for any term not exceeding six months; and if males, to whipping, not exceeding 39 stripes.

Apprentices being fishermen or mariners, to be registered with the special justice.

And be it further enacted, that all persons whose ordinary occupation is on the sea, as fishermen or mariners, shall be registered as such at the office of the special justice of the district, and any apprenticed labourer engaging in such occupation without being first so registered, except with the consent of his employer, shall be liable to imprisonment, with hard labour, for any time not less than six weeks, and not exceeding three months.

Clause 100.
Penalty on persons removing apprentices without a passport.

And be it further enacted, that every person, not being an apprenticed labourer, who shall remove or assist in removing any apprenticed labourer from this Island in any boat or vessel without such ticket, shall, for every apprenticed labourer which such person shall remove or assist in removing, forfeit the sum of 50*l.* sterling money of Great Britain, to the use of the employer of such apprenticed labourer, to be recovered as servants' wages before any justice of the peace.

Penalty on persons harbouring apprentices.

And be it further enacted, that if any person shall harbour, conceal or clandestinely or fraudulently employ any apprenticed labourer who may be absent from the service of his or her employer without leave, every such person so offending shall for every such offence, upon conviction thereof before any justice of the peace, in case the party complained against be not an apprenticed labourer, but if an apprenticed labourer, then before the special justice of the district, on the complaint of the employer or employers of such apprenticed labourers, be adjudged to pay, and shall pay to the person or persons entitled to the services of such apprenticed labourer, the sum of 10*l.* current money of this Island for each and every apprenticed labourer so harboured, concealed, or clandestinely or fraudulently employed; and the further sum of 10*s.* like current money per day for each and every such apprenticed labourer, for each and every day or part of a day such offender or offenders shall be proved to have so harboured, concealed, or clandestinely or fraudulently employed every such apprenticed labourer; and upon the hearing of any such complaint, it shall and may be lawful for such justice of the peace, and he is hereby authorized and empowered, if he shall see just cause, to examine the party complained against upon his or her oath touching the matter of such complaint; and in case the party accused, being legally summoned, and return thereof made on oath by the constable who shall have executed such summons, shall, without some reasonable cause, to be allowed of by such justice, fail to attend the hearing of such complaint, or attending shall refuse to be examined, the complaint shall be taken, pro confesso, if the complainant be not provided with other proof; and the justice shall give judgment thereon for the said sum of 10*l.* against such offender; provided nevertheless, that in any case where such complaint shall not be proved, except by evidence of the accused, such accused party shall only be liable to pay at the rate of 10*s.* per day as aforesaid for every day, or any part of a day, he or she shall have so harboured, concealed, clandestinely or fraudulently employed every such apprenticed labourer; and such justice is hereby required, if necessary, to issue either a search warrant for the apprehension of such apprenticed labourer, or a summons to the party accused requiring him or her to produce such apprenticed labourer at the time of hearing such complaint, in order that he or she may be delivered over to his or her employer; and on failure, unless it shall appear, on the oath of the party accused, that he or she cannot procure the attendance of such apprenticed labourer, such justice of the peace shall and he is hereby required to issue a warrant for the apprehension of every such apprenticed labourer, and for searching the premises of the person or persons convicted under this clause, or any other premises where there shall be reasonable grounds to believe that such apprenticed labourer is harboured or secreted; and such justice of the peace is hereby fully authorized to examine such persons on oath, or any other person or persons who may be able to discover where such apprenticed labourer is to be found; and on the apprehension of any such apprenticed labourer such constable is hereby required to deliver him or her over to a police officer of the district to which such apprenticed labourer belongs, to be dealt with according to law; and if the offender be an apprenticed labourer, and be unable to pay the penalties hereby imposed, such apprenticed labourer, if a male, to be liable to whipping, not exceeding 39 stripes, and if a female, to solitary confinement for any time not exceeding one month; and if the offender be a non-prædial female apprenticed labourer, to solitary confinement for so many days as she shall have been proved to have harboured, concealed, or clandestinely or fraudulently employed, every such apprenticed labourer, unless any such apprenticed labourer shall be able to make any other satisfaction to the injured party which such injured party shall be willing to receive: provided always, that nothing herein contained shall extend to the employing of any prædial apprenticed labourer on a Saturday, or on any other day to which such prædial apprenticed labourer shall be entitled to his or her earnings, unless the party employing shall have express and actual notice from the employer of any apprenticed labourer, or his representative, that such prædial

Search warrant may be issued for the apprehension of absent apprentices.

apprenticed labourer hath been adjudged to work on any such Saturday, or any other day as aforesaid, for the benefit of his or her employer or employers.

Clause 102. Apprentices not to serve in the militia or hold office under His Majesty, but eligible for certain minor situations.

And whereas the duties which apprenticed labourers owe to their employers render it necessary that they should be exempted from the performance of civil or military services, and be disqualified from holding civil or military offices, and from the enjoyment of political franchise, and that they should be exempted from being arrested or imprisoned for debt; be it therefore enacted, that no apprenticed labourer, during his apprenticeship, shall serve in the militia, or be compelled or competent to hold any office in His Majesty's service: provided nevertheless, that any apprenticed labourer may hold the office of beadle, parish clerk or the like within his district, or of petty constable on any plantation or place to which he is attached, so that the duties of such office do not interfere with those due to his employer: provided nevertheless, that nothing herein contained shall extend to absolve any apprenticed labourers from serving in any civil or military capacity to which they might be called by the Governor or Commander-in-chief of this Island, by and with the advice of his Council, in case of foreign invasion, rebellion or any other great public emergency.

Clause 103. Apprentices not to be arrested for debt, &c.

And be it further enacted, that no apprenticed labourer during his or her apprenticeship shall be arrested or imprisoned in any action of debt, assumpsit, covenant, detinue, account, case, trover, trespass, ejectment or other civil action whatsoever, nor shall any apprenticed labourer during his or her apprenticeship be liable to be arrested or taken in execution by virtue of any writ of execution obtained in any such action or actions, nor shall any apprenticed labourer be liable to be taken in execution for any debt or demands against his or her employer.

Clause 104. Punishment of apprentices for trespass or slander.

And whereas the exemption of such apprenticed labourers from arrest in such actions as aforesaid is for the benefit of their employers, but it is nevertheless expedient that in certain cases such apprenticed labourers should be subject to some summary punishment in lieu of such arrest; be it therefore enacted, that if any apprenticed labourer shall commit any trespass, or shall be guilty of uttering any slander, or of publishing any libel, he or she shall, on conviction thereof by the special justice of the district to which he or she shall belong, or by any competent court in this Island, be subject to imprisonment with hard labour for any time not exceeding three months, or solitary confinement not exceeding one month, and if the offender be a male, whipping, not exceeding 39 stripes, may, at the discretion of such justice, be substituted for imprisonment.

Clause 105. Apprentices not to keep fire-arms, ammunition or warlike instruments in their possessions.

And be it further enacted, that it shall not be lawful for any apprenticed labourer, without the consent of his or her employer, to have in his possession any fire-arms, ammunition or warlike weapons, and that it shall and may be lawful for any police officer or constable, at the request of any employer, to search the house or lodging of any apprenticed labourer within his district, for any fire-arms, ammunition, warlike weapons, stolen goods, deserters, vagabonds or runaways, which may be suspected to be concealed in such house or lodging; and it shall and may also be lawful for any special constable, to be appointed as hereinafter mentioned for and in respect of any plantation, by the direction of the proprietor of such plantation, or any person acting in his or her behalf, to search any such house or lodging of any such labourer on such plantation in which there shall be reason to believe that any fire-arms, warlike weapons, ammunition, stolen goods, deserters, vagabonds or runaways, shall be concealed or harboured, and to take possession of all such fire-arms, ammunition, warlike weapons, stolen goods, deserters, vagabonds and runaways, as shall be found in such house or lodgings, and to carry the same before the special justice of the district, to be dealt with according to law.

Clause 106. Fire-arms, ammunition, &c. found in possession of apprentices, to be sold by order of the special justice.

And be it further enacted, that such special justice shall cause all such fire-arms, ammunition and warlike weapons, found in the possession of any apprenticed labourer, to be sold, unless the same shall be claimed by some person from whom the same shall have been stolen, and the proceeds thereof paid into the public treasury of the Island.

Clause 107. The Governor may order the militia to search for deserters, warlike weapons or stolen goods.

And be it further enacted, that the Governor or Commander-in-chief of this Island for the the time being shall and may, by and with the advice of his Council, whenever it shall seem necessary, issue his order to the commanding officer of any regiment, battalion or corps of militia of this Island, directing and requiring him, at the time to be mentioned in such order, to have the houses of all the apprenticed labourers within the parish of such regiment, battalion or corps of militia, or any of them, searched diligently and effectually by the men comprising such regiment, battalion or corps, or by a sufficient number thereof necessary for such service, in order to discover and ascertain whether any such deserters, vagabonds or runaways, as aforesaid, or any fire-arms, ammunition or warlike weapons or stolen articles, are concealed in such houses, and to seize all such deserters, vagabonds and runaways, and commit them to the custody of some police officer of the district to which they belong, to be by such officer carried before the special justice of such district, to be dealt with according to law, and to deliver over all such fire-arms, ammunition or warlike weapons, to the treasurer of the Island, unless claimed by the owners thereof to be sold, and the money arising therefrom paid into the public treasury; and such commanding officer shall make his report forthwith to the Governor or Commander-in-chief of the Island for the time being, who is hereby authorized and empowered to act on such report, by and with the advice of his Council, as may seem best for the safety of the Island; and every commanding officer of any regiment, battalion or corps, refusing or neglecting to perform or discharge the duty so required of him by the Governor or Commander-in-chief, shall forfeit and pay the sum of 50 l. current money of this Island, to be recovered before any two justices of the peace, and levied and raised as in the case of servants' wages.

Clause 108. Special justices to exercise exclusive jurisdiction in all matters arising out of the relationship between employers and apprentices.

And whereas by an Act or Statute of the Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, passed in the fourth year of the reign of His Majesty King William the Fourth, it is, amongst other things, enacted, that it shall and may be lawful for His Majesty to issue or to authorize the Governor of any colony, in the name and in the behalf of His Majesty, to issue, under the public seal of any such colony, one or more special commission or commissions, to any one or more persons, constituting him or them a justice or justices of the peace for the whole of any such colony, or for any parish, precinct, quarter or other district within the same, for the special purpose of giving effect to the said Act or Statute, and to any laws made for carrying the same into effect; and it is also enacted in and by the said Act or Statute, that His Majesty shall be authorized to grant to any person or persons, not exceeding 100 in the whole, holding such special commission or commissions as aforesaid, and so from time to time, as vacancies may occur, salaries at and after a rate not exceeding in any case the sum of 300 l. sterling per annum; be it therefore enacted, that the several justices of the peace holding such special commissions who shall be appointed by His Majesty, or by the Governor or Commander-in-chief of this Island, by the authority of His Majesty, shall have exercise and enjoy a sole and exclusive jurisdiction, and shall solely and exclusively take cognizance of all offences committed, or alleged to have been committed, by any apprenticed labourer, or by his or her employer, in such their relation to each other, and of the breach, violation or neglect of any of the obligations owed by them to each other, or of any question, matter or thing incident to or arising out of the relations subsisting between such apprenticed labourers and the persons respectively entitled to their services within the district for which any such special justice of the peace shall be appointed: provided nevertheless, that in case it shall happen that by death, absence or other cause, that any such district within this Island shall be without a special justice of the peace, or that the justice of the peace for any such district shall be prevented by continued illness from attending to his duties, then each of the nearest special justices of the peace to such district shall, and he and they are required severally to take cognizance of all such complaints and offences as shall be committed in the district, without any such special justice of the peace, or where the special justice of the peace, from illness, shall be unable to perform his duties; and each of such special justices shall have, and he is hereby declared to have the same powers and authorities which belonged to the justice of the peace appointed for such district: provided nevertheless, that nothing herein contained shall extend or be construed to extend, to abrogate or take away the powers by law vested in the court of grand sessions, or in the several courts of common pleas in this Island, or the right of appeal to the Governor and Council from any decision of any special justice of the peace by any person or persons who may feel themselves aggrieved thereby.

Apprentices subject to the general law, with right of appeal.

Clause 109. Special justices not to receive fees.

Provided nevertheless, and be it further enacted, that no special justice of the peace shall be entitled to have, receive or demand any fee or reward whatsoever for any act, matter or thing to be done by him touching or concerning the several matters aforesaid, other than except the salary granted by His Majesty.

Clause 110. Limitation of acting against justices.

And be it further enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that no action or suit shall be commenced against any justice of the peace, or any other person, for anything by him done by virtue or in pursuance of this Act, until 14 days' notice thereof in writing shall have been given to such special justice or other person, nor after a sufficient satisfaction or tender thereof hath been made to the party or parties aggrieved, not after six calendar months next after the fact committed; and the defendant or defendants in such action or suit shall and may plead the general issue, and give this Act and the special matter in evidence at any trial to be held thereupon, and that the same was done in pursuance and by the authority of this Act, and if the same appear so to be done, or if such action or suit shall be brought after the time hereinbefore limited for bringing, or shall be brought without 14 days' notice thereof, or after a sufficient satisfaction made or tendered as aforesaid, then the jury shall find for the defendant or defendants; and if the plaintiff or plaintiffs shall become nonsuited, or suffer a discontinuance of his, her or their action or suit, or if a verdict pass against the plaintiff or plaintiffs, the defendant or defendants shall have treble costs, and shall have such remedy for recovering the same as any other defendant or defendants have or hath by law for the recovery of costs of suit in any other cases.

Clause 111. Apprenticed labourers may be appointed constables for the plantations to which they are attached.

And whereas it is expedient to provide for the preservation of the peace and good order on the several plantations and estates in this Island, be it therefore enacted, that on every plantation, estate or place in this Island, the special justice of the district in which every plantation, estate or place shall be situate, shall, with the consent of the proprietor or manager, appoint one or more of the steadiest and most trustworthy of such apprenticed labourers to act as a special constable or constables for one year on such plantation, estate or place, and every such special constable after his appointment shall, before entering upon his office, appear before the special justice of the district in which the plantation, estate or place to which he shall be attached is situate, and take the following oath:

"You shall well and truly serve our Sovereign Lord the King in the office of constable for the plantation, estate or place of for the year ensuing, to the best of your skil and knowledge. So help you God."

And

Clause 112. Plantation constables to exercise the powers of petty constables within the limits of their plantations.

And be it further enacted, that every such special constable shall be and he is hereby authorized to exercise all such powers within the bounds or limits of such plantation, estate or place, and the highways adjoining to or passing through the same, over all persons except his employer, or his or her representative, or the person having the superintendence of his or her apprenticed labourers, in as full and ample a manner to all intents and purposes as any petty constable is by the general law of the land authorized to exercise; and in all cases where the proprietor or manager of any such plantation, estate or place shall have cause of complaint against any apprenticed labourer attached to or employed on such plantation, estate or place, it shall and may be lawful for any such constable, and he is hereby authorized and required, at the request or by the direction of any such proprietor or manager to take such apprenticed labourer before the special justice of the district in which such plantation, estate or place is situated, in order that such complaint may be inquired into, heard and determined, notwithstanding no warrant of arrest or summons may have been issued by such special justice of the peace for the apprehension or appearance of such apprenticed labourer; and in case any apprenticed labourer shall be apprehended for desertion or shall have committed any offence which would subject such apprenticed labourer to confinement with hard labour for any time not exceeding a week, and such apprehension or the commission of any such offence as last aforesaid shall be at an unseasonable hour, or in case there shall not be time on that day to bring such apprenticed labourer before the special justice of the district at a seasonable hour, it shall be lawful for every such constable, under the direction of such proprietor or manager, to commit such apprenticed labourer to safe custody for the present, and on the following day to carry such offender before the special justice of the district; and any such constable may apprehend any person or persons found loitering on any such plantation, estate or place without the licence or permission of the proprietor or manager of such plantation, estate or place, and by the direction of any such proprietor or manager may carry such person or persons before any justice of the peace within the district, to be deal with according to law; and should such person or persons be apprehended at an unseasonable hour, may, under such direction as aforesaid, commit such person or persons to safe custody for the present until the following day, then to be taken before a justice of the peace as aforesaid; and if any person or persons shall be found trespassing on any plantation, estate or place, or the bye-roads passing through the same and belonging thereto, without the licence or permission of the proprietor or manager of such plantation, estate or place, after having been warned, or shall refuse to quit such plantation, estate or place when requested so to do by such proprietor or manager or by special constable, every such person shall incur a fine of not less than 5*s.* or more than 50*s.*, to be recovered before any justice of the peace residing in the district where such plantation, estate or place is situate, and in default of payment thereof may be sentenced to imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for any time not less than one week nor more than four weeks; and to prevent all disputes as to what roads shall be considered bye-roads belonging to such plantations, estates or places, it is hereby declared that all roads passing through such plantations, estates and places, and not a jury road, or not repaired at the public charge, shall be deemed and considered as belonging to the plantations, estates or places through which they pass, and any such constable refusing or neglecting to obey the direction or order of such proprietor or manager, on conviction thereof before the said special justice, shall be liable to be punished as for contumacious disobedience of the lawful commands of his employer.

Clause 113. The 52 Geo. 3, to be in force in this Island.

And be it further enacted, that a certain Act or Statute of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, passed in the 52d year of the reign of His late Majesty King George the Third, intituled, "An Act to repeal certain Acts and amend other Acts relating to Religious Worship and Assemblies, and Persons Teaching and Preaching therein," shall and is hereby declared to be in full force and effect in this Island, to all intents and purposes whatsoever: provided nevertheless, and it is hereby also enacted and declared, that any two or more justices of the peace holding any such special commission as aforesaid, shall have, exercise and enjoy all and every the jurisdiction, powers and authorities in this Island, which by force and virtue of the said Act are within the realm of England had, exercised and enjoyed by the several justices of the peace, and by the general and quarter sessions therein mentioned.

Clause 114. Until houses of correction are established, apprentices, by the order of a special justice, may be confined in the domestic prisons on plantations.

And whereas, for the purpose of carrying the several enactments and provisions in this Act contained into complete force and effect, it will be necessary for the legislature of this Island to pass one or more Act or Acts for the erection of houses of correction in the aforesaid respective districts, and for the establishment of a police in each district: And whereas the difficulty of raising funds for the erection of such houses of correction may render it impossible to have them erected by the time this Act shall come into operation, and it is therefore necessary to make provision for the happening of such an event; be it therefore enacted, that in case such houses of correction shall not be completed and ready for the reception of prisoners on the 1st day of August 1834, it shall and may be lawful for the special justices of the peace aforesaid to inspect the domestic prisons on the respective plantations or estates within their respective districts, and if the same shall appear to be wholesome and proper places for the confinement of offenders against this Act, such special justices are hereby authorized and required, when it shall be necessary to adjudge any apprenticed labourer to confinement, to direct that he or she shall be confined in the prison or place of confinement belonging to the plantation or estate to which such apprenticed labourer shall be attached: provided always, that during the time any such apprenticed labourer shall be confined in such prison or place of confinement, his or her employer shall provide proper and sufficient food for, and cause the same, in a dressed state, to be furnished to every such apprenticed labourer.

Clause 115. Mode of raising penalties.

And be it further enacted, that all fines, forfeitures or penalties awarded by any such special justice of the peace, or by any other justice of the peace, under any of the enactments or provisions of this Act, shall be levied and raised as in the case of servants' wages; and every such justice of the peace shall issue an execution or executions, under his hand and seal, directed to any constable or police-officer, for levying or raising of any such fine or fines, forfeiture or forfeitures, or penalties accordingly; and the constable and police levying any execution or executions under the authority of this Act, shall be entitled to demand and receive the like fees as the provost-marshal of the courts of common pleas within this Island is entitled to demand and receive on levying executions to him directed from the said courts.

Clause 116. Application of penalties.

And be it further enacted, that all fines, forfeitures and penalties which may be imposed on any offender or offenders by virtue of the several enactments and provisions of this Act, where the manner of applying the same is not otherwise particularly directed, shall, when levied and raised, be paid into the treasury of this Island, to and for the public use; and the treasurer of this island for the time being shall account with the committee of public accounts for all monies received by him by virtue of this Act in the same manner as he is required to do for any other of the public monies in his hands, and the said treasurer shall be allowed a commission of 10*s.* for every 100*l.* which he shall so receive.

Clause 117. Term Employer.

And be it further enacted, that the term employer shall be taken to mean either the person in whose immediate service any apprenticed labourer is or shall be employed, or the person or persons entitled to the service or services of such apprenticed labourer, whether acting by attorney, agent or manager, as may best give effect to the several enactments in this Act contained.

Clause 118. Who to be considered Governor.

And be it further enacted, that within the meaning and for the purposes of this Act, every person who for the time being shall be in the lawful administration of the government of this Island shall be taken to be the Governor thereof.

Clause 119. Manner of trying offences committed by apprentices when slaves.

And be it further enacted, that all slaves who shall have committed any crimes, misdemeanors or offences, and shall not have been tried for the same previously to the 1st day of August 1834, shall be subject and liable to be tried for such crimes, misdemeanors or offences in the same manner, and be subject to the same pains and penalties as if they had been persons of free condition at the time such crimes, misdemeanors and offences were committed: provided nevertheless that in all cases where such offenders in their state of slavery would have been subject to have been tried and punished for the commission of such crimes, misdemeanors or offences, before one or more justice or justices of the peace, it shall and may be lawful to try such offenders, being apprenticed labourers, under this Act; and the special justice of the peace of the district may adjudge all such offenders, on conviction, to any of the punishments hereinbefore prescribed for the commission of any offence of the like nature, save and except that it shall not be lawful to sentence any such person to any prolongation of his or her apprenticeship for any offence by him or her committed previously to the 1st of August 1834.

Clause 120. Act reserved for His Majesty's pleasure.

Provided always, and be it further enacted, that this Act, or anything herein contained, shall not be in force until His Majesty's pleasure on the same shall be known.

AN ACT to alter an Act, intituled " An Act for the Abolition of Slavery, for the Government of Apprenticed Labourers, and for ascertaining and enforcing the Reciprocal Duties between them and their employers."—(Passed 3d November 1834.)

No. 9.

Whereas it is expedient to alter several of the clauses in the said Act, intituled " An Act for the Abolition of Slavery, for the government of Apprenticed Labourers, and for ascertaining and enforcing the Reciprocal Duties between them and their employers:"

Preamble.

And whereas it might prevent confusion if some of the said clauses so intended to be altered were, in the first instance, wholly repealed and afterwards re-enacted, free from the objections which have been made thereto: May it therefore please Your Majesty, that it may be enacted, and be it enacted, by the Governor, Council and Assembly of this your Majesty's Island of Barbadoes, that the 4th, 5th, 12th, 14th, 15th, 27th, 33d, 103d and 104th

Clause 1. The 4th, 5th, 12th, 14th, 15th, 27th, 33d, 103d and 104th clauses of the Act for the Abolition of Slavery, repealed.

104th clauses of the said Act, intituled "An Act for the Abolition of Slavery, for the government of Apprenticed Labourers, and for ascertaining and enforcing the Reciprocal Duties between them and their employers," shall be and the same are hereby repealed: provided nevertheless, and be it also enacted, that the repeal of the said last-mentioned clauses shall not alter or in anywise affect the construction of any other clause or clauses in the said Act for the abolition of slavery which may refer to any of the clauses so repealed; but that such unrepealed clauses shall have and receive the same construction with reference to the clauses by this Act substituted for them, as if these substituted clauses had been originally enacted.

Proviso: The construction of any clauses in the Act having reference to the clauses so repealed, are not be affected thereby.

Clause 2. Classification of apprenticed labourers.

And be it further enacted, that all apprenticed labourers shall be divided into three distinct classes, the first of such classes, consisting of prædial apprenticed labourers attached to the soil, and comprising all persons who, in their state of slavery, were usually employed in agriculture, or in the manufacture of colonial produce, or otherwise upon lands belonging to their owners; the second of such classes, consisting of prædial apprenticed labourers not attached to the soil, and comprising all persons who, in their state of slavery, were usually employed in agriculture, or in the manufacture of colonial produce or otherwise, upon lands not belonging to their owners; and the third of such classes, consisting of non-prædial apprenticed labourers, and comprising all apprenticed labourers, not included within either of the preceding clauses: provided always, that no person of the age of 12 years and upwards shall be included in either of the said two classes of prædial apprenticed labourers, unless such person shall for 12 calendar months at the least, next before the 28th day of August 1833, have been habitually employed in agriculture, or in the manufacture of colonial produce.

Clause 3. Non-prædials may, with their own free will, in the presence of the special justice, be transferred to the prædial class.

And whereas it may happen that some persons who in conformity with the foregoing definitions, would be placed in the non-prædial class, might prefer to belong to the prædial class, be it therefore enacted, that it shall be at the option of any apprenticed labourer who shall be thus situated, to be considered as a prædial apprenticed labourer, provided he or she shall notify his or her wishes to that effect in the presence of the special justice of the district where such apprenticed labourer shall be domiciled, who shall make a record of such notification.

Clause 4. The registrar, after confirmation of this Act, shall deliver to employers of apprenticed labourers their last schedules, and the same shall be returned to the registrar within two months afterwards, with the proper classes distinguished.

And be it further enacted, that the registrar of slaves shall, immediately after His Majesty's confirmation of this Act shall be known in this Island, deliver to the employers of apprenticed labourers applying for the same, their last lists or schedules of slaves, and every employer of apprenticed labourers, by himself or herself, or by his or her constituted attorney in this Island, in the case of absentees, or in case any such employer be an invalid, or incompetent, then by some other person or persons, shall return back to the registrar such lists or schedules within two months from the same period, distinguishing, in reference to each apprenticed labourer therein mentioned, then being an apprenticed labourer, to which of the said three classes such apprenticed labourer belongs; and every such return shall be made on oath before the registrar, who is hereby authorized and required to administer the same as follows:

Persons delivering their returns to take the oath here mentioned.

The oath.

"I, A. B. do swear, that the distinctions made in the return now presented by me of the classes of apprenticed labourers to which such of the respective slaves therein named, who are now apprenticed labourers, belong, correspond with the occupations usually performed by such apprenticed labourers in their state of slavery for 12 months, previous to the 28th day of August [adding, if the fact be so], except the slave or slaves named A. B. and C. D., who prefer being placed in the prædial class. So help me God."

Clause 5. No work to be performed on Saturdays or Sundays, nor any interruption from attending any place of worship.

And be it further enacted, that no prædial apprenticed labourer shall be compelled or compellable to labour on Saturdays or Sundays, except in the works of necessity, or in the protection of property, or in tending of cattle; nor shall any apprenticed labourer be liable to be hindered or prevented from attending anywhere on Sundays for religious worship at his or her free will or pleasure, but shall be at full liberty so to do without any let, denial or interruption whatsoever.

Clause 6. Proviso here mentioned in clause 108, repealed.

And whereas the following proviso is inserted in the 108th clause of the said Act: "Provided nevertheless, that nothing herein contained shall extend to abrogate or take away the powers vested by law in the court of grand sessions, or in the several courts of common pleas in this Island, or the right of appeal to the Governor and Council from any decision of any special justice of the peace, by any person or persons who may feel themselves aggrieved thereby;" be it enacted, that the said proviso shall be and the same is hereby repealed: provided nevertheless, and be it further enacted, that nothing in the said 108th clause of the said Act contained, shall extend, or be construed to extend to abrogate or take away the powers by law vested in the supreme courts of record, or the superior courts of civil and criminal justice in this Island.

The powers vested in the several courts here mentioned not to be affected by such repeal.

Clause 7. How apprenticed labourers shall be confined, and for what offence.

And be it further enacted, that no special constable appointed or to be appointed under the 111th clause of the said Act, shall be allowed to confine for safe custody any apprenticed labourer attached to any plantation or place, except in those cases in which other of His Majesty's subjects might be taken into custody by any ordinary constable, or to those cases in which it may be reasonably presumed that any apprenticed labourer having offended against the said Act, will attempt to escape, anything in the said Act to the contrary contained notwithstanding: provided always, nevertheless, that all buildings used as places of confinement, however temporary, shall be approved of for that purpose by the special special justice of the peace of the district, who is hereby required occasionally to visit the same.

Clause 8. Domestic servants may, for the offences here mentioned, with the consent of their employers, be adjudged by the special justice to other employment.

And whereas it may happen that domestic servants, being apprenticed labourers, may be guilty of certain offences which would render them very unfit persons to be continued in domestic service; be it therefore enacted, that if any domestic servant, being an apprenticed labourer, shall be convicted before a special justice of the peace of habitual drunkenness, stealing, committing or attempting to commit any serious injury to the person or property of his or her master or mistress, or shall be convicted of any gross misdemeanor, it shall and may be lawful for such special justice, and he is hereby required, with the consent of such master or mistress, to order and adjudge every such domestic servant, being an apprenticed labourer, to be employed in such other occupation or labour as such justice shall in his discretion think proper: provided that nothing herein contained shall be construed to authorize any such special justice by any such order to prolong the apprenticeship of any such apprenticed labourer.

Proviso: Apprenticeship not to be prolonged thereby.

Clause 9. The 11th and 16th sects. of the Act of Parliament recited.

And whereas by the 11th section of the Act of the Imperial Parliament for the Abolition of Slavery, it is enacted, that during the continuance of any such apprenticeship as aforesaid, the person or persons for the time being entitled to the services of every such apprenticed labourer shall be and is and are thereby required to supply him or her with such food, clothing, lodging, medicine, medical attendance, and such other maintenance and allowances as by any law then in force in the colony to which such apprenticed labourer might belong, as an owner is required to supply to and for any slave being of the same age and sex as such apprenticed labourer shall be: and whereas it is, in and by the 16th clause of the said last-mentioned Act recited, that it would also be necessary, for the protection of such apprenticed labourers as aforesaid, that various regulations should be framed and established in the said respective colonies, for securing punctuality and method in the supply to them of such food, clothing, lodging, medicine, medical attendance, and such other maintenance and allowances as they were thereinbefore declared entitled to receive, and for regulating the amount and quality of all such articles in cases where the laws then existing in any such colony may not, in the case of slaves, have made any regulation, or any adequate regulation for that purpose; and it was also necessary that proper rules should be established for the prevention and punishment of any frauds which might be practised, or of any omission or neglects which might occur respecting the quantity or quality of the supplies so to be furnished, or respecting the periods for the delivery of the same: and whereas, by an Act of this Island, intituled, "An Act to repeal several Acts and Clauses of Acts respecting Slaves, and for consolidating and bringing into one Act the several Laws relating thereto, and for the better Order and Government of Slaves, and for giving them further Protection and Security, for altering the Mode of Trial of those charged with Capital and other Offences, and for other purposes;" being the only law in force respecting slaves at the time of the passing of the said Act of the Imperial Parliament; the amount and quality of the articles to be furnished slaves are not regulated: be it therefore enacted, that during the continuance of any such apprenticeship as aforesaid the person or persons for the time being entitled to the services of every such apprenticed labourer shall be and is and are hereby required to supply or cause to be supplied to him or her such food, clothing, lodging, medicine and medical attendance as hereinafter mentioned; that is to say, each and every such apprenticed labourer above the age of 16 years shall receive, in each week, not less than 30 pounds of plantains, potatoes, yams or eddoes, or 10 pounds of Guinea or Indian corn, and a pound of cod fish or herrings, shads or other pickled fish, or other salted provisions equal thereto; and every such apprenticed labourer, from the age of 12 to the age of 16 years, shall receive two thirds of the above allowances of food; and every such apprenticed labourer, from the age of six to the age of 12 years, shall receive one half of the first-mentioned allowances of food; and children under six years of age, being apprenticed labourers, shall be provided with proper and sufficient food for their support: provided nevertheless, that the person or persons entitled to the services of any such apprenticed labourer, or any person or persons acting in his or her behalf, who may be unable or unwilling to procure such provisions as are hereinbefore mentioned, may, with the authority in writing of the special justice of the peace of the district in which such apprenticed labourer or labourers is or are resident, substitute for the same, or any part or parts thereof, any other kind of provisions, or any money payment or allowance of time for such apprenticed labourer or labourers to work for his, her or their own benefit and advantage, as shall in the judgment of such special justice be equivalent to the allowances hereinbefore prescribed; and all provisions so to be delivered and supplied to the apprenticed labourers shall be sound and fit for consumption, and of good average merchantable quality; and the same shall be delivered and supplied to such apprenticed labourer once (or oftener) in each week, on any other day than Saturday or Sunday; and if any such person or persons as aforesaid, subject and liable so to do, shall not deliver or supply to such apprenticed labourer provisions of such amount and quality, and at such times as he, she or they is or are hereinbefore required to deliver and supply the same, such person or persons shall incur and become liable to a penalty (provided complaint thereof be made within 28 days) equal to twice the value of the provisions which ought so to have been supplied, for the benefit of the apprenticed labourer injured by such omission or neglect, unless it can be proved that the same cannot be purchased in any of the markets or towns of this Island: provided nevertheless, that in time of scarcity the Governor, by and with the advice of the Council, may from time to time, by proclamation to be by him for that purpose issued, authorize the substitution of any other provisions or allowances which can be purchased

The quantity of food to be supplied to each apprenticed labourer, as a weekly allowance, from the age of 16 years and upwards.

From 12 to 16 years.

From 6 to 12 years.

Proviso: Other food, or money payment, may be substituted, with the consent of the special justice.

Penalty on employers for default.

Complaint to be made within 28 days.

Proviso: In time of scarcity, the Governor, by proclamation, may authorize other provisions to be substituted.

Apprenticed labourers imprisoned in any house of correction, to be fed at the public expense.

chased in lieu of the aforesaid allowances: provided always, nevertheless, that whilst apprenticed labourers are imprisoned in any house of correction, or public prison of this Island, the employer or employers of such apprenticed labourers shall not be bound to provide them with any allowance of food, or money to purchase food, but they shall be fed at the public expense; and in all such cases where a weekly payment shall be agreed on as aforesaid, then such weekly money payment or wages shall be recovered before the special justice of the district where such apprenticed labourer shall reside.

Clause 10. Additional clothing to be supplied to apprenticed labourers.

And be it further enacted, that in addition to the clothing directed by the aforesaid Act of this Island for the abolition of slavery to be furnished to apprenticed labourers, every person entitled to the services of apprenticed labourers shall be bound, under the penalty provided by the said Act, to furnish an additional shirt and pair of trousers to each male, and an additional shift and petticoat to each female.

Clause 11. Causes for which apprenticed labourers shall be compelled to serve their employers, and how to be punished for disobedience or neglect.

And be it further enacted, that in all cases of urgent necessity, such as fire, tempest and occurrences of a similar nature, it shall be lawful for the owner, or other person in the management of any property where such necessity may occur, to require and compel immediate and continued service of all or any of the apprenticed labourers attached to such property during such emergency; and every apprenticed labourer who may refuse when called on to perform any such services shall be liable to all such penalties as he or she would be liable to for any undue performance or neglect of work during any time his or her employer may be entitled to his or her services.

Clause 12. Reasonable causes, proved on oath, to be admitted by a justice for the absence of an apprenticed labourer from his employer's service.

And whereas, by the 58th clause of the said Act, certain causes are mentioned which alone exempt an apprenticed labourer from punishment in case of absence from his or her employer's service: and whereas, other causes may arise which ought to exempt an apprenticed labourer from punishment in case of absence: be it therefore enacted, that the several special justices of the district before whom any complaint may be exhibited against any apprenticed labourer for absence from his or her employer's service, may admit any other reasonable cause for such absence which shall be proved on oath to have existed at the time, and which shall appear just to such special justices.

Clause 13. No apprenticed labourer to be arrested for debt, &c., nor taken in execution for any debt of his employer.

And be it further enacted, that no apprenticed labourer during his or her apprenticeship shall be arrested or imprisoned in any action of debt, assumpsit, covenant or other action founded on contract; nor shall any apprenticed labourer be liable to be arrested or taken in execution by virtue of any writ of execution obtained in any such action or actions during his or her apprenticeship; nor shall any apprenticed labourer be liable to be taken in execution for any debt or demand against his or her employer.

Clause 14. Apprenticed labourer, for trespass, &c. against his employer, shall, by order of the special justice, on conviction, perform extra labour, not exceeding one month.

For subsequent offence, to be imprisoned in a house of correction for three months, and worked on the tread-mill.

And be it further enacted, that if any apprenticed labourer shall commit any trespass upon his or her employer's property, whether real or personal, or be guilty of uttering any slander, or of publishing any libel against his or her employer or employers, he or she shall, on conviction thereof before the special justice of the district to which he or she shall belong, be adjudged to perform any number of extra days' labour in the service of his or her employer or employers, or to imprisonment with hard labour for any time not exceeding one calendar month, or solitary confinement not exceeding one week, or if a male, to whipping not exceeding 20 stripes; and if any such apprenticed labourer so convicted shall afterwards be guilty of any of the said offences, and shall be convicted thereof before such special justice of the peace as aforesaid, every such offender shall be committed to the house of correction for such term not exceeding three months as the said justice before whom he or she shall be convicted shall think fit, and be worked on the tread-mill or public works, and if a male, to be whipped, not exceeding 39 stripes: provided always, nevertheless, that this enactment shall not exempt any apprenticed labourer from his or her liability to such actions or prosecutions as other persons of free condition may be subject and liable to in respect of any such offences by him or her done or committed; provided nevertheless, that no such apprenticed labourer shall be liable to be sued or prosecuted both under this Act and under the general law.

Clause 15. Words in the 24th clause of the Abolition Act repealed. At the end of said clause, proviso added.

And be it further enacted, that the words, "if the child be under the age of 18 years," in the 24th clause of the said Act for the abolition of slavery, shall be and the same are hereby repealed; and at the end of the said 24th clause there shall be added the following proviso: "provided always, that such temporary employment shall only be at such distances from the domiciles of such apprenticed labourers as will enable them to return thither by half-past six o'clock in the evening."

Clause 16. Not to be in force until His Majesty's pleasure be known.

Provided always, and be it further enacted, that this Act, or anything herein contained, shall not be in force until His Majesty's pleasure on the same shall be known.

AN ACT for the Establishment of a Rural Police for this Island, and for the Erection of Houses of Correction connected therewith:—(Passed 14 July 1834.)

Preamble.

WHEREAS, in consequence of the changes made in the relations of society in this Island by the provisions of an Act of the Imperial Parliament of the third and fourth year of His Majesty's

Majesty's reign, intituled, "An Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies, for promoting the Industry of the Manumitted Slaves, and for compensating the Persons hitherto entitled to the services of such Slaves," it has become necessary to establish and maintain an efficient body of police in the several parishes of this Island, to be continually in readiness for the preservation of the public peace, and the prompt suppression of all disorders, and also for the better promoting the objects of this Act, it is expedient that this Island should be divided into a certain number of districts; be it therefore enacted, by his Excellency Sir Lionel Smith, Knight Commander of the most honourable Military Order of the Bath, His Majesty's Captain General and Commander-in-Chief of this Island, Chancellor Ordinary and Vice-Admiral of the same, the honourable the Members of His Majesty's Council and the General Assembly of this Island, and it is hereby enacted by the authority of the same, that this Island shall be for the purposes of this Act divided into six districts, and that the same shall be composed of the parish or parishes hereinafter mentioned, and shall be distinguished in the manner following; that is to say,

The Island to be divided into six districts, distinguished as here mentioned.

The parishes of	St. Michael and town of Bridgetown	to form District (A.)
—	Christchurch and St. George - - - — -	(B.)
—	St. Philip and St. John - - - - — -	(C.)
—	St. James and St. Thomas - - - — -	(D.)
—	St. Peter and St. Lucy - - - - — -	(E.)
—	St. Andrew and St. Joseph - - - — -	(F.)

Clause 2.
Five members of the Council, and 11 members of the General Assembly, one of each parish respectively, to be commissioners for executing this Act, and any five or more (one being a councillor) to be a board for transacting the business.

Vacancies, how to be supplied.

And be it further enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that five members of His Majesty's Council, to be appointed by the Board of Council and 11 members of the General Assembly, one from each parish, to be appointed by the speaker for the time being, and so from time to time as vacancies occur, shall be and are hereby constituted commissioners for carrying this Act into execution; and they, or any five or more of them (one at least being of the Council), are hereby deemed and constituted a board for carrying on the business of this Act; and in case any member or members of Council or of the General Assembly so appointed shall leave the Island, become incapacitated, or cease to be a member or members of Council or of the General Assembly, his and their place and places as such commissioner or commissioners shall be considered and are hereby declared to be vacant, and such vacancy or vacancies shall be supplied in manner aforesaid.

The commissioners are authorized to purchase a spot of land in each of the districts, not exceeding two acres, for the establishment of police settlements.

And to take a conveyance for the same to them and their successors, for the purposes mentioned in this Act.

The rights of persons selling any spot of land to be preserved, so far as to render him an eligible freeholder.

And be it further enacted, that the said commissioners, or any board of them, shall be empowered and they are hereby directed to purchase six spots or parcels of land, one in each of the said several districts, in such convenient situations as may be best adapted from their locality for the several police establishments and the erection of houses of correction: provided that none of such spots or parcels of land shall exceed two acres, and that in case the owner or owners thereof cannot agree with the said commissioners, or a board of them, for the price of the same, that a valuation shall be put on such land by a jury, to be summoned by warrant under the hands and seals of the said commissioners, or any board of them, and held in the manner prescribed on laying out new jury roads; and such spots or parcels of land shall be conveyed to and vested in the said commissioners and their successors, to be appropriated for the establishment of police settlements thereat, and the erection of houses of correction and other necessary buildings thereon proper for such establishments: provided always, that if in the appropriation of any such spot or parcel of land for the purposes of this Act it shall so diminish the lands of any person as to deprive such person of the rights and privileges of a freeholder, then and in such case the fee simple of the land so purchased and appropriated as aforesaid shall be held, deemed, taken and considered as still being in such person, so far as to preserve to such person the rights and privileges of a freeholder, but no further or otherwise or for any other purpose whatsoever.

The commissioners are to agree with persons for erecting the necessary buildings, and a signal post at each police settlement.

The commissioners are to advertize for tenders, and to take a bond from the contractor or contractors; to draw orders on the treasurer for payment of all sums of money due, as well for the purchase of the land as for erecting the buildings.

And be it further enacted, that immediately after the passing of this Act, and the appointment of the said commissioners, they, or any board of them, shall assemble together and agree on such plan or plans as may appear to them best adapted for erecting the buildings necessary for such police settlements and houses of correction in each of the said several districts respectively, and shall contract and agree with proper persons for the erection of such buildings on each of the several spots or parcels of land as may be necessary for such police settlements; such buildings to be built according to such plan or plans as aforesaid, and subject to such alterations as from time to time may seem to the said commissioners, or any board of them, to be necessary and expedient; and at each of the said several stations or settlements there shall be erected a signal post, so as to communicate by telegraph with any one or more of the signal posts already established: and the said commissioners, or any board of them, are hereby authorized to execute any agreement or agreements in writing on behalf of the public with any person or persons so to be employed in the erection of such buildings, and for completing the same in a proper and workmanlike manner: provided always, that tenders for such contracts shall be advertized for in one or more of the newspapers of this Island, and that the lowest and most eligible tender, if approved, shall be accepted by the said commissioners, or any board of them, and they are hereby required to take a bond or bonds from the said contractor or contractors in such penalty or penalties as shall seem proper to them, and with two good and sufficient securities to be approved of by them for the due and prompt performance of his or their contract or contracts, and from time to time as any sum or sums of money shall become due, to the person or persons from whom such spots or parcels of land as aforesaid shall have been purchased, or to such contractor or contractors under and by virtue of any such contract or contracts as aforesaid, the said commissioners missioners, or a board of them, shall draw an order or orders, to be signed by five at least of the said commissioners, on the treasurer of the Island, for the payment of such sum or sums of money to such person or persons, or to such contractor or contractors respectively, which order or orders the treasurer is hereby directed to pay out of any monies that may be in the treasury: and the said commissioners, or any board of them, if they shall think proper, are hereby also authorized to appoint some competent person or persons to survey and inspect the said buildings, and see that the same are finished in a faithful and workmanlike manner, and according to the contract or agreement for building the same; and such person or persons so to be appointed shall receive such remuneration for his or their trouble as shall be agreed upon by the said commissioners, or any board of them, and such person or persons, and the said commissioners, or any board of them, are hereby authorized to draw an order on the treasurer of the Island for the payment of such remuneration to such person or persons, which order the treasurer is hereby authorized and required to pay.

The commissioners are to appoint a proper person to inspect the buildings, which are to be finished in a workmanlike manner, and to draw an order for the payment of such person, of such remuneration as they agree with him for.

The commissioners are to appoint a sergeant and number of privates to serve at each district as follows:

And be it further enacted, that it shall and may be lawful for the said commissioners, or a board of them, to appoint one sergeant at each police settlement, who is to be required to keep a good and efficient horse; and to appoint for district (A.) eight privates to serve on foot and eight privates mounted on horses; for district (B.) 12 privates to serve on foot and 12 privates mounted on horses; for district (C.) 12 privates to serve on foot and 12 privates mounted on horses; for district (D.) eight privates to serve on foot and eight privates mounted on horses; for district (E.) 12 privates to serve on foot and 12 privates mounted on horses; for district (F.) 12 privates to serve on foot and 12 privates mounted on horses; all able-bodied men between the ages of 20 and 55 years; and when any such situation shall become vacant by the death of any such sergeant or private, or otherwise, it shall be the duty of the person in charge of such settlement immediately to report the same to the said commissioners, who, or any board of them, shall forthwith fill up all such vacancies by appointments in manner aforesaid; and such sergeants and privates may be removed by the said commissioners, or any board of them, for bad conduct or inefficiency; and such sergeants and privates shall be styled police-officers, and shall form the police force at such settlements; and they shall reside at their respective police settlements when not on actual duty; and the said commissioners, or any board of them, are hereby authorized and required to appoint such police-officers immediately after the passing of this Act.

Vacancies, how to be supplied.

Police officers to be appointed immediately after the passing of this Act, and when not on duty, to reside at their respective settlements.

Clause 6.
Police officers to be indented for not less than one year nor more than six years, and to be paid as follows: each sergeant, 130*l.* per annum; each private serving on foot, 50 l.; and each private serving on horse, 80 l., to be paid monthly out of the public treasury.

And be it further enacted, that the said commissioners, or any board of them, are hereby directed and empowered to indent all persons so appointed and engaged into the said police for a term of not less than one year nor more than six years; and during the time that they shall remain such police officers as aforesaid, they shall receive the following pay; that is to say, each sergeant shall receive the sum of 130 l., current money of this Island, per annum, to be paid to him in equal monthly payments by the treasurer of this Island, on certificate of the special justice of the district to which such police officer shall be attached; and each private serving on foot the sum of 50 l. like current money per annum, to be paid to him in equal monthly payments in manner as aforesaid; and each private serving on horseback the sum of 80 l. like money per annum, to be paid to him in equal monthly payments in manner as aforesaid: provided always, that every such special justice shall, seven days at the least before he issues any such certificate or certificates, give notice in writing to the treasurer of the number of such certificates, the names of the persons to whom given, and the amount of each.

Special justices to notify to the treasurer seven days previous to issuing orders for payment, the number, names of persons, and amount of each.

Clause 7.
Vacancies of sergeants, how to be supplied.

And be it further enacted, that as vacancies occur among the sergeants of such police settlements, privates may for good conduct be promoted to such vacancies from time to time by the said commissioners or a board of them.

Clause 8.
Privates to be numbered, and how to be dressed.

And be it further enacted, that the several privates appointed to the different districts shall immediately on their enrolment be numbered by the sergeant of such district, and shall be provided with the following dress: a blue cloth jacket, to be so made as to button close up to the chin, with a standing collar; on the right side of which shall be worked in white cloth the letter distinguishing the district to which such private belongs, and on the left the individual number of such private according to such enrolment as aforesaid; a pair of dark grey cloth trousers, a black hat, two pairs of strong shoes, and a grey cloth cloak or great coat, such as is furnished to the soldiers in His Majesty's army; and that each of the said sergeants shall be provided with a blue cloth jacket, with standing collar, on each side of which shall be worked in white cloth, the letter distinguishing the district to which he belongs, and with three stripes of white cloth on the left arm, and that in all other respects they shall be dressed as the privates are hereby directed to be; which said uniforms are to be worn by the said police officers at all times when on duty, and to be annually furnished to them at the public expense, under the directions of the said commissioners or any board of them.

Sergeants, how to be dressed.

Uniforms to be provided at the public expense, and to be worn only when on duty.

Clause 9.
Police officers to be armed and accoutred at the public expense, and the arms are to be kept at each settlement.

And be it further enacted, that the said commissioners, or any board of them, are hereby directed to arm and accoutre the said police officers in such manner as they shall deem expedient for the due performance of their duties, and their proper protection as a police; which said arms and accoutrements shall be provided at the public expense, and shall be kept, when not in use, in complete order, and deposited in a room to be appropriated to that purpose at each police settlement.

Clause 10. Duties of police officers prescribed.

And be it further enacted, that it shall be the duty of the sergeants and privates of each police settlement to carry into execution all such orders as they shall receive from the special justice or special justices of the district of each such police settlement, for the prevention or repressing of crimes and enforcing obedience to the law.

Clause 11. Police officers to act as peace officers, and to enjoy all immunities of a constable under the general law;

And be it further enacted, that the sergeants and privates of police shall act as conservators of the peace for the respective districts to which they shall respectively belong; and they shall have, exercise and enjoy within their respective districts all the powers, authorities and immunities which are incident to the office of a constable, and which are by the general law of the land vested in or given to constables; and all such powers, authorities and immunities are hereby declared to be absolutely and fully vested in and given to such sergeants and privates of police: provided always, that when any such police officer shall be suspended, dismissed or cease to belong to such police settlement as aforesaid, all such powers, authorities and immunities shall immediately cease and determine.

All which shall be no longer enjoyed than while he continues in such office.

Clause 12. Any police officer convicted before a justice of the peace of disobedience or improper conduct, shall be fined 5 l., which, if not paid at the time here mentioned, the same shall be notified to the treasurer, who shall deduct such amount from his salary.

And be it further enacted, that in all cases in which any police officer shall be guilty of any disobedience or infringement of any of the bye-laws or regulations for the government of the police establishment, or other impropriety of conduct or breach of duty as such police officer, it shall and may be lawful for any justice of the peace before whom such police officer shall be convicted of any such offence, to impose a penalty on him of not more than 5 l.; and in case the same shall not be paid immediately, or within such time as the justice before whom the conviction shall take place shall direct, notice thereof shall be given by such justice to the treasurer of the Island, who is hereby directed to deduct the amount of such penalty from the salary due to such police officer.

Clause 13. A driver of any carriage, cart, &c., who shall ride thereon (except as is here excepted), or misbehave himself, or cause hurt or damage to any person or property, or who shall be guilty of any other the offences herein set forth, on conviction thereof before a justice of the peace, shall forfeit a sum not exceeding 40 s. currency, and where damage shall be sustained, the further sum of 5 l. to the party injured, and in default of payment, to be committed to gaol or a house of correction for two months, unless the fines be sooner paid.

And whereas obstructions often happen and damage is frequently done on the several highways of this Island by the negligence or wilful misbehaviour of persons driving vehicles thereon; be it therefore further enacted, that if any driver of any carriage, cart or vehicle of any kind shall ride upon any such carriage, cart or vehicle (such carriages or vehicles as are commonly driven or conducted by some person holding the reins of the horses excepted); or if the driver of any carriage, cart or vehicle of any description whatsoever, or any person riding shall by negligence, wilful misbehaviour or other misconduct, cause any hurt or damage to any person or property being upon any highway; or if any driver of any carriage, cart or vehicle whatsoever shall wilfully be at such distance from such carriage, cart or vehicle, that he cannot have the direction or government of any horse or horses or cattle drawing the same (not having employed some proper person to take care of the same), or shall by negligence, wilful misbehaviour or other misconduct, interrupt the free passage of any other vehicle or of His Majesty's subjects, or shall obstruct any highway, and being required by any police officer or constable to pass on or move, shall continue to obstruct the same, every person so offending, and being convicted by any justice of the peace, either upon confession or the oath of a credible witness, shall for every such offence forfeit any sum not exceeding 40 s. currency, to be paid into the public treasury; and in every case where any such hurt or damage shall have been caused as aforesaid, shall further pay such sum not exceeding 5 l., as shall appear to the said justice a reasonable compensation to the person so aggrieved or injured; and in default of payment thereof immediately or within such time as such justice shall appoint, such justice shall commit such offender to the common gaol or house of correction of the district in which such offence shall have been committed, to be there imprisoned for any term not exceeding two months, unless such penalty, together with the costs and compensation (if ordered) be sooner paid: provided always, that nothing herein contained shall deprive or debar any person or persons from any civil or other remedy which he or she may lawfully have on occasion of such damage or injury as aforesaid: provided always, that in all cases in which the offender shall be an apprenticed labourer, he or she shall be punished under the provisions of an Act of this Island, intituled, "An Act for the abolition of Slavery, for the Government of Apprenticed Labourers, and for ascertaining and enforcing the Reciprocal Duties between them and their employers."

Parties to have the right of civil process for recovery of damages.

Offenders being apprenticed labourers to be punished under the Act for the Abolition of Slavery.

Clause 14. A police officer may stop and search any cart &c. suspected of having stolen goods, &c., and carry the same, with the persons, before a justice of the peace, and if the goods shall not be satisfactorily accounted for, the possessor shall be adjudged guilty of a misdemeanor

And be it further enacted, that it shall be lawful for any police officer within the district to which he belongs to stop and search any cart, carriage or vehicle which there shall be reason to suspect of having or conveying any goods, matter or thing stolen or unlawfully obtained, and also to apprehend, search and detain any person who may be reasonably suspected of having or conveying in any manner any goods, matter or thing stolen or unlawfully obtained, and to convey every such person (except such person be in the immediate charge of any cart, carriage or vehicle), as soon as conveniently may be, together with such goods, matter or thing, before some justice of the peace; and if such person shall not give an account, to the satisfaction of such justice, how he or she came by the same, such person shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall suffer as hereinafter mentioned.

Clause 15. Upon the information, on oath, of a credible person, a justice of the peace may issue his warrant to any police officer, to search the house, &c. of any suspected person, where stolen goods shall be suspected to be concealed, and to summon

And be it further enacted, that if it shall be made to appear to any justice of the peace, by the information on oath of one or more credible person or persons, that there is reasonable cause for believing that any goods, matter or thing, stolen or unlawfully obtained, are concealed or otherwise lodged in any house, warehouse, shop, yard, garden, lodging, or any other place, it shall be lawful for such justice, by special warrant under his hand and seal directed to any police officer within his district, or constable as aforesaid, to cause every such place to be entered and searched at any time of the day or by night (if a power for that purpose be expressly given in and by such warrant), and the said justice shall be, and he is hereby authorized, if it shall appear necessary, to empower, in and by his said warrant, any assistance, and, if necessary, to use force for effecting an entry.

In case any goods, &c. shall be found, the police officer is to carry the same, with the person in whose premises they were found, and all others, persons privy to such concealment, before the justice, and if the goods, &c. shall not, within a reasonable time, be satisfactorily accounted for by the person in whose premises they were found, such persons shall be adjudged guilty of a misdemeanor.

any such police officer within his district, or constable, with such assistance as shall be found necessary (such police officer or constable having previously made known to the person or persons having charge in the said place such his authority) to use force for effecting such entry, whether by breaking open doors or otherwise, and if upon search being thereupon made any such goods, matter or things be found, the said police officer or constable is forthwith to convey the same to and before a justice of the peace, or otherwise place and dispose the same in some convenient place of safety, subject to the order and discretion of any such justice of the peace in manner above mentioned; and the said police officer or constable is to apprehend and convey before the said justice of the peace the person or persons in whose house, warehouse, shop, yard, garden, lodging or other place, such goods, matters or things, shall have been found, and all other person or persons found in such house, warehouse, shop, yard, garden, lodging or other place, who shall appear to have been privy to the depositing and concealing such goods, matters or things therein, knowing or having reasonable cause to suspect the same, to have been stolen or otherwise unlawfully obtained, and if such person or persons respectively shall not immediately or within a reasonable time, to be appointed by such justice of the peace for that purpose, make it appear to his satisfaction by what lawful means such goods, matters or things, came to be deposited or situated in such place or places as aforesaid, or that the same were deposited or situated in such place or places without any connivance, knowledge or default on the part of such person or persons respectively, then the person or persons in whose house, warehouse, shop, yard, garden, lodging or other place as aforesaid, any such suspected goods, matters or things, shall have been found, and also every other person or persons so appearing to have been privy to the depositing the same therein, knowing or having cause to suspect the same to have been stolen or otherwise unlawfully obtained, shall be deemed and adjudged guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall suffer as hereinafter mentioned.

Clause 16.
A person charged before a justice with having stolen goods, and declaring himself the agent of another person, by whom he was employed, the justice shall cite such person, and all others who may be interested, before him, and examine them and witnesses on oath; and upon hearing, the person in possession of such goods stolen or unlawfully obtained, to be adjudged guilty of a misdemeanor.
The employer of a carrier or servant to be deemed the lawful owner of the goods.

And be it further enacted, that when any person or persons shall be brought before any justice of the peace charged with having or conveying any such goods, matters or things, stolen or unlawfully obtained, and shall declare himself or herself to have received the same from some other person or persons to have been employed as a carrier, agent or servant, to convey the same for some other person or persons, such justice of the peace is hereby authorized and required to cause every such person or persons, and also, if necessary, every prior or pretended purchaser, or other person through whose possession the same shall appear to such justice to have passed, to be brought before him and examined upon oath respecting such possession of such goods, matter or thing as aforesaid, and also to examine witnesses on oath touching the same, and if upon the whole evidence so to be adduced before such justice as aforesaid it shall appear that any person hath had possession of such goods, matter or thing, and knew or had reasonable cause to suspect and believe that the same or any part thereof had been stolen or unlawfully obtained, every such person shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall suffer as hereinafter mentioned; and the possession of any such goods, matter or thing, by any person who is bonâ fide employed as a carrier, agent or servant, shall be deemed to be the possession of the person or persons who shall have employed such other person as such carrier, agent or servant.

Clause 17.
All offenders for misdemeanors shall, upon conviction, forfeit and pay a sum not exceeding 10 l. into the public treasury, or be imprisoned, with or without hard labour, not exceeding two months, at the discretion of the justice.

Offenders may be bound to the grand sessions.

And be it further enacted, that for every offence hereinbefore declared to be a misdemeanor, or for which no special penalty or punishment is hereinbefore appointed, the offender or offenders shall, upon conviction thereof, and at the discretion of the justice or justices of the peace before whom such conviction or convictions shall take place, either forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding 10 l. into the public treasury of this Island, or shall suffer imprisonment for any term not exceeding two months, with or without hard labour, in the common gaol of this Island, or in the house of correction for the district in which such offence has been committed; and in case any such offender or offenders who shall have been sentenced to pay any such fine or penalty as aforesaid shall not pay the same immediately, or within such time as the said justice or justices shall appoint, it shall be lawful for such justice or justices to commit the offender or offenders to such gaol or house of correction, and for the like term as aforesaid, unless the same be sooner paid: provided always, that nothing herein contained shall prevent any such justice or justices from sending any such offender or offenders to take their trial for such offence or offences at the court of grand sessions for this Island established.

Clause 18.
Articles seized from persons convicted of a misdemeanor (doubtful as to the owner) shall be advertised in some newspaper;

And if not claimed in 30 days, they shall be sold, and the net proceeds, after deducting the expenses, paid into the public treasury.
Perishable articles to be sold immediately.

And be it further enacted, that when any articles shall be seized by virtue of this Act, and the person or persons in whose possession the same shall have been found shall be convicted of a misdemeanor as aforesaid, and it shall be doubtful to whom the same really belong, it shall be lawful for such justice or justices to cause the same to be advertised in some public newspaper or newspapers, in order that persons having a right thereto may claim and receive the same within 30 days from the date of such advertisement or advertisements, on paying the expenses of advertising the same; and if no person shall prove his property and right to any such articles within the said 30 days, the same shall be sold for the best price that can reasonably be gotten for the same, and after deducting the expenses and charges of keeping and advertising the same, the residue shall be paid into the public treasury of this Island: provided always, that where any such articles are of a perishable nature, it shall be lawful for the justice before whom the same shall be brought to order the same to be forthwith sold or otherwise disposed of as to him shall seem fit.

And be it further enacted, that the sergeants and privates of police to be appointed by virtue of this Act, shall each of them, previously to his entering upon the execution of his office, take an oath before the special justice of the peace having the superintendence of the police settlement of which such sergeant or private shall be a member, which oath such special justices of the peace are hereby respectively authorized to administer. The tenor thereof shall be as follows:

Clause 19. Sergeants and privates of police appointed under this Act, shall, before they enter upon their duties, take the oath prescribed.

"I, A. B. do swear, that I will well and truly serve our Sovereign Lord the King, as a police officer for the district of in this Island, according to the best of my skill and knowledge. So help me God."

And be it further enacted, that each such police settlement shall be, and the same is hereby declared to be, under the immediate superintendence of a special justice or justices of the peace of the district in which such police settlement shall be established, and a special justice of the peace shall reside at such police settlement or in the immediate vicinity thereof; and such special justice shall have the power of suspending any police officer belonging to such police settlement, subject to the confirmation or disallowance of such suspension by the Governor or Commander-in-chief for the time being, and the Council: provided always, that the power of such special justice shall cease and determine upon the expiration of the said apprenticeship system.

Clause 20. Each police settlement to be under the superintendence of a special justice of the peace; and a special justice shall reside thereat, who shall suspend any police officer, subject to the confirmation of the Governor and Council, by whom he may be dismissed.

And be it further enacted, that all such persons as shall be condemned to imprisonment with hard labour, at such houses of correction as aforesaid, shall be classed and formed into one or more penal gangs, and shall be employed, under the superintendence of one or more of such police officers to be appointed by the special justice, upon the repair of the highways of the district to which they belong, or such other public works in such district, under such rules and regulations as the said commissioners shall deem fit; and that the persons so employed shall wear such dress or dresses, to be provided at the public expense, with such mark or marks upon them as the said commissioners or a board of them shall appoint; and any person not duly authorized, taking off or assisting any member of such penal gang to take off or conceal his dress, shall for every such offence forfeit and pay, on conviction before any justice of the peace, a sum not exceeding 5*l.* currency, for the use of the public treasury, or be imprisoned, with or without hard labour, at the discretion of the said justice, for a term not exceeding one month in the house of correction for the district in which the offence may be committed, or in the common gaol of this Island.

Clause 21. Persons sentenced to hard labour to be classed and formed into penal gangs, and employed in repairing the highways and other public works in the district, who shall wear a dress with such marks as shall be appointed by the commissioners, to be provided at the public expense.

A person removing, or assisting any member of a gang to conceal, his dress, shall, upon conviction before a justice of the peace, forfeit 5 l., or be imprisoned, with or without hard labour, for one month, at the discretion of the justice.

And be it further enacted, that all persons committed to the houses of correction shall be supplied with proper food at the public expense, the same to be furnished in such manner and of such quality as any board of the said commissioners shall direct and appoint: provided always, that tenders for the said food and all other necessaries for the said establishments respectively shall be contracted for in the same manner as public contracts, and the lowest and most eligible tender, if approved, shall be accepted by the said commissioners or any board of them, and security be given and approved of by them for the due performance of the said contracts; and the said commissioners, or a board of them, are from time to time to draw orders on the treasurer for the payment of the same.

Clause 22. Persons committed to the house of correction to be fed at the public expense.

Tenders for food and other necessaries for the establishments to be contracted for, security being given by the contractors, who are to be paid by orders on the public treasury.

And be it further enacted, that the said commissioners, or any board of them, shall be, and they are hereby authorized and required to appoint a keeper of each house of correction which shall be attached to the said police establishments, and all vacancies shall from time to time be supplied by their appointment, and any such keeper may be removed by the said commissioners, or any board of them, for bad conduct or inefficiency; and every such keeper is hereby declared to be under the immediate superintendence of the special justice or justices of the district in which such house of correction is situate; and every such keeper shall, and he is hereby directed to, keep a book or books, in which he shall regularly enter the names of all persons committed to the said house of correction, the name or names of the justice or justices committing them, the offence for which committed, and the punishment to be undergone by them; which said book or books shall and may always be inspected by the visitors hereinafter mentioned; and each keeper of every such house of correction shall be paid at the rate of 100*l.* current money of this island per annum, and shall receive such pay monthly out of the public treasury, on certificate of the special justice for the district to which he shall belong.

Clause 23. A keeper shall be appointed to each house of correction, who may be removed for bad conduct, &c. The keeper shall enter in a book the names of all persons committed, by whom, for what offence, and the punishment they are to receive; which books shall be inspected by the visitors of the house.

The keeper to be paid a salary, at the rate of 100*l.* currency per annum, monthly, out of the public treasury.

And be it further enacted, that the said commissioners, or any board of them, shall be authorized to hire any place or places for the assembling and keeping together the different police officers, until proper police settlements shall be built under the provisions of this Act.

Clause 24. Placesto be hired until police settlements are built.

And be it further enacted, that in all cases of emergency it shall be lawful for any special justice to summon, either by signal or otherwise, to his assistance any number of police officers from any other police settlement; and that the person having charge at such other police settlement shall furnish the same or not, at his discretion.

Clause 25. In case of emergency, any special justice may summon assistance from another settlement, which the person in charge may furnish or not, at his discretion.

And be it further enacted, that the said police officers may upon reasonable cause visit the several plantations, estates and places within their respective districts, and search for absentees or otherwise; and that every employer or person having the charge of any apprenticed and employers, within 24 hours after the absence of an apprentice, shall, under the penalty of 20 s. currency, report the same at the police settlement.

Clause 26. Police officers may search estates and other places within their district for absentees;

ticed labourers or labourer shall within 24 hours after he or she shall know that any one or more of such apprenticed labourers has absented himself, herself or themselves without the permission of such employer or person having such charge as aforesaid, make a report thereof to the police settlement of the district, and the sergeant of such settlement is hereby required to communicate the same to the police officer of his district, in order that measures may be forthwith adopted for the apprehension of such absentee or absentees; and every person having such charge as aforesaid who shall omit to make such report, shall forfeit for each absentee the sum of 20 s. current money, to be recovered as in the case of servants' wages, and paid into the public treasury.

Clause 27. The commissioners to establish rules and regulations for the internal discipline of the police settlements, observing a classification of prisoners and separation of sexes, and maintaining cleanliness and sobriety among them, which rules are to be hung up in each house of correction.

And be it further enacted, that the said commissioners or a board of them shall frame and establish all proper and necessary rules and regulations for the management and internal discipline of the said police settlements, and shall from time to time, if expedient, alter and add to the same, regard being had to the due classification of the prisoners, and separation of the different sexes, and to the maintenance of cleanliness, order and sobriety among them; all which rules and regulations so to be made by the said commissioners as aforesaid shall be written or printed and hung up in some conspicuous place in the several houses of correction, and the several special justices and police officers are to govern themselves accordingly.

Clause 28. The persons who are declared visitors and inspectors of the respective police settlements.

And be it further enacted, that the Governor or Commander-in-chief of this Island for the time being, the Members of His Majesty's Council, and the Speaker of the General Assembly, are hereby declared to be visitors and inspectors of the several police settlements and houses of correction in this Island.

Clause 29. The commissioners shall meet every three months, to settle and audit the accounts of the respective establishments. The days on which they are to meet.

And be it further enacted, that the said commissioners or a board of them shall once in every quarter, or oftener if they deem it necessary, meet for the purpose of arranging the affairs and auditing the accounts of the said several police establishments, which meetings are to take place on the second Wednesday in January, the second Wednesday in April, the second Wednesday in July, and the second Wednesday in October in each and every year.

Clause 30. The special justices of the peace at each police settlement shall report to the commissioners, quarterly, the state and condition thereof, which report the commissioners are to submit to the legislature.

And be it further enacted, that the special justices of the peace having the superintendence of the said police establishments, shall once in each quarter make to the said commissioners a report of the state and effective strength and condition of the police force at each such settlement, and of the state of the buildings, and the state and conduct of the prisoners confined therein, which report the said commissioners are required to lay before the legislature of this Island as soon as practicable after it has been so received by them, with remarks thereon, as to them shall seem expedient.

Clause 31. In case of martial law, the police force to be under the command of the Governor, and to be subject to the rules, pains, penalties, &c. of the militia. Police officers to be exempted from militia duty, &c.

And be it further enacted, that in case of martial law being proclaimed, the said police force shall be under the immediate command of the Governor, or person in military command for the time being, to be employed in such service as he shall direct, in the same manner as the militia of this Island, and subject to the same rules and regulations, pains and penalties as by virtue of the several Acts which now are or at any time hereafter may be in force in regard to the said militia: provided always, that all persons engaged in the said police shall be exempted from militia duty, serving on juries, and as freeholders on appraisements.

Clause 32. The authorities granted under this Act to special justices shall not interfere with the powers vested in the police magistrates of Bridge Town.

Provided always, and be it further enacted, that the powers and authorities given to special justices and justices of the peace, or police officers and constables, under and by virtue of this Act, shall not interfere with the exclusive jurisdiction, authority, privileges and powers vested or to be vested in the police magistrates, superintendents of police and police officers by an Act of this Island, intituled, "An Act to establish a Police in Bridge Town, in the Parish of St. Michael."

Clause 33. Offenders not to be punished under this Act, and under the general law.

Provided always, and be it further enacted, that it shall not be lawful to prosecute and punish any person or persons both under this Act and under the general law for any offence or offences by him, her or them committed against the provisions of this Act.

Clause 34. A police officer, for obeying the warrant of a special justice, shall not be prosecuted, unless the justice be made a party; and if an action be brought against such justice and police officer, the jury shall find for the police officer, although a verdict be given against the special justice.

And be it further enacted, that no action shall be brought against any such police officer or other person acting by his order and in his aid, for anything done in obedience to the warrant of any special justice of the peace until demand hath been made or left at the usual place of his abode by the party or by his attorney in writing, signed by the party demanding the same, of the perusal and copy of such warrant, and the same hath been refused or neglected for six days after such demand; and if after compliance therewith any such action shall be brought without making the special justice who signed such warrant defendant, or producing and proving such warrant at the trial, the jury shall give their verdict for the defendant, notwithstanding any defect of jurisdiction in the justice; and if such action shall be brought jointly against such special justice and the police officer, on proof of such warrant the jury shall find for such police officer, notwithstanding such defect of jurisdiction as aforesaid; and if the verdict be given against the special justice, the plaintiff shall recover his costs against him, to be taxed in such manner by the proper officer as to include such costs as the plaintiff is liable to pay to such defendant for whom such verdict shall be found as aforesaid.

And be it further enacted, that no action or suit shall be commenced against any such police officer for anything by him done in the exercise of his office until 14 days' notice thereof in writing shall have been given to such police officer, nor after a sufficient satisfaction, tion, or tender thereof, hath been made to the party or parties aggrieved, nor after six calendar months next after the fact committed; and the defendant or defendants in such action or suit shall and may plead the general issue, and give this Act and the special matter in evidence at any trial to be had therein; and if it shall appear that the same was done in the exercise of such office, or if such action or suit shall be brought after the time hereinbefore limited for bringing, or shall be brought without 14 days' notice thereof, or shall be brought after a sufficient satisfaction made or tendered as aforesaid, that then the jury shall find for the defendant or defendants; and if the plaintiff or plaintiffs shall become nonsuit, or suffer a discontinuance of his, her or their action or suit, or if a verdict shall pass against the plaintiff or plaintiffs, the defendant or defendants shall have treble costs, and shall have such remedy for recovering the same as any other defendant or defendants hath or have by law for the recovery of costs of suit in any other cases.

when and how to be brought, what may be pleaded, and what given in evidence.

If not supported, the defendant to have treble costs, with his remedy for recovering the same.

AN ACT to Establish a Police in Bridge Town, in the Parish of St. Michael.— (Passed 29th July 1834.)

No. 11.

WHEREAS it is highly expedient that an effective police be immediately established in Bridge Town, in the Parish of St. Michael, be it therefore enacted by his Excellency Sir Lionel Smith, Knight Commander of the most honourable Military Order of the Bath, His Majesty's Captain-general and Governor-in-chief of this Island, Chancellor Ordinary and Vice-admiral of the same, the honourable the Members of His Majesty's Council, and the General Assembly of this Island, and by the authority of the same, that from and after the passing of this Act the vestry of the parish of St. Michael, or any 10 of them, shall have full power and authority from time to time to prepare bye-laws, ordinances and regulations relative to the several matters and things hereinafter mentioned; that is to say, touching and concerning all offences, evils and inconveniences whatsoever in the said town, or in the streets, squares or places therein, or within the careenage or Mole-head, relative to the exercising, using and carrying on dangerous, noisome or offensive trades of every kind in particular streets or places in the said town; relative to markets in the said town, (but not to extend to regulating or ascertaining the price of any commodity or article of provision which may be brought to sale within the said town); relative to the lighting of the said town in the night; for the better regulating seamen, soldiers and foreigners of every description in the said town, in respect of their being in the streets or elsewhere than in their respective ships, quarters, residences or lodgings in the night time and otherwise, as may appear expedient for preserving the peace of the said town; relative to all suspicious persons loitering about the town in the day or night time, and who can give no good account of themselves; relative to taverns, grogshops, punch or tippling houses, retailers of liquors of every description, hawkers, pedlars, hucksters, porters and boatmen, and to the fixing and regulating the rates at which licences may be granted to them respectively by the justices of the peace appointed to carry this Act into effect; relative to forestalling and regrating; relative to the assize of bread; relative to putrid, damaged or decayed provisions and commodities of every kind; relative to the building of houses within the limits of Bridge Town, or within 300 yards of such limits, and the materials of which such houses shall be constructed, so as to render the same less liable to take fire; relative to decayed buildings and vacant spots of land, and to all other nuisances of what kind soever in the said town, and the abatement of all such nuisances; relative to hogs, dogs and goats going at large or otherwise being in the said town; relative to the firing of squibs, rockets or other fireworks of every kind; relative to the firing of guns, pistols or other fire-arms of every kind; relative to the riding or driving of horses or other cattle of every kind and description whatsoever, furiously, carelessly or negligently in the said town, and to the breaking of horses in the said town; relative to the flying of kites in the said town; relative to the dispersing of all mobs, and for the punishment of all indecencies, swearing, quarrelling or improper behaviour in the streets of the said town; relative to the enforcing the due observance of the Sabbath; relative to trafficking in the streets; and relative to any matter or thing whatsoever which may concern the good government and police of the said town. And it shall be lawful for the said vestry, or any 10 of them, to fix and appoint in all such bye-laws, ordinances and regulations, such reasonable and adequate pains, punishments and penalties for the non-observance, non-performance or breach thereof, as shall seem requisite or expedient, so as such pains, punishments and penalties do not exceed the following limitations; that is to say, in case of a fine, the sum of 25*l.* current money of this Island; and in case of imprisonment the term of one calendar month, with or without being worked on the tread-mill, or on any public works: provided always, that such bye-laws, ordinances, and regulations shall be laid before the Governor, Council and General Assembly of this Island for their approval and confirmation, and the same shall be of no force or validity until they shall have been confirmed by the Governor, Council and General Assembly: provided always, that it shall not be lawful to proceed against or prosecute any person for breach of the said bye-laws, ordinances and regulations, unless complaint thereof be lodged against the offender within two months next after the offences shall be committed.

After the passing of this Act, the vestry of the parish of St. Michael, or any 10 of them, are to make bye-laws, &c. relative to the several matters and things after mentioned; viz.

All offences in the town; all dangerous trades, &c.

Markets.

Lighting the town at night; all suspicious persons loitering about the town.

Taverns, &c., and fixing the rates of licences to be granted them.

Forestalling, &c.

The assize of bread.

Damaged provisions.

Building of houses within the town.

Decayed buildings.

Hogs, dogs, &c.

The firing of squibs; firing of guns.

Riding or driving horses.

Flying of kites.

Dispersing of mobs.

Swearing, quarrelling, &c.

Enforcing the observance of the Sabbath; trafficking in the streets; and generally for the good government of the police of the town.

They are to impose pains and penalties for the non-observance of the said bye-laws. In case of fine, not to exceed 25*l.* currency, and imprisonment one month.

Proviso: Bye-laws not to be in force until confirmed by the Governor, Council and Assembly.

Proviso: No person to be prosecuted for any offence committed after the expiration of two months.

Clause 2. Complaints against offenders under this Act to be tried in a summary manner before the justices of the peace, appointed for carrying it into execution, and on conviction.

And be it further enacted, that every offender against the bye-laws, ordinances and regulations to be made, ordained and established as aforesaid, shall be tried and adjudged in a summary manner by and before the justices of the peace to be appointed for the purpose of carrying this Act into effect, or any two of them; and such justices of the peace or any two of them are hereby authorized, and required, upon any information exhibited or complaint made before them, to summon the party or parties accused, and the witnesses on either side, and in case the party or parties accused shall not appear on such summons (and after oath made of the commission of the offence), to issue a warrant or warrants for apprehending the party or parties offending, in case he, she or they shall be liable to be imprisoned for the offence; and upon the appearance of the party or parties accused, or his or their contempt in not appearing upon proof of being summoned, to proceed to the examination of the witness or witnesses upon oath (which oath they are hereby authorized, empowered and required to administer), and to give such judgment, sentence and determination as shall be just and conformable to law; and in every case of conviction by confession, or upon the oath of one or more credible witness or witnesses, the adjudication shall be executed as follows; that is to say, in case of fine (if the same be not paid) the justices before whom such conviction shall take place, shall issue execution under their hands and seals, for levying and recovering the same, as in the case of servants' wages, and the same shall be executed by a constable; and all fines imposed by this Act, or by any of the bye-laws, rules and regulations to be made in pursuance of this Act, shall be to the King's Most Excellent Majesty, his heirs and successors, for the uses declared by this Act, and when levied such fines shall be paid into the hands of the town clerk of the said town, for the time being, to be appointed as hereinafter mentioned; and every such execution shall contain a clause, that in case there cannot be found sufficient estate or effects of the offender to satisfy the said execution and all charges, that such offender or offenders be and stand committed to the common gaol of this Island, for a certain space of time, to be mentioned in such execution, not exceeding the term of one calendar month, without bail or mainprize, unless the same and all charges shall be sooner paid and satisfied, and in case of adjudication of imprisonment, the offender or offenders shall be taken by the body, and stand committed to the common gaol of this Island, or to the house of correction appropriated for the use of the parish of St. Michael, by warrant under the hands and seals of the said justices for the space of time (not exceeding one calendar month), which shall be adjudged, without bail or mainprize, and be worked on the tread-mill, or on any public works, if so required by such warrant.

The fines imposed shall be levied and raised as servants' wages to His Majesty, his heirs and successors, for the uses of this Act, and to be paid to the town clerk.

The execution to contain a clause to the effect herein mentioned.

Clause 3. The Governor in Council, by and with their advice, is to nominate three justices of the peace (not of the Council or Assembly) for carrying this Act into execution.

Proviso: What the justices are required to do, and what not.

Proviso: The Governor may suspend either of the justices for misconduct, &c., or in case of death, &c. of either of them, other or others shall be appointed, in manner aforementioned. The justices appointed shall take the oath here mentioned before the Governor.

And be it further enacted, that the Governor in Council is hereby authorized and required, immediately after the passing of this Act, by and with the concurrence of the Council, to nominate three justices of the peace (not being members of the Council, or of the General Assembly,) for the purpose of carrying this Act into effect; and such justices of the peace shall also inquire into, hear and determine all other matters cognizable by justices of the the peace: provided always, that it shall not be lawful for the justices of the peace who shall be appointed for carrying this Act into effect to go out of the limits of the said parish of St. Michael to take cognizance of any offences, nor shall they hear and determine any complaints for offences committed without the limits of the said parish of St. Michael; but it shall, nevertheless, be lawful for them, or either of them, to commit any person brought before them on a charge of felony committed in any other parish, and to examine witnesses touching the same: provided always nevertheless, and it shall and may be lawful for the Governor to suspend or remove any such justices of the peace for misconduct or incapacity, and in case of the death, removal for misconduct, absence from the Island, or incapacity to act of any one or more of such justices who shall be so appointed, some other justice or justices of the peace (not being of the Council, or of the General Assembly,) shall from time to time, as occasion may require, be in like manner appointed in his or their place or stead by the Governor in Council; and before entering on his office, every justice of the peace to be appointed under and by virtue of this Act, shall take the following oath before the Governor of the Island for the time being:

"I, A. B., do solemnly and sincerely swear that I will, to the best of my ability, perform the several duties required of me under and by virtue of an Act of this Island, intituled, 'An Act to establish a Police in Bridge Town, in the Parish of St. Michael.' So help me God."

Clause 4. The time that the justices are to sit for hearing complaints.

And be it further enacted, that it shall be the duty of two of the said justices of the peace so to be appointed as aforesaid, to sit daily at an office, to be provided by the said vestry at the expense of the inhabitants of the town, from 10 o'clock in the morning until four o'clock in the afternoon, except Sundays, Christmas-day and Good Friday (unless prevented by other duties authorized by this Act which they may be called on to perform), for the hearing and determining of all complaints and cases cognizable by them.

Clause 5. Where the justices shall reside.

And be it further enacted, that the said justices of the peace shall reside within the limits of Bridge Town.

Clause 6. The justices appointed under this Act shall, on all complaints, receive the fees established by law; and no other justice shall receive any fee on any complaint,

And be it further enacted, that the said justices of the peace, on hearing of all complaints and cases which may be brought before them and heard in a summary manner, shall be entitled to and shall demand the fees established by law to be taken by justices of the peace, and that no other justice of the peace shall demand or receive, or be entitled to demand or receive, any fee whatsoever on any complaint made before him in the limits of Bridge Town, or one mile thereof, anything in any Act or Statute of this Island to the contrary contained notwithstanding withstanding, and that any justice of the peace who shall demand or receive any fee or gratuity whatsoever contrary to the true intent and meaning of this Act, shall forfeit the sum of 50 l. for every such offence, to be recovered as in the case of servants' wages, and paid into the public treasury; and in all cases where any fine or fines shall be recovered before any of the justices of the peace appointed to carry this Act into effect, the party or parties who shall be adjudged to pay the fine or fines, shall also be adjudged to pay the fees which the said justices of the peace shall be entitled to demand, and all such fees shall be received by the town clerk appointed in pursuance of this Act; and when it shall be necessary to issue an execution for the recovery of any fine or fines, or sum or sums of money, the said justices of the peace issuing such execution shall insert the amount of all such fees as shall be payable by the party against whom such execution shall be issued, to the end that the same may be levied and raised at the time of levying and raising such fine or fines, or sum or sums of money mentioned in such execution; and in all other cases where fees shall become payable to the said justices of the peace, or to any police officers or constables, if the same be not forthwith paid by the person or persons liable to pay the same, it shall and may be lawful for the justices of the peace hearing and determining the complaint to issue an execution for the recovery of the same as in case of servants' wages; and in case, for the want of effects, the person of any offender shall be committed to prison for the nonpayment of fees, he or she shall be held in custody for the same for a time not exceeding one calendar month, unless the fees be paid within the said month.

under the forfeiture of 50 l. for each offence, recoverable as servants' wages, and paid into the treasury.

The party fined shall also pay all fees incurred thereby to the town clerk.

And be it further enacted, that the vestry of the said parish, or the major part of them, shall be and they are hereby authorized and required to nominate and appoint to the office of town clerk some fit person, not being a member of the said vestry, whose duty it shall be to receive all fees payable to the justices of the peace and police officers to be appointed under this Act, and all fines imposed by the said justices of the peace for the breach of any bye-laws, ordinances or regulations, to be and confirmed as aforesaid, and all other fines recovered before the said justices of the peace and payable for licences (and which licences the said justices of the peace, or any two of them, shall be and are hereby authorized and empowered to grant to such as they may think fit), which fines, fees and sums of money the said town clerk shall pay over to the treasurer of the Island, and take his receipt for the same; and the said town clerk shall once in every two months account to the said vestry for all sums received by him as aforesaid for fees, fines and licences; and such town clerk before entering upon his office shall himself, together with two sufficient sureties, to be approved of by the vestry, or the major part of them, give bond himself in the sum of 500 l. current money of this Island, and his sureties in the sum of 250 l., like money, each, and such bond shall be taken in the name of the treasurer of the Island for the time being, and made payable to him and his successors in office, and the condition of the said bond shall be that the said town clerk shall pay into the treasury at the end of every month all sums of money that shall or may in any way come into his hands, or be received by him as town clerk, and that he shall also duly account with the said vestry for the same at the expiration of every two months; and it shall be the business of the said town clerk to attend the sittings of the said justices of the peace for the purpose of receiving the said fees, fines and sums of money due and payable for licences, and he shall use all due diligence in collecting the same; and such town clerk shall make an abstract from the records of the said justices of the peace in the form annexed, marked (A.), which abstract shall be made up monthly, and signed by two of the said justices of the peace to be appointed under this Act, who shall certify the correctness thereof under their hands, and the same shall be laid before the vestry of the said parish, and a copy thereof delivered by the said town clerk to the clerk of the House of Assembly; and the said town clerk shall be liable to be removed by the said vestry, or the major part of them, for breach of duty, or other misconduct, and any vacancy which may happen by his removal, death, absence from the Island, or incapacity, shall be supplied from time to time by the said vestry, or the major part of them, by some other person, not being a member of the said vestry.

Clause 7.

The vestry, or the major part of them, are to appoint a town clerk, who is to receive all fees payable to the justices and police officers, as also all fines and all sums for licences, which sums he shall pay to the treasurer, and once in every two months account to the vestry for the same.

The person appointed town clerk shall give a bond to the treasurer, himself in 500 l., and two securities, 250 l. each, for the faithful execution of his duties.

He is to attend the sittings of the justices, to receive all sums payable to them, and to make an abstract of the records monthly, which shall be certified by two of the justices, and laid before the vestry, and a copy thereof delivered to the clerk of the Assembly.

For what cause he may be removed, and how his vacancy shall be supplied.

And be it further enacted, that the said justices of the peace are hereby required to make a record of the amount of all fees due in each particular case, and also a record of the amount of all fines imposed by them, and of all sums of money paid or payable for licences, and to furnish a copy of the same monthly to the treasurer of the Island for the time being.

The justices are to furnish the treasurer, monthly, with a copy of all fees, fines and sums of money paid or payable for the licences, &c.

And be it further enacted, that the vestry of the said parish shall and they are hereby authorized and required to divide the said town into three separate districts, and to nominate and appoint one superintendent of police and 15 police officers, all able-bodied men, to each district; and such superintendents and police officers may be dismissed by the said justices of the peace so to be appointed as aforesaid, or any two of them, for misconduct or inefficiency, and all vacancies which shall happen by the death, dismissal, incapacity or otherwise, of the said superintendents, shall from time to time be filled up by some other persons, to be nominated and appointed by the Governor, by and with the consent of the Council; and all vacancies of the said police officers which shall happen in manner as aforesaid, shall from time to time be filled up by the justices of the peace to be appointed for carrying this Act into effect, or any two of such justices, by the appointment of some other fit persons; and the said vestry, or the major part of them, shall, at the expense of the inhabitants of Bridge Town, provide a station-house in each district for the accommodation of such police officers.

The vestry are to divide the town into three districts, and to appoint to each one superintendent and 15 police officers, who may be dismissed by the justices.

Vacancies of superintendents and police officers, how to be supplied.

Clause 10. Duties of superintendents of the police districts.

And be it further enacted, that it shall be the duty of the superintendents of police of districts to regulate the conduct of the police officers in their respective districts, who are hereby declared to be under their immediate command, and every superintendent of police shall daily make a report at the office of the said justices of the peace, of all occurrences within his district touching any breaches or intended breaches of the peace which may have come to his knowledge, or of which he may have been informed, and of other information which he may deem material, and of the absence of any police officer or officers of his district from duty or of any neglect or dereliction of duty by any of the police officers under his command; and such superintendents are hereby declared to be responsible for the peace of their respective districts, and they are required to be actively and diligently employed in maintaining the same.

Clause 11. Duties of superintendents and police officers.

And be it further enacted, that the said superintendents and police officers shall by turns perform duty both day and night, so that a portion of them shall be constantly on duty, and shall patrol the streets and act as a town guard, both by day and night, for the protection of property and the preservation of peace and good order, and for enforcing the observance of the laws and bye-laws; and they are hereby authorized and required to apprehend all violators of the laws and bye-laws, and take them before the said justices of the peace, to be dealt with according to law, or to lodge complaint against such violators in cases where such offender shall not be liable to be apprehended in the first instance; and although the duties of the said superintendents and police officers will for the most part be performed within their respective districts, yet they are hereby declared to have full power to act as constables within the whole limits of Bridge Town, and within one mile of such limits.

Clause 12. The vestry are to regulate the ordinary duties of the superintendents and police officers, which they shall communicate in writing to the justices.

Superintendents and police officers are to wear distinguishing dresses, which, with arms, &c., are to be supplied by the treasurer.

Police officers to be tried for the causes here mentioned.

And be it further enacted, that the said vestry, or the major part of them, are hereby authorized and required from time to time, as they shall see fit, to make all necessary rules and regulations touching the duties to be performed in ordinary by the said superintendents and police officers, that is to say, respecting what times and in what manner and numbers they shall be ordered out to patrol the streets, and in what manner they shall be armed, and how long they shall continue on duty, which rules and regulations shall be in writing, and shall be communicated by the said vestry to the said justices of the peace and superintendent; and such superintendents and policemen shall wear such distinguishing dresses and badges as the said vestry, or the major part of them, shall direct; and such dresses and arms shall, in the first instance, be supplied by the treasurer of the Island at the public expense; and the said vestry, or the major part of them, shall also establish fines to be paid by the said superintendents and police officers for absence without leave or reasonable cause, to be allowed of by the said justices of the peace, or any two of them, or for other dereliction of duty, which fines shall be recoverable before the said justices in the same manner as servants' wages, and paid into the treasury.

Clause 13. The justices for the preservation of the peace may command the attendance of superintendents and police officers out of their districts.

At any large assemblage of the people, a police officer shall attend to keep peace.

The justices are to be responsible for the peace of the town, and whenever there shall be occasion, they shall swear in special constables.

And be it further enacted, that the said justices of the peace, or any two of them, shall on all extraordinary occasions, when it shall seem necessary for the preservation of the public peace, or to prevent the same from being broken, give such orders as they shall think proper for the attendance of the said superintendents and police officers, at such places and times as the said justices of the peace, or any two of them, shall think proper, which orders the said superintendents and police officers are hereby directed to obey, although such places may be out of their respective districts; and on all occasions where large bodies of the people shall be assembled together, the said justices of the peace, or any two of them, shall issue proper orders to the superintendents, or one or more of them, to attend with a sufficient number of police officers to preserve the peace at such meetings or collections of the people; and one or more of such justices of the peace shall also attend such meetings: And the said justices of the peace appointed for carrying this Act into effect are hereby declared to be especially responsible for the peace of the town, and they are hereby authorized and required to give such orders as they or any two of them shall think fit, to the superintendents and police officers for the due preservation thereof; and the said justices of the peace, or some or one of them, are hereby authorized and required, whenever they or he shall see proper occasion so to do, to appoint and swear in any number of the inhabitants of Bridge Town to act as special constables for the preservation of the peace: provided, nevertheless, that all persons who are exempt by law from serving the office of constable, shall not without their consent be compelled to act as special constables.

Clause 14. In the cases here mentioned, the superintendents, with a portion of police officers, shall attend, and act under the direction of any justice of peace present; and if no justice be present, then he shall take all necessary measures to preserve peace.

Proviso: Police officers not to execute writs but by order of the justices, and the superintendents and police officers shall be sworn before they enter upon their duties.

And be it further enacted, that the superintendents of the respective districts, or any one or more of them, are and is hereby authorized and required, in all cases of emergency, such as the quelling of any riot or riots, assisting in putting out any fire or fires, or other like necessary and pressing occasions, to attend out of his or their district or districts in any part of the town, or within one mile of the limits thereof, with such a portion or number of the police officers under his or their command as he or they shall think fit, and there to act in such manner as he or they shall be directed by any such justices of the peace, or any other justice of the peace who may be present; or in case there shall be no justice of the peace present or known to such superintendents or police officers to be present, such superintendents or police officers shall take such measures as to him or them shall seem proper to preserve the peace: provided always, that such police officers shall not be taken out of their respective districts to execute writs or other process, nor shall any such police officer be permitted, under pain of dismissal, to execute any writ or process whatsoever, at the request of any person or persons whomsoever, other than the said justices of the peace appointed for carrying this Act into execution; and every person who shall be appointed to act as a superintendent intendent or police officer shall, before he shall enter upon the duties of his office, be sworn by the said special justices of the peace, or some or one of them, that he will faithfully, diligently, impartially, and to the best of his ability and knowledge, perform the several duties required of him by law.

Clause 15. The salaries to be allowed the justices of the peace, superintendents and police officers.

And be it further enacted, that the said justices of the peace, town clerk, superintendents and police officers so to be appointed by this Act, shall be paid salaries as follows, that is to say, each justice of the peace the sum of 300*l.* currency per annum, the town clerk the sum of 200*l.* currency per annum, each superintendent the sum of 200*l.* currency per annum, and each police officer the sum of 60*l.* currency per annum.

Clause 16. Disturbers of the peace to be taken before the justices, or either of them; and if the office shall not be open, the superintendent may commit the person, or take bail for his or her appearance.

And be it further enacted, that every superintendent of police and every police officer is hereby empowered and required while on duty to apprehend all loose, idle or disorderly persons whom he shall find disturbing the public peace, or whom he shall see cause to suspect of any evil design, or shall find lying, between sunset and sunrise, in any street or other place, or loitering therein and not giving a satisfactory account of themselves, and bring or cause every such person to be brought before the said justices of the peace or any of them, at their said office, to be dealt with according to law; and in case the said office shall not be open, then to commit every such person or persons to safe custody for the present: provided always, nevertheless, that the superintendent of police of the district in which such person or persons shall be apprehended, if he deem it prudent, shall be and he is hereby authorized to take bail of such person or persons for his or their appearance.

Clause 17. Any person resisting, or aiding or inciting any other person to resist a police officer in the execution of his duty, shall, on conviction, forfeit 10*l.*, recoverable as servants' wages, to the uses of this Act, or be imprisoned two months, unless the fine be sooner paid.

Proviso: Such person not to be exempt from being prosecuted under the general law, but he shall not be punished under both.

And be it further enacted, that if any person or persons shall assault or resist, or shall aid or incite any other person or persons to assault or resist any superintendent of police or police officer in the execution of his duty, every such person or persons, on conviction thereof before the said justices of the peace, or any two of them, shall forfeit and pay a sum not exceeding 10*l.*, to be recovered as servants' wages, and applied for the uses of this Act, and for want of effects to pay the same, shall be adjudged to be imprisoned for any time not exceeding two months, unless the fine be sooner paid: provided nevertheless, that this enactment shall not exempt any such person or persons from his or her liability to be prosecuted or sued under the general law: provided also, that such person or persons shall not be liable to be punished both under this Act and under the general law.

Clause 18. Superintendents and police officers to be invested with all authorities exercised by constables under any law of Great Britain or this Island.

And be it further enacted, that the superintendents and police officers to be appointed by virtue of this Act shall have, possess and exercise all the powers and authorities whatsoever as are had, possessed and exercised by constables, either by virtue of any Acts or Statutes of this Island, or of any Acts or Statutes of Great Britain and Ireland in force in this Island, or by the ancient law of the realm.

Clause 19. Actions against any justice of the peace or police officers, when, how, and for what cause to be brought.

The person sued may plead the general issue, and give this Act in evidence.

And be it further enacted, that no action or suit shall be commenced against any justice of the peace, superintendent, police officer, constable, or any other person, for anything by him done by virtue, or in pursuance of this Act, until 14 days' notice thereof in writing shall have been given to such justice of the peace, superintendent, police officer, or other person, nor after a sufficient satisfaction or tender thereof hath been made to the party or parties aggrieved, nor after six calendar months next after the fact committed; and the defendant or defendants in any such action or suit shall and may plead the general issue, and give this Act and the special matter in evidence at any trial to be held thereupon, and that the same was done in pursuance and by the authority of this Act, or in the exercise of any such office as aforesaid; and if the same shall appear so to be done, or if such action or suit shall be brought after the time hereinbefore limited for bringing the same, or shall be brought without 14 days' notice thereof, or after a sufficient satisfaction made or tendered as aforesaid, that then the jury shall find for the defendant or defendants; and if the plaintiff or plaintiffs shall become nonsuited or suffer a discontinuance of his, her or their action or suit, or if a verdict shall pass against the plaintiff or plaintiffs, the defendant or defendants shall have treble costs, and shall have such remedy for recovering the same as any other defendant or defendants hath or have by law for the recovery of costs of suit in any other cases.

If the plaintiff be nonsuited, or suffer a discontinuance, the defendant shall have treble costs.

Clause 20. The treasurer is to pay the salaries of the justices of the peace and town clerk quarterly, and the salaries of the superintendents and police officers monthly. He is to keep an account of all sums paid by him, and the amount he shall receive from the town clerk.

The vestry, within 10 days after the passing of this Act, and annually after, on the day they impose other parochial taxes, are to impose a tax on all owners

And be it further enacted, that the treasurer of the Island shall pay, and he is hereby directed, without any further order for that purpose, to pay to the said justice of the peace and town clerk, by quarterly payments, such annual sums as aforesaid, and upon the order or certificate of the said justices of the peace, or any two of them, to pay by monthly payments as aforesaid the said annual sums hereinbefore granted to the said superintendents and police officers; and the said treasurer shall keep an account headed as follows; that is to say, "Dr.—Bridge Town Police with the Treasurer—Cr.;" and on the debit side of such account he shall charge all sums paid by him for salaries as directed by this Act; and on the credit side he shall place all sums received by him from the town clerk for fees, fines and licences, and the sum hereinafter required to be raised on the inhabitants of Bridge Town, towards the support of the said police establishment. And the said vestry of the said parish of St. Michael are hereby authorized and required, within 10 days after the passing of this Act, and also annually and every year on the same day or days wherein they affix or impose other parochial taxes, to lay an imposition or tax on all owners of houses and all traders and inhabitants of Bridge Town who shall by the said vestry be thought able to pay a tax, in such of houses, and all traders and inhabitants of Bridge Town, in such ratio as they shall think fit, for raising 2,000 l. current money, towards the support of the police establishment, which being published in church, and confirmed by the Governor in Council, shall be collected by the churchwarden, who shall, after deducting thereout 300 l. for defraying the rent of a police-office and station-houses, pay the balance to the treasurer of the Island, by quarterly payments. The treasurer shall return 5 l. per cent. on all sums payable to him under this Act, except the amount he shall receive from the churchwarden.

such ratio and proportion to the rents of their houses and the profits of their trades and professions, as the said vestry shall in their discretion think fit, for raising the sum of 2,000 l. current money of this Island, per annum, towards the support of the said police establishment, over and above all other parochial taxes and assessments, which being published in the parish church, and allowed and confirmed by the Governor and Council in like manner as other parochial taxes and assessments, and an attachment under the hand and seal of the Governor for the time being granted for raising the same, shall be collected and raised by the churchwarden of the said parish of St. Michael in the same manner as the other parochial taxes collected and raised by him; and the said churchwarden for the time being of the parish of St. Michael shall and he is hereby directed and required, after deducting a sum not exceeding 300 l. current money as aforesaid, for and towards defraying the rent of the police office and station-houses before mentioned, to pay over to the treasurer of this Island for the time being the balance of the said sum of 2,000 l., payable as aforesaid by the inhabitants of Bridge Town, in support of the said police establishment, by four equal quarterly payments, the same to commence and be computed from the end and expiration of 10 days next after the passing of this Act; and the said treasurer shall have and receive for his pains and trouble in attending to the directions of this Act a commission of 5 l. for every 100 l. which shall be received by or paid over to him under the authority of this Act, excepting the sums paid over to him by the churchwarden of the said parish of St. Michael, on which he shall not be entitled to charge commissions: and it is hereby declared, that the said sum of 2,000 l. per annum, hereinbefore directed to be raised by the said vestry, is hereby granted to the King's most Excellent Majesty, his heirs and successors, for the public use of this Island as aforesaid; and the said vestry and treasurer of the Island are hereby made liable to account to the King's most Excellent Majesty, his heirs and successors, for the due appropriation of the same in the manner aforesaid.

Clause 21. After the passing of this Act, the Act passed on the 26 October 1813 is repealed, except as here mentioned.

And be it further enacted, that from and after the passing of this Act, a certain Act of this Island which passed the 26th day of October 1813, intituled, "An Act to authorize and empower the Vestry of the parish of St. Michael to raise a sum not exceeding the sum of 2,000 l., current money of this Island, in manner and for the uses and purposes thereinafter mentioned," shall be and the same is hereby declared to be repealed, except so far as it may be necessary to enforce the payment of any sum or sums of money already assessed by the said vestry in pursuance of the said Act, and the keeping up of the present town-watch until the police established by this Act shall be completed.

Clause 22. Declares who shall be exempt from militia duty, &c.

And be it further enacted, that the justices of the peace, town clerk, superintendents and police officers, who shall be appointed for carrying this Act into effect, shall be and they are hereby declared to be exempt from the performance of militia duty, serving on juries, and as freeholders on appraisements.

Clause 23. The appointment of constables not prevented. Proviso: Such constables to attend the office of the justices of the peace, to receive writs, &c., but they are not to watch at night.

And be it further enacted, that nothing in this Act contained shall extend or be construed to extend to prevent the appointment of constables for the parish of St. Michael at the quarter sessions, in the same manner as the same are now appointed for the said parish; provided always nevertheless, that the 12 constables selected from the inhabitants of Bridge Town by the justices of the peace holding such courts of quarter sessions, shall attend the office of the said justices of the peace to be appointed for carrying this Act into effect, for the purpose of receiving all writs, warrants, summonses and other process, and duly executing the same, and they shall be bound to obey all the lawful orders of the said justices of the peace, but they shall not be compelled to watch during the night.

Clause 24. Who shall be the Governor.

And be it further enacted, that within the meaning and for the purposes of this Act every person who for the time being shall be in the lawful administration of the government of this Island, shall be taken to be the Governor thereof.

AN ACT for the Temporary Establishment of a Rural Police for this Island:— 24 April 1835.

Preamble.

WHEREAS the Act for the Establishment of a Rural Police has been disallowed by His Majesty in Council: and whereas it is absolutely necessary, for the preservation of the public peace, that a rural police force shall be forthwith appointed; be it therefore enacted, by his Excellency Sir Lionel Smith, Knight Commander of the most honourable Military Order of the Bath, His Majesty's Captain-general and Governor-in-chief of this Island, Chancellor Ordinary and Vice-admiral of the same; the Honourable the Members of His Majesty's Council; and the General Assembly of this Island; and by the authority of the same; that it shall be lawful for his Excellency the Governor to nominate and appoint, immediately after the passing of this Act, the several sergeants, keepers of houses of correction and police officers for the respective districts hereinafter mentioned; that is to say, one sergeant and one keeper of the house of correction for each district, and that for the parish of St. Michael and town of Bridge Town, which shall form one of such districts (A), there shall be appointed eight privates to serve on horseback and eight privates to serve on foot; for the parishes of Christ Church and St. George, which shall form district (B), 12 privates to serve on horseback and 12 privates to serve on foot; for the parishes of St. Philip and St. John, which shall form district (C), 12 privates to serve on horseback and 12 privates to serve on foot; for the parishes of St. James and St. Thomas, which shall form district (D), eight privates to serve on horseback and eight privates to serve on foot; for the parishes of St. Peter and St. Lucy, which shall form district (E), 12 privates to serve on horseback and 12 privates to serve on foot; and for the parishes of St. Joseph and St. Andrew, which shall form district (F), eight privates to serve on foot and eight privates to serve on horseback: and when and so soon as they are respectively appointed to such situations, they shall hold and exercise their respective offices under such rules and regulations as shall be settled by the Council and Assembly, and approved of by the Governor or Commander-in-chief for the time being.

Clause 1. After the passing of this Act, the Governor shall appoint sergeants, policemen and keepers of the houses of correction, as here mentioned, for the several districts of the Island.

Rules for the guidance of the police to be settled by the Council and Assembly, and approved by the Governor.

2. And be it further enacted, that when any vacancies shall occur in any situation as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for the several special justices of the peace in their respective districts to appoint fit and competent persons to fill the same; provided that no such appointment shall be valid until the same shall have been confirmed by the Governor or Commander-in-chief for the time being.

Vacancies, how to be supplied.

3. And be it further enacted, that it shall be lawful for the several special justices in their respective districts to suspend the said several sergeants, keepers of houses of correction and policemen for misconduct or inefficiency, or wilful disobedience of the said rules and regulations; and that it shall be lawful for the Governor or Commander-in-chief for the time being to confirm or disallow such suspension, and, in case it shall seem fit, to dismiss the person so suspended by the special justice as aforesaid.

Suspension of police officers to be confirmed or disallowed by Governor.

4. And be it further enacted, that the several sergeants, keepers of houses of correction and police officers, appointed by virtue of this Act, shall be always on duty in such place in the respective districts to which they belong, as they have heretofore resided at, or which may be for that purpose provided for them, subject to the lawful commands of the several special justices in their respective districts, and to such rules and regulations as are hereinbefore directed to be made concerning the same; and the treasurer of the Island is hereby authorized to hire such places for the purposes aforesaid; and the said sergeants and policemen shall act as conservators of the peace for their respective districts, and they shall have, exercise and enjoy all the powers, authorities and immunities which are incident to the office of a constable or police officer, under any Act of this Island or any Act of the Imperial Parliament in force in this Island, which are by the general law vested in constables.

Regulations to be observed by police officers.

And they are to exercise the authority of constables.

5. And be it further enacted, that each of the sergeants hereby appointed shall be required to keep a good horse, and shall receive a salary at the rate of 130 l. current money of this Island per annum, and each of the said policemen serving on horseback shall receive a salary at the rate of 80 l. like current money per annum, and each policeman serving on foot shall receive a salary at the rate of 50 l. like current money per annum; and the keepers of the prisons hereby appointed shall receive a salary at the rate of 100 l. like current money per annum, which said several salaries shall be paid by the treasurer of the Island, in equal monthly payments, on the certificates of the several special justices of the peace, that the same are due.

Salaries to be paid monthly to sergeants and policemen, &c. on certificates from the special justice of the district.

6. And be it further enacted, that all apprenticed labourers committed to the house of correction hereinbefore mentioned, shall be subject to such rules and regulations as shall be framed by the said several special justices respecting their classification, maintenance and discipline, and to such punishments for disobedience of the said rules and regulations as apprenticed labourers are subject to under the Act for the abolition of slavery in this island: provided that no such rules and regulations shall be valid until they have been approved of by the Governor and Commander-in-chief for the time being.

Special justices to frame rules, &c. for apprenticed labourers, subject for the approval of the Governor.

7. And be it further enacted, that this Act shall continue in force for the period of six months from and after the passing of the same, and no longer.

This Act to be in force for six months.

BRITISH GUIANA, 1834.

AN ORDINANCE to establish and constitute Inferior Courts of Criminal Justice in British Guiana.

Preamble. Reference to order in Council of 20 June 1831, authorizing inferior courts of criminal justice to be instituted.

WHEREAS by an order of His Majesty in Council, bearing date the 20th June 1831, His Majesty has been graciously pleased to authorize the establishing of inferior courts of criminal justice within the colony of British Guiana, having jurisdiction to a certain extent as therein defined:

Expediency of instituting such inferior courts.

And whereas for the more ready correction and punishment of offenders, and for the due maintenance of the public peace and tranquillity, it is expedient to establish, constitute and erect within the said colony such inferior courts:

Justices of the peace in and for the colony of British Guiana to be appointed by the Governor.

Not less than three for each parish.

Berbice to be considered as four parishes.

1. Be it therefore enacted, by his Excellency the Lieutenant-governor of the colony of British Guiana, with the advice and consent of the Court of Policy thereof, that in addition to the fiscals of this colony, there shall be appointed by his Excellency the Governor, acting in the name and on the behalf of His Majesty, such other number of justices of the peace within the said colony, as shall be requisite for upholding the laws, and for the prompt administration of justice; provided however, that the said justices of the peace shall be appointed in the proportion of not less than three to each parish; the district of Berbice being considered for the purposes of this Act, equal to four parishes.

Each justice of the peace, before he enter upon his office, shall take an oath.

2. And be it further enacted, that each of the said justices of the peace, before he shall enter upon the duties of his office, shall appear before the Governor of the colony, and take and subscribe an oath to be administered to him by the Governor in the following terms:

Form of oath.

"I, A. B. do swear that I will to the best of my knowledge and ability, faithfully execute and perform the duties of the office of a justice of the peace, in and for the colony of British Guiana, without fear, favour or partiality. So help me God."

Every justice of the peace shall take cognizance of offences within the limits of his authority.

May refer complaint to the next sessions of an inferior court.

May commit accused party, unless bail be given for appearance before sessions.

3. And be further enacted, that every such justice of the peace shall take cognizance of any complaint which may be submitted to him against any person for such breaches of the law as may now or hereafter be defined to come within the limits of the authority of any such justice of the peace; every such justice of the peace being hereby empowered in every case where he considers it expedient to refer any such complaint to the next sessions of an inferior criminal court, and in the mean time to commit the accused party to prison, unless sufficient bail be given for the appearance of such accused party at the next session of such court.

Once in every month, or oftener, an inferior court of criminal justice to be convened in each parish.

To hear and determine all cases of breach of the peace.

Extent of punishments and fines limited.

4. And be it further enacted, that once in every month, or oftener if it shall be deemed necessary by any one of the fiscals, or by the senior justice of the peace of the parish, shall be convened a court of not less than three of such justices of the peace, which shall sit at any convenient place within the parish as shall be named by such fiscal or senior justice, and shall hear and determine all cases of breaches of the peace, petty thefts, and other offences committed within the respective jurisdiction of the supreme courts of criminal justice of the colony, and at every sessions of such inferior criminal court, the senior or any other justice of the peace as may be agreed among themselves shall preside, and such court shall have power to inflict a punishment not other than or exceeding imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for a term not exceeding three months, or fine not exceeding 20*l.*, or whipping not exceeding 39 stripes, this particular punishment being limited to males only; or any two or more of such kinds of punishment together within the limits aforesaid: provided, however, that if at any time before trial it shall appear to said court that the case before it is of such a nature as ought to be tried before a supreme court of criminal justice, such inferior court is authorized to commit the accused party to safe custody, or to admit him to bail, and to report the case to the fiscal for prosecution before either of the supreme courts of criminal justice of the colony having jurisdiction in such case.

Inferior court, before trial, may refer the case to the supreme court.

Chief justice, or one of puisne judges, may discharge from imprisonment or admit to bail.

5. And be it further enacted, that it shall be lawful for the chief justice, or first or second puisne judge, but for no other judge or justice of this colony, to discharge any person in a summary way from imprisonment before trial, or to admit him to bail, on proof being made to the satisfaction of such chief justice or puisne judge that such person ought in due course of law to be discharged or admitted to bail.

Any fiscal, if present in parish at the time of sessions, may preside.

No person to be tried by inferior court, unless it be formed of one fiscal and four justices.

6. And be it further enacted, that in the event of any one of the fiscals being in any country parish at the time of the sessions of the inferior court of criminal justice thereof being held, such fiscal shall, if he see fit, preside at such sessions, anything herein contained to the contrary hereof notwithstanding: provided, however, that no person of free condition shall be tried before any inferior court of criminal justice, unless one of the fiscals and four justices of the peace at least shall form such court, and at every sessions of an inferior court of criminal justice held in George Town or New Amsterdam, a fiscal shall preside, except prevented by illness or unavoidable absence, in either of which cases the senior or any other justice of the peace in each town shall take his place.

7. And

7. And be it further enacted, that every justice of the peace shall take down in writing notes of his examinations of all persons, a record of which, as well as of all other particulars of the cases which may be brought before him, he shall keep in the form hereunto annexed, which record shall be laid before the inferior court of criminal justice of the parish in which he may reside at each of its sessions, and a record book shall be kept in like manner by every inferior court of criminal justice of each parish in the colony, a copy of which record of such inferior court, together with copies of the records of the respective justices of the peace acting alone, shall quarterly be laid before the Governor and Court of Policy.

Every justice to take down, in writing, notes of examinations, and keep a record thereof, and of particulars of cases.

Every inferior court to keep a record of proceedings.

And be it further enacted, that whenever any slave shall commit any of the offences hereinafter pointed out and defined, it shall be lawful for the owner or person having charge or control of such slave, or for any other person having cause of complaint against any such slave, for or on account of any such offence, to apply to any one of the justices of the peace, setting forth in writing the nature of the offence, and when the same was committed or supposed to have been committed; and every such justice of the peace is hereby authorized and empowered to take cognizance of every such complaint; and in case the slave against whom such complaint is preferred shall, in the judgment of such justice of the peace, be deemed guilty of the offence wherewith he or she stands charged, and shall not be considered by such justice to merit or deserve any other greater or severer punishment than is hereby permitted and allowed to be adjudged by any single justice of the peace, the said justice of the peace shall be and he is hereby authorized to order and award such punishment to be inflicted upon such slave as may be commensurate with the offence, such punishment not to exceed 15 stripes with a cat-o'-nine-tails (this particular punishment being limited to males only), or imprisonment, solitary or otherwise, in the colonial gaol, house of correction, or other place of confinement previously approved by a duly licensed medical practitioner, with or without hard labour, on the tread-mill or otherwise, or hard labour or otherwise in or out of place of confinement during the day, as the case may require, for a period not exceeding 14 successive days, the offending slave in every case of confinement to be supplied with a sufficient quantity of farinaceous food once at least in every 12 hours, and with a proper allowance of water; and that no doubt may exist as to the nature of the offences of slaves punishable by this Act, be it, and it is hereby further declared, that the said last-mentioned offences are as follows: that is to say, neglect of work or duty, whether from obstinacy, determination on idleness, combination not to perform a reasonable portion of labour, and to yield obedience to proper orders at all times, or to comply with orders given in cases of emergency specified by law; creating a disturbance or riot; violence of language or gesture to those in authority over them; violence to any person by language, ill-usage or actual assault; indecency of conduct; insubordination; resistance to the infliction of any punishment awarded; aiding or assisting to prevent the same being carried into effect; refusing to obey an order to carry or aid in carrying the same into effect; inducing or persuading, or offering resistance to authority; refusal to obey orders; killing, cutting, chopping or ill-treating animals; neglect of person or depravity of habit; inflicting a wound or causing an artificial sore; wilful neglect of sores; practising or pretending to obeah; injury to property; wilfully injuring growing crops or produce, whether in process of manufacture or manufactured; wilful injury to machinery or property in or about the buildings; wilful injury to punts, boats or craft of other description; tradesmen, boilers, boatmen and others charged with particular trusts, wilfully neglecting and injuring their immediate charge; wilful injury to property generally, whether of sluices, dams, bridges, provisions, provision grounds and other matters, which can legally be considered property; or endangering property by fire; wantonly trespassing on premises; or entering upon lands or other buildings without permission from the owner or occupier thereof; selling or bartering their allowance of clothing and provisions without permission of owner or person in authority over them; ill usage and carelessness of their clothing, provisions and tools, or improperly making away with either; theft, whether accompanied by a fraction or otherwise, principals as well as accessories; running away, whether accompanied by any act of insubordination herein defined or theft; living by plunder or as bush negroes; or attempting to leave the colony, or enticing or persuading others to do so; absenting themselves from the estate or premises after eight o'clock at night without permission; harbouring runaways; intoxication, gambling in, or out of houses; holding meetings or dances without lawful permission, or being present thereat without permission; galloping of horses through the streets; riding or driving furiously; and for not keeping on the proper side of the road; crowding on public roads, streets, bridges or stellings, to the obstruction of passengers or the annoyance of the neighbours; committing nuisance; carrying fire-arms without a pass from the owner or person in authority over them, or being accompanied by such person carrying weapons or bludgeons on the roads, streets or elsewhere, cutlasses for agricultural purposes excepted during the day, and weapons for the use of watchmen by day and night; firing guns, crackers or squibs, or wantonly occasioning alarms; trafficking in sugar, rum, molasses, coffee, cocoa or plantains, without a pass from some person in authority over them; refusing to work for hire, according to the Act regulating the conduct of registered cart drivers and porters.

Every justice of the peace may take cognizance of offences committed by slaves.

Complaint to be in writing.

Power of single justice of the peace restricted to 15 stripes.

Confinement for 14 successive days.

9. And be it further enacted, that if any person shall compel, or shall by any means hire or induce any slave to perform or engage in any labour on any of the six working days of the week, without the sanction or authority of the owner, manager or other person having the care, charge or superintendence of such slave, such person so offending shall, on conviction thereof before an inferior court in respect of every such slave, incur a fine of not less than 20*s.*, nor more than 10*l.*

No person to hire a slave on a week-day, without authority from owner, &c.

Justices of the peace, and inferior courts of criminal justice, to administer oaths.

10. And be it further enacted, that in all cases of which any justice of the peace, or inferior court of criminal justice, is hereby, or shall hereafter be required or authorized to take cognizance, it shall and may be lawful for such justice or inferior court, and he or it is hereby authorized and empowered to administer an oath or oaths, affirmation or affirmations, to any person or persons to whom it shall and may be right and proper to administer such oath or oaths, affirmation or affirmations.

Authority of every justice of the peace to extend over the whole colony.

11. And be it further enacted, that for the purposes of this Act it shall be lawful for any justice of the peace of this colony to take cognizance of any offence committed in any other parish than that in which he may reside, and to form one of any inferior court of criminal justice holding its sessions in any parish of the colony, and that to all and every warrant or summons issued by any justice of the peace due obedience throughout the colony shall be paid.

No justice of the peace, being the owner or manager of a slave, to convict, or assist in the conviction of, such slave.

12. And be it further enacted, that no justice of the peace who shall be the owner or manager of any slave shall be authorized by himself, or in conjunction with any other justice or justices of the peace, to adjudge, by conviction or otherwise, any such slave to punishment under or by virtue of this Act; and that every justice of the peace who shall be convicted of knowingly committing any such offence, shall be liable and subject to the like penalties and punishments hereinafter provided and declared against any person punishing a slave by whipping.

Persons convicted in fine and penalty, and not paying, to be committed to gaol.

13. And be it further enacted, that if any person who shall by any inferior court of criminal justice be adjudged under and by virtue of this Act to pay any fine, penalty or sum of money, such person shall, if the fine be not forthwith paid, be committed, if in Demerara or Essequibo, to the common gaol in George Town, or if in Berbice, to the common gaol in New Amsterdam, for any term not exceeding two calendar months, unless payment be sooner made.

Imprisonment may be solitary or otherwise, with or without hard labour, at discretion of inferior court.

14. And be it further enacted, that when any person shall be convicted by an inferior court of criminal justice of any offence punishable under this Act for which imprisonment may be awarded, it shall be lawful for such inferior court to adjudge the offender to be imprisoned, or to be imprisoned and kept to hard labour, in the common gaol or house of correction, or other place of confinement, previously approved by a duly licensed medical practitioner; and also to direct that the offender shall be kept in solitary confinement for the whole or any portion or portions of such imprisonment, or of such imprisonment with hard labour, as to the court shall seem meet.

Justices of the peace to appoint constables, and for what purposes.

15. And be it further enacted, that every justice of the peace shall appoint and swear in such persons in the parish in which he resides as he shall think fit to act as constables generally, or for any special purpose, which constables shall obey and execute all warrants and orders of the inferior courts of criminal justice, and of all and every the justices of the peace; and that to all such constables being so appointed due obedience shall be paid in the execution of their offices, and that every justice of the peace in either George Town or New Amsterdam to whom a complaint shall be made, shall, if he think fit, refer the same to the fiscal or other sitting magistrate.

Obedience to be paid to constables.

A person in the act of committing an offence, in this Act, may be arrested without warrant.

16. And for the more effectual apprehension and discovery of all offenders punishable under this Act, be it enacted, that any person found committing any offence punishable by virtue of this Act may be immediately apprehended, without a warrant, by any peace officer, or by the owner of the property on or with respect to which the offence shall be committed, or by his servant, or any person authorized by him, and forthwith taken before some neighbouring justice of the peace to be dealt with according to law; and if any credible witness shall prove upon oath before a justice of the peace a reasonable cause to suspect that any person has in his possession, or on his premises, any property whatsoever on or with respect to which any such offence shall have been committed, the justice may grant a warrant to search for such property; and any person to whom any property shall be offered to be sold, pawned or delivered, if he shall have reasonable cause to suspect that any such offence has been committed on or with respect to such property, is hereby authorized, and if in his power, is required to apprehend, and forthwith to carry before a justice of the peace, the party offering the same, together with such property, to be dealt with according to law.

A justice of the peace, on good grounds of suspicion, may grant a search warrant.

Any person to whom stolen property is offered, may seize party offering it.

Ordinance of 1 March 1832 repealed.

17. And be it further enacted, that from and after the publication of this ordinance, an ordinance entitled "An Ordinance to define Offences committed by Slaves, and to establish a summary Jurisdiction for the Punishment thereof," passed by this court on the 1st March 1832, shall be and the same is hereby repealed; the powers hitherto held by the deputy-fiscals in Demerara and Essequibo, and by the civil magistrates in Berbice, not particularly specified in this ordinance, and not being repugnant to the tenor hereof, being hereby transferred to the justices of the peace; and in all ordinances of this court, or Acts or ordinances, or resolutions of the former courts of policy, or civil government of the respective late colonies, now districts of Demerara and Essequibo, and of Berbice, wherein the deputy-fiscals or civil magistrates are mentioned, the same shall be hereafter taken and held to apply to the justices of the peace: provided, however, that all offences heretofore committed against the said last-mentioned ordinances, and not already punished, shall be punishable under and by virtue of this Act.

Powers of deputy fiscals transferred to justices of the peace.

Punishment of offences against ordinance of 1 March 1832, reserved.

18. And

18. And be it further enacted, that on and from the 1st day of March 1834 the punishment of slaves by whipping, except upon conviction before a justice of the peace, or an inferior court of criminal justice, or by sentence of either of the supreme courts of criminal justice of this colony, shall be, throughout the colony of British Guiana, unlawful and illegal; and every owner, manager, or other person, who, having the care and charge of any slave, shall inflict, or directly or indirectly cause to be inflicted, upon any slave a punishment by whipping, shall, upon conviction thereof before an inferior court, be liable to pay a fine not exceeding 20 l., with or without imprisonment, not exceeding three months: provided, however, that this shall not be construed to prevent the correction or punishment of children of both sexes under the age of 10 years, in the same manner and to the same extent as children at school.

On the 1st March 1834, punishment of slaves by whipping, except upon a conviction before a justice of the peace or inferior court, or in virtue of sentence of supreme court, illegal.

Except the correction of children under the age of 10 in the same manner, and to the same extent, as children at school.

19. And be it further enacted, that all fines and pecuniary penalties incurred and levied under this Act shall be paid into the colonial chest of the colony.

Application of pecuniary fines and penalties.

20. And be it further enacted, that the summonses, warrants, convictions, commitments, bail-bonds, recognizances of witnesses to be used and oaths to be administered by the said justices, when acting singly, shall be in the forms annexed.

Forms of summonses, &c. to be used by single justice.

And that no ignorance shall be pretended of this our ordinance, these presents shall be printed and published in the customary manner.

Thus done and enacted at our Extraordinary Assembly, held at the Court House, George Town, Demerara, this 22d day of January 1834, and published the 23d, following.

British Guiana, 8 February 1834. No. 14.

AN ORDINANCE for the Classification and Registration of Slaves hereafter to become and be Apprenticed Labourers.

ORDINANCE enacted by his Excellency Major-general Sir James Carmichael Smyth, Baronet, Companion of the most honourable the Military Order of the Bath, Knight Commander of the Royal Order of Hanover, Knight of the Austrian Imperial Order of Maria Theresa, Knight of the Russian Imperial Order of St. Waldimir, Lieutenant-governor and Commander-in-chief in and over the Colony of British Guiana, Vice-admiral and Ordinary of the same, &c. &c. &c., by and with the advice and consent of the Honourable Court of Policy of the said Colony.

Unto all to whom these presents shall or may come greeting, be it known:

WHEREAS, by the fourth section of an Act of the Imperial Parliament of Great Britain and Ireland, made and passed in the third and fourth years of His Majesty's reign, intituled, "An Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies, for promoting the Industry of the Manumitted Slaves, and for compensating the Persons hitherto entitled to the Services of such Slaves," after reciting that whereas it was expedient that all such apprenticed labourers should, for the purposes thereinafter mentioned, be divided into three distinct classes, the first of such classes consisting of prædial apprenticed labourers attached to the soil, and comprising all persons who in their state of slavery were usually employed in agriculture, or in the manufacture of colonial produce, or otherwise, upon lands belonging to their owners; the second of such classes, consisting of prædial apprenticed labourers not attached to the soil, and comprising all persons who in their state of slavery were usually employed in agriculture, or in the manufacture of colonial produce, or otherwise, upon lands not belonging to their owners; and the third of such classes consisting of non-prædial apprenticed labourers, and comprising all apprenticed labourers not included within either of the two preceding classes; it was therefore enacted that such division as aforesaid of the apprenticed labourers into such classes as aforesaid, should be carried into effect in such manner and form, and subject to such rules and regulations as should for that purpose be established under such authority and in and by such Acts of Assembly, ordinances, or orders in Council as thereinafter mentioned: provided always, that no person of the age of twelve years and upwards should by or by virtue of any such Act of Assembly, ordinance, or order in Council, be included in either of the said two classes of prædial apprenticed labourers, unless such person should for twelve calendar months at the least next before the passing of that present Act have been habitually employed in agriculture or in the manufacture of colonial produce: and whereas, by the 16th section of the said Act of Parliament, after reciting that whereas it was necessary that various rules and regulations should be framed and established for ascertaining, with reference to each apprenticed labourer within the said colonies respectively, whether he or she belonged to the class of attached prædial apprenticed labourers, or to the class of unattached apprenticed labourers, or to the class of non-prædial apprenticed labourers, it was enacted and declared that nothing in that Act contained extended, or should be construed to extend, to prevent the enactment by the respective Governors, Councils and Assemblies, or by such other local legislatures as aforesaid, or by His Majesty, with the advice of His Privy Council, of any such Acts of General Assembly, or ordinances, or orders in Council, as might be requisite for making and establishing such several rules and regulations as aforesaid, or any of them, or for carrying the same, or any of them, into full and complete effect: and whereas it is essential to the interests of all concerned in this colony, that the rules and regulations for the purposes hereinbefore recited should be framed and established with as little delay as possible:

Sect. 1. Be it therefore enacted, by his Excellency the Lieutenant-governor of the colony of British Guiana, with the advice and consent of the Court of Policy thereof, that, on or before the 1st day of May of this present year 1834, every person who shall be resident within this colony, and who, on the 20th day of March next, shall be in possession of any slave or slaves within the same, whether as proprietor, attorney or trustee, or in whatever other name or title he may hold the same, not herein described, shall respectively make and deliver into the office of the registrar of slaves of the respective districts of Demerara and Essequibo, and of Berbice, to which such slave or slaves may belong, such schedule or schedules, in writing, as are hereinafter mentioned; that is to say, every person in possession of any slave or slaves as aforesaid, shall so make and return a schedule in writing, in duplicate, of every slave in his or her possession on the said 20th day of March next, therein specifying, in the first place, his or her own name and description, and the name and description of such other person or persons, being the owner or owners of such slave or slaves, on whose behalf the schedule is made, together with the name of the plantation (if any) to which such slave or slaves is or are attached, and the right or character in which the party making such schedule holds possession of and claims title to such slave or slaves, namely, whether as proprietor, attorney or trustee, or otherwise; and after such descriptions as aforesaid, shall proceed to name, describe and enumerate distinctly the several Negro, Mulatto and other slaves belonging to the said owner or owners, in manner following; that is to say, the schedule shall be divided into nine columns, of convenient breadth, respectively entitled at the heads thereof, sex, name, colour, age, bodily marks, condition, country, employment and class; and in the first of the said columns shall be inserted the sex of each slave; in the second the name of each slave, by which he or she has been usually called or known; in the third column shall be inserted the colour of each slave, including, under the term coloured, all those who are not black; in the fourth column shall be inserted the age of each slave; in the fifth column shall be inserted a specification of all particularly conspicuous bodily marks, by which each slave may be known and identified; in the sixth column shall be inserted the condition of the slave, whether invalided, superannuated or able; in the seventh column shall be inserted whether the slave is an African or Creole; in the eighth column the habitual occupation or employment of each slave, for 12 calendar months at the least next before the 28th day of August 1833; and in the ninth column the class to which the person making the schedule conceives the slave, when in a state of apprenticeship, will belong; that is to say, whether to the first, second or third class, as above stated, using the letters P. A. for prædial attached apprenticed labourers, P. U. for prædial unattached apprenticed labourers, and N. P. for non-prædial apprenticed labourers.

2. And for the better ascertaining of the proper forms of such schedules of slaves as are hereby required to be made, and that every person may strictly adhere thereto, a form of such schedule is to this Act annexed, to which all persons are required to conform.

3. And be it further enacted, that for the purpose of making the schedules by this ordinance required, every person shall and may, during office hours, have free access to and examination of the records of the registration of slaves in the slave registrars' offices of this colony respectively, every person paying the sum of one guilder for such access and examination; and each of the said registrars of slaves in this colony is hereby further directed and required, upon application for the same, to give copies in writing, certified by himself, of every schedule that may be desired, the person desiring the same paying for each copy so required the sum of 10 stivers, if the number of slaves therein contained does not exceed five, and if exceeding five, the further sum of one guilder 10 stivers for any number from six to 20 inclusive; and for every slave exceeding 20, the sum of one stiver.

4. And be it further enacted, that every person making any and every such schedule shall, at the time of delivering the same to the registrar of slaves in the appropriate district, take the following oath, which the said registrar is hereby empowered and required to administer; that is to say,

"You do swear that the schedule now by you given in contains a true and exact account, description and classification, according to the several particulars therein specified of all the slaves, on the 20th day of March 1834, attached or belonging to the plantation, called in or on that date, belonging to you, or in your possession [if an owner], or on that date belonging to, or in possession of [name the owner or possessor], within this district, according to the best of your judgment, knowledge, information and belief. So help you God."

Provided nevertheless, that in case any owner or possessor of slaves resident in this colony shall, from sickness or any bodily infirmity, be prevented from attending the registrar of slaves in the appropriate district, to deliver such schedule of his or her slaves as hereinbefore is directed, it shall and may be lawful for any other person, in behalf of such owner or possessor, to give in such his or her schedule in the form hereinbefore prescribed, such person person so giving in for another, at the time of delivering such schedule, taking the following oath before the said registrar of slaves in the appropriate district, who is hereby empowered and required to administer the same:

"You do swear that the person for whom you are now about to give in a schedule of slaves is prevented doing so in his or her own proper person from illness or bodily infirmity, and that the schedule by you now given in was signed by such person in your presence, and that the same contains a true and exact number, description and classification of all the slaves within this district, belonging to, or in the possession of the said on the 20th day of March 1834, according to the best of your judgment, knowledge, information and belief. So help you God."

5. And be it further enacted, that at the expiration of the period hereinbefore specified for giving in the schedules required by this ordinance, the utmost publicity of the nature, object and intention of the same shall be given to all and every slave throughout this colony, by the respective fiscals, protectors, assistant-protectors and justices of the peace in and for the same, in manner and form and agreeably with such instructions as shall be communicated or made known to them by his Excellency the Lieutenant-governor; and that it shall be the duty of each and every of the said fiscals, protectors, assistant-protectors and justices of the peace to take down in writing all and every objection which shall or may be made to him by any slave to his remaining in the class in which he or she shall be put or placed by his or her owner, or other person having charge of him or her; and on or before the 1st day of June 1834 to make a true and accurate return of all and every such objection or objections, and to deliver every such return into the registrar's office to which it may belong, on or before the day and year last aforesaid.

6. And be it further enacted, that as soon as the returns of objections by the fiscals, protectors, assistant-protectors and justices of the peace shall have been made and delivered in to the offices of the registrars of slaves in and for the respective districts aforesaid, it shall and may be lawful for the said respective registrars, in the presence of the respective protectors or assistant-protectors of slaves, to examine and investigate all such returns, and upon the evidence afforded by such returns, and by the records of his office, either to confirm or correct any such schedule as he may see fit, in a blank column to be added for that purpose, giving in all cases of correction to the parties making such schedule notice of every such correction; and if either the party making the schedule, or the protectors or assistant-protectors of slaves shall be dissatisfied with the correction of such registrars, such party may, on his or her own behalf, and the protector or assistant-protector may, on the behalf of such slave, bring the matter before the judges of the supreme courts of this colony, in manner and form hereinafter stated, for hearing and decision.

7. And be it further enacted, that the judges of the said supreme courts shall make all necessary rules for bringing before them for hearing and decision, in a summary way, all such matters, and for regulating the proceedings on the same in the manner which may be most conducive to method, punctuality and dispatch; and that every decision of such courts respectively shall be final and conclusive.

8. And be it further enacted, that when such proceedings as aforesaid shall have taken place, there shall be affixed in another column, to be added in each schedule for that purpose, the class to which the court in any disputed case shall decide the apprenticed labourer belongs, the said class being designated by the letters P. A. for each prædial attached apprenticed labourer, P. U. for each prædial unattached apprenticed labourer, and N. P. for each non-prædial apprenticed labourer, upon which all schedules, whether the same shall have been objected to or not, shall be bound up in as many volumes as shall be convenient, and shall form the registry of apprenticed labourers, in and for the respective districts of Demerara and Essequibo, and of Berbice, to which they belong; and during the continuance of the apprenticeship the registry so formed or corrected as aforesaid, shall be deposited amongst the records of the superior courts of this colony; and when any question shall arise respecting the class to which any apprenticed labourer belongs, such corrected registry, or a certified extract thereof, shall be taken as conclusive evidence of the fact.

9. And whereas by the said Act of Parliament no person will be entitled to the services of any apprenticed labourer unless the class to which such apprenticed labourer belongs shall be previously ascertained and registered; but such accidental omissions may occur; be it therefore further enacted, that it shall be lawful for any party who may have omitted to make and deliver in a schedule as aforesaid, on or before the 1st day of May 1834, in respect of one or more slaves whose services as an apprenticed labourer or labourers may be claimed by such party, to apply to the Governor by petition to make and deliver in a schedule of such omitted slave or slaves; and upon such application being granted before the 1st day of July 1834, the same rules and regulations applicable to the classification and registering of all other slaves as apprenticed labourers, shall be strictly observed; and if any such petition to the Governor shall be granted on or after the 1st day of July 1834, such last recorded petition and order thereon shall be brought before the chief justice for his decision in a summary way; and such decision shall be recorded in the registry of apprenticed labourers as aforesaid; upon which being done, the party claiming the services of any one or more apprenticed labourer or labourers who shall have been so omitted, shall be entitled thereto, anything herein contained to the contrary notwithstanding.

AN ORDINANCE for the Government and Regulation of Apprenticed Labourers.
8 March 1834.

CAP. I.

Preamble recites the 16th sect. of 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 73.

WHEREAS by the 16th section of an Act of the Imperial Parliament of Great Britain and Ireland, made and passed in the 3d & 4th years of His Majesty's reign, intituled "An Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies, for promoting the Industry of the Manumitted Slaves, and for compensating the Persons hitherto entitled to the Services of such Slaves;" after reciting, that "Whereas it was necessary that various rules and regulations should be framed and established for ascertaining, with reference to each apprenticed labourer within the said Colonies respectively, whether he or she belonged to the class of attached prædial apprenticed labourers, or to the class of unattached apprenticed labourers, or to the class of non-prædial apprenticed labourers, and for determining the manner and form in which, and the solemnities with which the voluntary discharge of any apprenticed labourer from such his or her apprenticeship might be effected, and for prescribing the form and manner in which, and the solemnities with which the purchase by any such apprenticed labourer of his or her discharge from such apprenticeship without or in opposition, if necessary, to the consent of the person or persons entitled to his or her services should be effected, and how the necessary appraisement of the future value of such services should be made, and how and to whom the amount of such appraisement should in each case be paid and applied, and in what manner, and from and by whom, the discharge from any such apprenticeship should thereupon be given, executed and recorded; and that it was also necessary for the preservation of peace throughout the said Colonies, that proper regulations should be framed and established for the maintenance of order and good discipline amongst the said apprenticed labourers, and for ensuring the punctual discharge of the services due by them to their respective employers, and for the prevention and punishment of indolence or the neglect or improper performance of work by any such apprenticed labourer, and for enforcing the due performance by any such apprenticed labourer of any contract into which he

he or she might voluntarily enter for any hired service during the time in which he or she might not be bound to labour for his or her employer, and for the prevention and punishment of insolence and insubordination on the part of any such apprenticed labourers towards their employers, and for the prevention or punishment of vagrancy, or of any conduct on the part of any such apprenticed labourers injuring or tending to the injury of the property of any such employer, and for the suppression and punishment of any riot or combined resistance of the laws on the part of any such apprenticed labourers, and for preventing the escape of any such apprenticed labourers during their term of apprenticeship from the Colonies to which they might respectively belong:" And after further reciting, that "Whereas it would further be necessary, for the protection of such apprenticed labourers as aforesaid, that various regulations should be framed and established in the said respective Colonies for securing punctuality and method in the supply to them of such food, clothing, lodging, medicines, medical attendance, and such other maintenance and allowances as they were in the said Act before declared entitled to receive, and for regulating the amount and quality of all such articles in cases where the laws then existing in any such Colony might not, in the case of slaves, have made any regulation or any adequate regulation for that purpose; and that it was also necessary that proper rules should be established for the prevention and punishment of any frauds which might be practised, or of any omissions or neglects which might occur, respecting the quantity or the quality of the supplies so to be furnished, or respecting the periods for the delivery of the same:" And after further reciting, that "Whereas it was necessary, in those cases in which the food of any such prædial apprenticed labourers as therein aforesaid might either wholly or in part be raised by themselves by the cultivation of ground to be set apart and allotted for that purpose, that proper regulations should be made and established as to the extent of such grounds, and as to the distance at which such grounds might be so allotted from the ordinary place of abode of such prædial apprenticed labourers, and respecting the deductions to be made from the cultivation of such grounds from the annual time during which such prædial apprenticed labourers were thereinbefore declared liable to labour:" And after further reciting, that "Whereas it might also be necessary, by such regulations as aforesaid, to secure to the said prædial apprenticed labourers the enjoyment for their own benefit of that portion of their time during which they were not thereby required to labour in the service of their respective employers, and for securing exactness in the computation of the time during which such prædial apprenticed labourers were thereby required to labour in the service of such their respective employers; and that it was also necessary that provision should be made for preventing the imposition of task-work on any such apprenticed labourer without his or her free consent to undertake the same, but that it might be necessary by such regulations, in certain cases, to require and provide for the acquiescence of the minority of the prædial apprenticed labourers attached to any plantation or estate, in the distribution and appointment amongst the whole body of such labourers of any task-work which the majority of such body should be willing and desirous collectively to undertake; and that it was also necessary that regulations should be made respecting any voluntary contracts into which any apprenticed labourers might enter with their respective employers, or with any other person, for hired service for any future period, and for limiting the greatest period of time to which such voluntary contract might extend, and for enforcing the punctual and effectual performance of such voluntary contracts on the part both of such apprenticed labourers and of the person or persons engaging for their employment and hire; and that it was also necessary that regulations should be made for the prevention or punishment of any cruelty, injustice, or other wrong or injury which might be done to or inflicted upon any such apprenticed labourers by the persons entitled to their services; and that it was also necessary that proper regulations should be made respecting the manner and form in which such indentures of apprenticeship as therein aforesaid should be made on behalf of such children as therein aforesaid, and respecting the registering and preservation of all such indentures:" And after further reciting, that "Whereas it was also necessary that provision should be made for ensuring promptitude and dispatch, and for preventing all unnecessary expense in the discharge, by the justices of the peace holding special commissions as therein aforesaid, of the jurisdiction and authorities thereby committed to them, and for enabling such justices to decide in a summary way such questions as might be brought before them in that capacity, and for the division of the respective Colonies in said Act mentioned into districts for the purposes of such jurisdiction, and for the frequent and punctual visitation by such justices of the peace of the apprenticed labourers within such their respective districts; and that it was also necessary that regulations should be made for indemnifying and protecting such justices of the peace in the upright execution and discharge of their duties:" And after further reciting, that "Whereas such regulations as aforesaid could not without great inconvenience be made, except by the respective Governors, Councils and Assemblies, or other local Legislatures of the said respective Colonies, or by His Majesty with the advice of His Privy Council, in reference to those Colonies to which the legislative authority of His Majesty in Council extended;" it was therefore enacted and declared, that nothing in that Act contained extended, or should be construed to extend, to prevent the enactment by the respective Governors, Councils or Assemblies, or by such other local Legislatures as therein aforesaid, or by His Majesty with the advice of his Privy Council, of any such Acts of General Assembly, or Ordinances or Orders in Council, as might be requisite for making and establishing such several rules and regulations as therein aforesaid, or any of them, or for carrying the same or any of them into full and complete effect: provided nevertheless, that it should not be lawful for any such Governor,

Council and Assembly, or for any such local Legislature, or for His Majesty in Council, by any such Acts of Assembly, Ordinances or Orders in Council as therein aforesaid, to make or establish any enactment, regulation, provision, rule or order which should be in anywise repugnant or contradictory to that present Act or any part thereof, but that every such enactment, regulation, provision, rule or order should be and was thereby declared to be absolutely null and void and of no effect. And whereas it is necessary that provision should be made for establishing in the Colony of British Guiana the aforesaid rules and regulations, and for carrying the same into full and complete effect:—

British Guiana divided into 14 districts.

1. Be it therefore enacted, by his Excellency the Lieutenant-governor of British Guiana, with the advice and consent of the Court of Policy thereof, that the Colony of British Guiana shall be divided into not less than 14 judicial districts; and that it shall be competent for the Governor, by and with the advice and consent of the Court of Policy, to define, and as occasion may require to alter, the limits of such districts.

Special justices of the peace appointed.

2. And whereas by the 14th sec. of the said Act of Parliament it was enacted, that it should and might be lawful for His Majesty to issue, or to authorize the Governor of any such Colony as therein aforesaid, in the name and on the behalf of His Majesty to issue, under the public seal of such Colony, one or more special commission or commissions to any one or more person or persons, constituting him or them a justice or justices of the peace for the whole of any such Colony, or for any parish, precinct, quarter or other district within the same, for the special purpose of giving effect to that present Act, and to any laws which might in manner thereinafter mentioned be made for giving more complete effect to the same: Be it therefore further enacted, that such special justices shall be so appointed in the proportion of not less than three for each of the districts in this ordinance mentioned.

Special justices of the peace to take oath of office.

3. And be it further enacted, that before any special justice of the peace shall enter upon the duties of his office he shall appear before the Governor of this Colony, and in his presence take and subscribe an oath, which the said Governor shall administer in the following terms:

"I, A. B., do swear that I will, to the best of my knowledge and ability, faithfully execute and perform the duties of the office of a special justice of the peace in and for the Colony of British Guiana, without fear, favour or partiality. So help me God."

Police settlements established.

4. And be it further enacted, that in each district shall be set apart a sufficient extent of land, which, with the buildings to be erected thereon, shall be called the Police Settlement of the district, and that every such police settlement shall be established in the vicinity of as large a body as may be of the population of the district; and that, independently of the police settlement in each district, it shall be lawful for the chairman or sessions of each district to license in each district places of temporary safe custody, situated at convenient distances from one another.

Land for the same how to be obtained.

5. And be it further enacted, that for the formation of the police settlements the Governor shall appropriate any waste lands of the Crown which may be situated conveniently for that purpose; and in districts where such Crown lands cannot be found, shall by exchange, or if necessary by purchase, procure the lands wanting for the purpose.

Temporary police settlements.

6. And be it further enacted, that until permanent police settlements can be provided and proper buildings erected, suitable arrangements, by hire or otherwise, shall be made by the Governor, with the advice and consent of the Court of Policy, for providing buildings to be occupied temporarily as police settlements.

Houses of correction and penal gang.

7. And be it further enacted, that at each police settlement shall be erected a house of correction, and shall be established a penal gang, to be composed of such persons as shall be condemned to imprisonment with hard labour at such settlement.

Employment of members of police settlement and of penal gang.

8. And be it further enacted, that the members of the police settlement, when not engaged in actual service as policemen, shall be employed in the erecting or repairing of the buildings of the settlement to which they belong; and the penal gang of each police settlement shall assist in such labour, as well as perform such other work or labour connected with the maintenance of the settlement as may come under the designation of hard labour: and moreover, the penal gang, when not employed at police settlement, as often as the chairman of the district may direct, shall, under the superintendence of the sergeant of the police settlement, or in his absence of some other member of the police, be hired out to hard labour, on the public account, in the service of any person who may be willing to hire such labour.

Superintendence of police settlement.

9. And be it further enacted, that every police settlement shall be placed under the immediate superintendence of the chairman of the district sessions, who shall reside thereat or in the immediate vicinity thereof.

One sergeant and ten privates at each police settlement.

10. And be it further enacted, that each police settlement shall consist of one sergeant and not more than 10 privates, all being able-bodied men, between the ages of 20 and 50 years; and that such sergeant and privates of police shall be appointed by the Governor, and shall be liable to be removed by him for bad conduct or inefficiency; and that every sergeant and private shall be liable to be suspended from office by the chairman of the sessions of the district to which he belongs, subject to the Governor's confirmation or disallowance of such suspension.

11. And be it further enacted, that, in addition to the police forces stationed at each police settlement, the district sessions shall appoint and swear in such persons in the district as they shall think fit, to act as headboroughs or constables within the district. Headboroughs and constables.

12. And be it further enacted, that a report of the effective strength and condition of the police force at each settlement, and of the state of the buildings and provision grounds there, and of the state and conduct of the prisoners confined therein, shall once in every quarter be made to the Governor and Court of Policy, by the chairman of the district. Quarterly reports to Governor and Court of Policy.

13. And be it further enacted, that the Governor and Court of Policy shall from time to time establish rules necessary for the internal discipline of the said police settlements; for a due separation of prisoners of different sexes; for the classification of prisoners; for their religious instruction; for the maintenance of cleanliness, order and sobriety amongst them; and for the prevention and prompt punishment of any neglect or violation of such rules. Rules of discipline to be established.

14. And be it further enacted, that the sergeant and privates of each police settlement shall be provided with a uniform, and with such weapons and accoutrements as may be best adapted to the service in which they are engaged. Sergeant and privates to be provided with a uniform.

15. And be it further enacted, that the privates in each settlement shall receive pay at the rate of per diem, and the sergeant shall be paid at the rate of per diem; and that as vacancies occur, privates shall for good conduct be promoted to be sergeants. Pay of sergeants and privates.

16. And be it further enacted, that before any sergeant or private of any police settlement, or any headborough or constable of any district, shall enter upon the duties of his office, he shall appear before the chairman of the district sessions in and for which he may be so appointed, and in his presence shall take and subscribe an oath, which such chairman is hereby authorized and required to administer, in the following form: "I, A. B., do swear that I will, to the best of my knowledge and ability, faithfully execute and perform the duties of sergeant or private of police, or of headborough or constable, of the in the Colony of British Guiana, without fear, favour or partiality. So help me God." Police officers to take oath of office.

17. And be it further enacted, that it shall be the duty of the sergeant and the privates of each police settlement, and of the headboroughs or constables of each district, to carry into execution such orders as they shall receive from any one or more of the special justices for the prevention or repressing of crimes, and for enforcing obedience to the laws. Duties of police officer.

Cap. II.

1. And with regard to the procedure to be observed by the special justices in the exercise of their jurisdiction, Be it further enacted, that every special justice of the peace shall reside within the district to which he is appointed, unless when prevented by sickness or other reasonable cause, to be allowed by the Governor. Special justice to reside within his district.

2. And be it further enacted, that every such special justice of the peace shall one day in each week, or oftener if need be, at the place of his residence, hold a session for the hearing and deciding such cases as may be brought before him, and recourse may be had to the nearest special justice at any time; and that once in every fortnight, or oftener where it shall be deemed necessary, shall be convened a court of not less than three of such special justices of the peace, which shall sit at any convenient place within the district, that shall be named by the chairman, and shall hear and determine all cases which shall be brought before it under or by virtue of this ordinance; and that at every session of such court of special justices, the chairman to be nominated and appointed by the Governor shall preside, unless prevented by sickness or absence, in either of which cases it shall and may be lawful for any other special justice of the peace, as may be agreed among themselves, to take the chair. Special justice to hold session once a week, or oftener. District courts.

3. And be it further enacted, that every special justice shall be and he is hereby empowered and authorized, in respect of apprenticed labourers convicted of offences before him, to award any one of the following punishments: 1st, Confinement, with or without hard labour on the tread-mill or otherwise, for a period not exceeding 14 successive days; 2d, extra labour at the rate of 15 hours per week in the service of his or her employer, with or without confinement at night, for a period not exceeding 14 days; 3d, fifteen stripes for every male labourer. And in respect of any employer or person acting for him, when convicted of any violation of the present law, a penalty not exceeding 5*l.* sterling, or in case of protraction of labour of any apprenticed labourer by force or fraud, a fine of 1*s.* per hour. Powers of special justice defined.

4. And be it further enacted, that at such district sessions the special justices shall apportion the district into as many sections as may be convenient; and the plantations in each such section upon which 10 or any greater number of apprenticed labourers are employed, shall be visited at least once in each fortnight, or oftener if necessary, by one or more of the special justices of the district, who shall then and there take cognizance of such cases as may be brought before him or them. District to be divided into sections.

5. And be it further enacted, that if any special justice shall on investigating a case brought before him, be of opinion that it demands a punishment or penalty beyond that which he is hereby empowered or authorized to award, he shall refer such case to the district Reference to district sessions sessions of special justices, and shall if he see fit commit the accused, if an apprenticed labourer, for trial before such district sessions.

Journals to be kept by special justices and district sessions.

6. And be it further enacted, that every special justice and every district sessions of special justices shall keep a journal of all cases brought before him or them, in which shall be entered, 1st, the date of complaint; 2d, the name of the complainant; 3d, the name of the accused; 4th, the substance of the complaint; 5th, the names of the witnesses adduced on either side; 6th, the substance of the evidence; 7th, the decision on the case; 8th, whether the decision has been carried into effect; and to every case shall be added any general remarks which may be thought advisable; and all such journals shall be kept in one uniform manner to be prescribed for that purpose by the Governor and Court of Policy.

Quarterly reports by justices to district sessions, and by district sessions to Governor and Court of Policy.

7. And be it further enacted, that at the end of each quarter every special justice shall transmit to the district sessions of special justices a duplicate of his journal for the preceding quarter, containing a true account of all the proceedings in which such special justice has been engaged during the quarter to which it refers; and at the expiration of one week thereafter, the chairman of each of such district sessions shall transmit to the Governor and Court of Policy all such duplicate journals and affidavits of the special justices of his district, as well as a duplicate journal of the proceedings of such session courts for the same quarter, with an affidavit annexed to such last-mentioned journal, to the effect that such last-mentioned journal has been faithfully kept, and that, with the exception of unintentional errors, such last-mentioned journal contains a true account of all the proceedings of such district sessions of special justices during the quarter to which such last-mentioned journal refers.

Complaints to be reduced into writing.

8. And be it further enacted, that on receiving any complaint, it shall be the duty of each special justice to reduce it to writing and cause it to be read by or to read it over to the complainant, by whom it shall then be subscribed; and if the complaint shall appear to such justice immaterial and not to deserve further inquiry, he may at once dismiss the complaint; but if he shall think inquiry necessary, he shall call upon the complainant to make oath that the complaint is true.

Special justice may issue warrant of arrest or summons.

9. And be it further enacted, that upon taking any complaint to the truth of which such oath shall have been so made, the special justice shall either issue his warrant for the arrest of the party charged, or shall issue a summons for his attendance, as the case may require. The warrant of arrest shall be in the form annexed, marked (A), and the summons in the form annexed, marked (B): and the warrant of arrest shall be issued in all cases which impute to the party charged a capital or a transportable offence; in all cases where there is reason to apprehend that the party charged will endeavour to escape; and in all cases where there is reason to apprehend danger to the public peace from delay. In all other cases the special justice shall proceed in the first instance by summons.

Witnesses summoned.

10. And be it further enacted, that in cases in which it may be necessary to adduce witnesses in support of, or in answer to any such complaint, the special justice shall issue a summons or summonses in the annexed form marked (C.)

Hearing of complaint.

11. And be it further enacted, that at the time and place appointed by any such warrant or summons for proceeding upon any such complaint, the special justice shall in the presence of all parties first read over the written complaint, and then take down in writing the answer of the party charged, and then proceed to examine on oath the party complaining and the witnesses, taking down in writing the deposition of each witness, which shall be read over to and signed by him or her.

Adjournment of proceedings.

12. And be it further enacted, that the special justice may from time to time adjourn any such proceeding for further inquiry, and if necessary commit the party charged to custody pending such adjournment, or take bail for his appearance. Every warrant of such commitment or bail-bond shall be in the annexed forms marked (D.) and (E.)

Decision of special justice to be pronounced, reduced into writing, and subscribed.

13. And be it further enacted, that at the close of such proceedings the special justice shall pronounce his decision thereupon, which decision he shall reduce into writing, and subscribe with his hand; and by any such decision, such justice shall as law and reason may seem to him to require, either dismiss the complaint, or sanction any compromise between the parties which he may think just, or convict the party charged, or commit him to a duly authorized place of confinement, or admit him to bail to take his trial for the imputed offence.

Reasons of dismissal to be stated.

14. And be it further enacted, that if the complaint shall be dismissed, the special justice shall in such his written decision state whether it was so dismissed as being unproved, or as being frivolous and vexatious, or as being malicious.

Penalty for frivolous and vexatious complaints.

15. And be it further enacted, that if any such complaint shall be so dismissed as frivolous and vexatious, the special justice may adjudge the complainant, if a labourer, to work in the service of his employer for any time not exceeding in the whole 15 extra hours in any one week; or if the complainant be the employer, such justice may adjudge such employer to the payment of a penalty for the use of the labourer, not exceeding 30*s*.

Punishment of malicious complaints.

16. And be it further enacted, that if any such complaint shall be so dismissed as malicious, it shall be competent to the district sessions of special justices, at the instance of the party charged, to adjudge the complainant, if an apprenticed labourer, to imprisonment with with hard labour for any time not exceeding one month; or if the employer of any such labourer, to a fine not exceeding 5*l.* for the benefit of the party charged; which judgment shall be a bar to any suit, action or prosecution against such complainant for calumny, defamation, or otherwise, in respect of such his complaint.

Forms of conviction.

17. And be it further enacted, that the conviction of the party charged, or of the complainant for preferring a frivolous and vexatious or a malicious complaint, shall be severally drawn up according to the forms annexed, marked (F.) (G.) (H.); that the commitment of a party charged to take his trial for an imputed offence shall be drawn up in the form annexed, marked (I.); that the bail-bond or recognizances shall be in the form marked (K.); and that the warrant for the execution of a conviction shall be in the form annexed, marked (L.)

Police officers to serve process.

18. And be it further enacted, that all summonses, warrants, commitments and other orders so to be issued by any such special justice as aforesaid, shall be executed by the police officers of the district, such justice being nevertheless authorized, as occasion may require, to address the same to any other person or persons jointly with or instead of such officers of police, as to him may seem requisite.

Warrant to extend over the Colony.

19. And be it further enacted, that any summonses, warrant or order issued by any such special justice within his own district, may without any further authority be carried into execution in any part of the Colony, though beyond such district.

Witnesses refusing to attend may be arrested; or to answer, may be committed.

20. And be it further enacted, that if any person summoned as a witness by any special justice or district sessions of special justices, shall not appear in obedience to such summons, or appearing, shall refuse to be sworn or examined, or to answer any question proposed to him by such justice or district sessions in relation to the matters depending before him or them, it shall be lawful for such justice or district sessions to issue a warrant for the arrest of any such defaulter, or to commit him or her to close custody, there to remain until he or she shall submit to be so sworn and examined, and to make such answers as aforesaid. And every such warrant of arrest or commitment shall be in the forms annexed, marked (M.) and (N.)

Prisoners may be discharged by chief justice or puisne judge.

21. And be it further enacted, that it shall be lawful for the chief justice, or first or second puisne judge, but for no other judge or justice of this Colony, to discharge any person in a summary way from such imprisonment, on proof being made to the satisfaction of such chief justice or puisne judge, that such commitment was not duly authorized by and was not in conformity with the true intent and meaning of this Act, or that such person ought in due course of law to be discharged.

Governor and Court of Policy may suspend, and frame and publish rules of proceeding.

22. And be it further enacted, that if it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the Governor and Court of Policy that the forms of proceeding hereinbefore prescribed are needlessly burdensome upon the special justices or district sessions of special justices within the Colony, or that they impede or interfere with the prompt and effective execution of the law; the Governor and Court of Policy shall be entitled to suspend any part of the preceding rules relating to such procedure, or to adapt the same to the circumstances of the case, so as more effectually to promote the punctual, orderly and effective execution of the law; and for that purpose to frame and publish rules and ordinances, which shall be transmitted for His Majesty's confirmation, and which, until disallowed, shall be in full force.

Limitation of actions against special justices of the peace and others.

23. And for the protection of persons acting in the execution of this Act, Be it further enacted, that all actions to be commenced against any person for anything done in pursuance of this Act, shall be commenced within six calendar months after the fact committed, and not otherwise; and notice in writing of such action, and of the cause thereof, shall be given to the defendant one calendar month at least before the commencement of the action. And in any such action the defendant may plead the general issue, or as it is termed in Dutch law, a contrary conclusion, and give this Act and the special matter in evidence at any trial to be had thereupon. And no plaintiff shall recover in any such action if tender of sufficient amends shall have been made before such action brought, or if a sufficient sum of money shall have been paid into court after such action brought, by or on behalf of the defendant; and if a sentence shall pass for the defendant, or the plaintiff shall become nonsuit, or discontinue any such action after issue joined, the defendant shall recover treble costs, and have the like remedy for the same as any defendant hath by law in other cases; and though a sentence shall be given for the plaintiff in any such action, such plaintiff shall not have costs against the defendant, unless the court before which the trial shall be, shall certify its approbation of the action.

Cap. III.

And for securing protection to all apprenticed labourers in this Colony, and for securing punctuality and method in the supply to them of such food, clothing, lodging, medicines, medical attendance, and such other maintenance and allowances as they are by said Act of Parliament declared entitled to receive; and for regulating the amount and quality of all such articles:—

Rules to be followed respecting the food and maintenance of apprenticed labourers.

1. Be it further enacted, that every employer and manager of apprenticed labourers within this Colony shall and he is hereby required to provide for the food and maintenance of the the apprenticed labourers under his or her management, according to the several rules and regulations hereinafter in that behalf prescribed; that is to say,

1st. Every such employer or manager of slaves shall within the first week of January in each and every year, deliver, or cause to be delivered, to the district sessions of special justices, or to the chairman of such sessions of the district in which such apprenticed labourers are resident, a written declaration in the form prescribed in the Schedule annexed, marked (O.), specifying whether it is the intention of such employer or manager, during the year next ensuing, to maintain his apprenticed labourers by the cultivation of ground to be to them appropriated for that purpose, or by an allowance of provisions.

2d. The declaration so made shall be recorded at the police settlement of each district in the Colony respectively.

3d. Such declaration shall be revocable at the pleasure of the employer or manager for the time being of such apprenticed labourers, at the expiration of one calendar month next after the date of a written notice of such intention to such district sessions, or to the chairman thereof, delivered by such employer or manager.

4th. Every employer or manager of apprenticed labourers within this Colony shall during the period to which such declarations shall apply, be bound to maintain his apprenticed labourers in the manner thereby proposed, unless the district sessions of special justices of any such district in which the apprenticed labourers are resident shall by a written licence authorize such employer or manager within that period to change the mode of maintaining such his apprenticed labourers.

5th. Every employer or manager who shall by such declaration as aforesaid propose to maintain his apprenticed labourer by an allowance of provisions, shall be and is hereby bound and required to supply such provisions to the amount and of the kinds specified in Schedule hereunto annexed, marked (P.)

6th. The Governor may from time to time by proclamation, to be by him for that purpose issued, authorize the substitution for the provisions aforesaid, of any other provisions equivalent to and equally nutritious with the same.

7th. Such provisions as aforesaid shall in no case be delivered on Sunday, but shall always be delivered on the corresponding working day in each successive week, unless such delivery shall be delayed by accident or other unavoidable cause.

8th. Any employer or manager of apprenticed labourers who may be unable or unwilling to procure such provisions as are hereinbefore mentioned, may, with the authority in writing of the district sessions of special justices, or chairman of such sessions in and for the district in which such apprenticed labourers are resident, substitute for the same any other kind of provisions, provided that such substituted provisions shall in the judgment of such district sessions or chairman thereof be equivalent to and equally nutritious with those hereinbefore directed and prescribed.

9th. All provisions so to be supplied to the apprenticed labourers in this Colony shall be sound and fit for consumption, and of good average merchantable quality.

10th. Every employer or manager of apprenticed labourers who shall by such declaration as aforesaid propose to maintain the apprenticed labourers under his management by the appropriation of ground to be by them cultivated for that purpose, shall be and is hereby bound and required to set apart for every apprenticed labourer so to be maintained a sufficiency of land properly adapted for the growth of provisions, and not more than two miles distant from the place of residence of such apprenticed labourers; the land, both as to extent and quality, to be subject to the approbation of the district sessions of special justices.

11th. Every such employer or manager shall be and he is hereby bound and required to supply every apprenticed labourer for whom any such ground shall be so appropriated, with such seeds and with such implements of husbandry as may be necessary for the cultivation of such ground, on the first entering of such apprenticed labourer on the occupation thereof.

12th. It shall not be lawful for any person whomsoever to dispossess any apprenticed labourer of any land so assigned to and cultivated by him or her, until such apprenticed labourer shall have had full time and opportunity for reaping and gathering in all crops by him or her planted and growing upon such ground.

13th. The crops when growing upon any such ground, and when severed therefrom, shall and are hereby declared to be the sole and absolute property of the apprenticed labourer for and in respect of whom such ground shall have been appropriated and set apart.

14th. Every apprenticed labourer for or in respect of whom any ground shall be so appropriated and set apart, shall be allowed one working day in every week, for 40 successive weeks in each year, such weeks to commence from the first whole week inclusive in the month of January of each year, and each of such working days shall be understood to consist of 24 hours, commencing at the hour of six in the morning and terminating at the hour of six of the next morning: provided nevertheless, that nothing herein contained shall prevent any apprenticed labourer from contracting, under the approbation of a special justice of the peace, with his or her employer to have such days at such other times as may be agreed on by the parties.

Penalties on persons violating the preceding rules respecting the food and maintenance of apprenticed labourers.

2. And be it further enacted, that if any employer or manager of apprenticed labourers within this Colony shall neglect or omit, within the time hereby for that purpose limited, to sign and deliver in manner hereinbefore mentioned such written declaration as aforesaid, he or she shall incur a penalty of 2 l. for such omission or neglect, in respect of the first week in which the same shall occur, with additional penalties of 4 l. in the second week, 6 l. in the

the third week, and so on in arithmetical progression, in respect of each additional week during which such neglect shall be continued. And if any employer or manager of apprenticed labourers within the said Colony shall not supply to such apprenticed labourers provisions of such amount and quality, and at such times, as he is hereinbefore required to supply the same, every such employer or manager shall incur and become liable to a penalty equal to twice the value of the provisions which ought so to have been supplied; which last mentioned penalties shall accrue to and be for the benefit of the apprenticed labourers injured by any such omission or neglect. And if any such employer or manager of apprenticed labourers shall not set apart for every apprenticed labourer who is maintained by the cultivation of ground, such land, of such quality and quantity, and so situate, as hereinbefore is required, or shall neglect or omit to supply any such apprenticed labourer with such seeds and implements of husbandry as aforesaid, or shall dispossess any such apprenticed labourer of any land so assigned and cultivated until such apprenticed labourer shall have had full time and opportunity for reaping and gathering in all crops by him or her planted and growing upon such ground, every person so offending shall incur and become liable to a penalty equal to twice the amount of the loss sustained by every such apprenticed labourer by every such act, omission or neglect; which penalty shall go and be applied to and for the use and benefit of the apprenticed labourer so injured. And if any such employer or manager of apprenticed labourers shall withhold or refuse to allow to any apprenticed labourer for or in respect of whom any ground shall be so appropriated, such days as aforesaid in each year for the cultivation thereof, or shall on any such day compel or require any such apprenticed labourer to perform any work or labour, except in the cultivation of such provision grounds, every person so offending shall for each and every such offence incur a distinct and separate penalty of 10 s., which shall go and be applied to and for the benefit of the apprenticed labourer injured thereby; the number of such penalties being equal to the number of apprenticed labourers affected by such offence, multiplied by the number of days on which such offences may have been repeated.

Rules respecting the clothing of apprenticed labourers.

3. And be it further enacted and declared, that it is and shall be the duty of every employer or manager of apprenticed labourers within this Colony, once, that is to say, either in the month of January or in the month of June in each year, and he or she is hereby required, to deliver to every such apprenticed labourer for his or her use, either in the month of January or in the month of June in each and every year, the articles of clothing enumerated and specified in the Schedule, marked (Q.), hereunto annexed.

District sessions of special justices may authorize commutation of the prescribed article.

Provided always, that with the authority in writing of the district sessions of special justices, or chairman of such sessions, of the district in which any apprenticed labourers are resident, the employer or manager of any such apprenticed labourers may and he is hereby authorized to substitute for the articles enumerated and specified in last mentioned Schedule, any other articles of clothing or household furniture which shall in the judgment of such district sessions, or of the chairman thereof, be equivalent to the articles so enumerated and specified; and all the articles so to be supplied as last aforesaid shall be of good average merchantable quality.

Penalties on the neglect of the law respecting clothing.

4. And be it further enacted, that if any employer or manager of apprenticed labourers in this Colony shall wilfully neglect or omit, within the time or times hereinbefore for that purpose limited, to supply and deliver to and for the use of apprenticed labourers under his or her management such articles of clothing and household furniture as are hereinbefore mentioned, the person so offending shall incur and become liable to a fine equal to twice the value of the article or articles so withholden, which penalty shall go and be applied to and for the use and benefit of the apprenticed labourer injured by such neglect.

Bedding to be provided for apprenticed labourers.

5. And be it further enacted, that every employer or manager of apprenticed labourers in this Colony shall be and is hereby required to supply each and every apprenticed labourer under his or her management with a wooden or iron bedstead, or with boards so arranged as to enable every such apprenticed labourer to sleep during the night at an elevation of one foot at the least above the ground; and every employer or manager who shall neglect or omit so to supply any such apprenticed labourer with such bedstead or such means of sleeping above the ground as aforesaid, shall for every such neglect or omission incur and become liable to a fine of 5 s. in respect of each and every apprenticed labourer; which fine shall be again incurred from week to week as long as such neglect or omission shall continue.

Medical attendant to be provided for apprenticed labourers, and to keep a journal, to be produced to special justice or to district sessions.

6. And be it further enacted, that every person in this Colony having under his or her management 40 apprenticed labourers or upwards, shall and is hereby required to engage a medical practitioner to visit such apprenticed labourers once at least in every week; and it shall be the duty of such medical practitioner, and he is hereby authorized and required to keep a journal, and to enter the name of each apprenticed labourer then labouring under sickness or disease, distinguishing such apprenticed labourers as are thereby disqualified for labour and such as are disqualified for the ordinary amount of labour, and prescribing such medicines or articles of diet as may in his judgment be necessary for the restoration of the patient; and such journal shall be placed under the care of the employer or manager of such apprenticed labourers, which employer or manager shall be and he is hereby required to supply such apprenticed labourers with such medicines or nourishment, and to allow such apprenticed labourers such relaxations of labour, as may by such medical practitioner be so recommended and prescribed; and in reference to every apprenticed labourer for whom any such nourishment may be provided, the rules hereinbefore contained respecting the food of apprenticed apprenticed labourers shall be and is hereby suspended during the period they shall receive such nourishment; and every such employer or manager shall be and is hereby required to exhibit the journal so kept to any special justice of peace, whenever such justice shall visit the estate or settlement and shall require such journal to be so exhibited; and shall and is hereby required, in obedience to any requisition to him for that purpose made in writing by any district sessions, or by the chairman of any district sessions, to produce at such district sessions such journal; and in all cases where any apprenticed labourer shall be attacked by any acute or dangerous disease, the employer or manager of such apprenticed labourer shall and he is hereby required to employ at his own costs and charges a medical practitioner for the medical treatment and care of such apprenticed labourer, and shall supply such medicines and nourishment, and allow such relaxations of labour to such apprenticed labourer, as may by such medical practitioner be recommended and prescribed.

Apprenticed labourers, when ill, may be restricted to hospital.

7. And be it further enacted, that every apprenticed labourer who, on account of illness, sores or any other disease, the medical practitioner shall deem it necessary to restrict to the hospital or any apartment thereof, for the purpose of cure, shall be bound, and if necessary may be compelled, to submit to such restriction and subject to such hospital arrangements or regulations as may be sanctioned by the district sessions of special justices of the district in which every such apprenticed labourer shall be resident.

Penalties for infringement of rules respecting medical treatment.

8. And be it further enacted, that if any such employer or manager of apprenticed labourers as aforesaid in this Colony, or if any such medical practitioner as aforesaid, shall refuse, neglect or omit to do or perform any matter or thing which such employer, manager or medical practitioner is hereby required to do and perform in and about the engagement of such practitioner, or in or about the keeping such journal as aforesaid, or in or about the medical treatment or temporary relaxation of labour of any apprenticed labourer, or in or about the production, when thereunto required, of any such journal as aforesaid, the person so offending shall for and in respect of every such offence incur and become liable to a fine of not less than 2 l. or more than 20 l.

Cap. IV.

And for ensuring the punctual discharge of the services due by apprenticed labourers to their respective employers; and for the prevention and punishment of indolence, or the neglect or improper performance of work by any such apprenticed labourer; and for enforcing the due performance by any such apprenticed labourer of any contract into which he or she may voluntarily enter, for any hired service during the time in which he or she may not be bound to labour for his or her employer; and for the prevention and punishment of insolence and insubordination on the part of any of such apprenticed labourers towards their employers; and for the prevention and punishment of vagrancy, or of any conduct on the part of any such apprenticed labourers injuring or tending to the injury of the property of any such employer; and for the suppression and punishment of any riot or combined resistance of the laws, on the part of any such apprenticed labourers:—

Prædial apprenticed labourers to work 7 ½ hours per day. Exception as to domestics and others.

1. Be it further enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that every prædial apprenticed labourer, whether attached or unattached, shall be bound and obliged to work and labour for 7 ½ hours in each and every day of the year (Sundays and holidays hitherto allowed to the labouring population excepted), in the service or for the benefit of his or her employer; and that every non-prædial apprenticed labourer shall be bound and obliged to work and labour 10 hours in each and every day of the year (Sundays and holidays hitherto allowed to the labouring population excepted), in the service and for the benefit of his or her employer: provided nevertheless, that nothing herein contained shall extend or be construed to extend to apprenticed labourers employed in domestic services, or as boatmen or navigators of any sloop, schooner or other vessel; in the protection of property; or in tending of cattle.

A day's labour defined.

2. And be it further enacted, that a day's labour of a prædial apprenticed labourer, whether attached or unattached, shall be and is hereby declared to be such a portion of specified work as can be performed by each prædial apprenticed labourer, by assiduous and steady industry, during the space of seven hours and a half; and that a day's labour of a non-prædial apprenticed labourer shall be and the same is hereby declared to be such a portion of specified work as can be performed by each non-prædial apprenticed labourer, by assiduous and steady industry, during the space of nine hours.

Penalty for an hour's absence from employer's service.

3. And be it further enacted, that for every hour in which any apprenticed labourer shall absent himself or herself from his or her employer's service without reasonable cause, he or she shall be compelled to serve two other hours, provided that such extra hours shall not exceed 15 in the whole in any one week.

Deserter, vagabond and runaway defined.

4. And be it further enacted, that any apprenticed labourer absenting himself or herself without reasonable cause, for more than seven and a half hours in any one week, shall be adjudged a deserter; that any apprenticed labourer absenting himself or herself without reasonable cause for two days during one week, shall be adjudged a vagabond; and that any apprenticed labourer absenting himself or herself without reasonable cause for six successive days, shall be adjudged a runaway.

Reasonableness of

5. And be it further enacted, that the reasonableness of the cause of absence of an apprenticed apprenticed labourer shall in each and every case be determined by one or more of the special justices of the peace, or the district sessions of special justices, according to the jurisdiction possessed by one or more of said justices or said district sessions. cause of absence, how determined.

6. And be it further enacted, that every apprenticed labourer adjudged a deserter shall be confined to hard labour for any time not exceeding one week; that every apprenticed labourer adjudged a vagabond shall be confined to hard labour for any time not exceeding two weeks, and to any number of stripes not exceeding 15; and that every apprenticed labourer adjudged a runaway, shall be confined to hard labour for any time not exceeding one month, and to any number of stripes not exceeding 30. Punishment of a deserter, vagabond and runaway.

7. And be it further enacted, that every apprenticed labourer convicted of performing his or her work indolently, carelessly or negligently, shall for the first offence be adjudged to labour in his or her employer's service for any time not exceeding 15 hours in the whole in any one week; for the second offence, to confinement with hard labour for any time not exceeding one week; and for the third or any subsequent offence, to confinement with hard labour for any time not exceeding one fortnight, with whipping not exceeding 20 stripes. Punishment for indolence, carelessness or negligence.

8. And be it further enacted, that every apprenticed labourer who, by the careless use of fire, shall endanger the property of his or her employer or of any other person, or who shall wantonly injure the property of his or her employer entrusted to his or her care, or who shall ill use the cattle or other live stock of his or her employer, or who shall by gross negligence expose his or her employer's property to any damage or injury, shall for such offence be adjudged, in the discretion of the special justice or district sessions of special justices, either to extra labour in his or her employer's service for any time not exceeding 15 hours in the whole in any one week, or to confinement with hard labour for any time not exceeding one month, or to any number of stripes not exceeding 30 lashes, or to any two or more of such punishments: provided, that this enactment shall not exempt any such labourer from his or her liability to such actions or prosecutions as other persons of free condition may be subject and liable to in respect of any such acts by him or her done or committed, although no such labourer shall be liable to be so sued or prosecuted both under this ordinance and under such general law as aforesaid. Penalty for endangering or injuring property.

9. And be it further enacted, that whenever any apprenticed labourer shall by any district sessions of special justices be adjudged to perform extra labour in his or her employer's service for any time exceeding 15 hours, then it shall and may be lawful for such district sessions to adjudge that such extra labour shall be performed in successive weeks not exceeding 15 hours in any one week, until the number of hours of extra labour which such apprenticed labourer may have been adjudged to perform shall have been completed, and also to adjudge such extra labour, if necessary, to be performed after the expiration of his or her apprenticeship; and if such labour shall be adjudged to be performed after the expiration of the apprenticeship, then it shall be lawful to adjudge such 15 hours per week to be performed in addition to the number of seven and a half hours per day, to be reckoned a part of the number of hours adjudged to be performed, until the whole shall in like manner have been completed. Extra labour, how and when to be performed.

10. And be it further enacted, that every apprenticed labourer who shall contumaciously disobey the lawful commands of his or her employer shall be liable to any one or more of the punishments last aforesaid. Punishment for contumacious disobedience.

11. And be it further enacted, that any three or more apprenticed labourers who shall agree together to make any resistance to the lawful commands of their employer, shall be deemed guilty of an unlawful conspiracy, and shall be adjudged to confinement with hard labour for any period not exceeding six months, with whipping not exceeding 39 stripes; and that any three or more labourers who shall be engaged in a combined and open resistance to the lawful commands of their employer, shall on conviction be adjudged to the punishments last aforesaid, or any one of them. Unlawful conspiracy, and punishment thereof.

12. And be it further enacted, that any apprenticed labourer who shall be in a state of drunkenness, or who shall be found fighting, or who shall conduct himself or herself in an insolent and insubordinate manner towards his or her employer or any person in the immediate superintendence of his or her labour, shall for every such offence be liable on conviction to imprisonment with hard labour, for any time not exceeding one week, or to whipping not exceeding 15 stripes. Drunkenness, fighting, &c., how punished.

13. And be it further enacted, that no female shall be subject to be punished by whipping for any offence by her committed, but that in all cases aforesaid in which that punishment is authorized it shall be understood as applying to the case of males only; and that all the offences in respect of which such punishment by whipping may be inflicted on any such male offender, shall, when committed by females, be punished by confinement in the stocks; and that the stocks to be employed for punishment of females shall all be according to one general model, to be sanctioned by the Governor; and that no female for any offence by her committed shall be so confined in the stocks for more than ten hours in the whole for any one day of 24 hours: provided nevertheless, that it shall and may be lawful to repeat such confinement each and every day for six days consecutively and no more, care being taken that 14 clear hours at the least shall expire between the periods of such distinct confinements in the stocks; and that moreover it shall and may be lawful to detain in custody every female during the intervals of her punishment in the stocks as aforesaid. Females exempted from punishment by whipping.

Mode and place of confinement.

14. And be it further enacted, that when any apprenticed labourer shall be convicted of any offence punishable under this Act, for which confinement may be awarded, it shall be lawful to adjudge the offender to be confined, or to be confined and kept to hard labour, in the common gaol or house of correction, or other place of confinement previously approved by a district sessions of special justices; and also that the offender be adjudged to be kept in solitary confinement for the whole or any portion or portions of such confinement, or of such confinement with hard labour, as to the special justice or district sessions of special justices shall seem meet; and that in all cases in which it can or may be done, it shall be lawful to adjudge the labour to be in the service or for the benefit of the employer of the offending apprenticed labourer.

All offences under this Act to be inquired of by special justices only.

15. And be it further enacted, that all the offences aforesaid shall be inquired of by the justices of the peace having special commissions, and not by any other justices of the peace; and that every such special justice of the peace, or district sessions composed of such special justices of the peace, may, if it shall seem meet, refer any case for trial to either of the supreme courts of criminal justice of the Colony, before which such case may or can be legally referred.

Cap. V.

And to secure to the said prædial apprenticed labourers the enjoyment for their own benefit of that portion of their time during which they are not required by the said Act of Parliament to labour in the service of their respective employers; and for securing exactness in the computation of the time during which the said prædial apprenticed labourers are thereby required to labour in the service of such their respective employers; and for preventing the imposition of task-work on any such apprenticed labourer, without his or her free consent to undertake the same; and for requiring and providing for the acquiescence, in certain cases, of the minority of the prædial apprenticed labourers attached to any plantation or estate, in the distribution and apportionment amongst the whole body of such labourers of any task-work which the majority of such body shall be willing and desirous collectively to undertake; and for regulating any voluntary contracts into which any apprenticed labourers may enter with their respective employers or with any other person for hired service for any future period, and for limiting the greatest period of time to which such voluntary contract may extend, and for enforcing the punctual and effectual performance of such voluntary contracts on the part both of such apprenticed labourers and of the person or persons engaging for their employment and hire; and for the prevention and punishment of any cruelty, injustice, or other wrong or injury which may be done to or inflicted upon any such apprenticed labourers by the persons entitled to their services:—

Penalty for protracting weekly services.

1. Be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, that if the employer of any prædial apprenticed labourer shall by force or fraud protract the weekly services of such labourer beyond the period allowed by law for that purpose, he shall forfeit for the benefit of such labourer the sum of 1 s., in respect of every hour which such service shall by such means be protracted.

Commencement and close of each day's labour to be intimated to labourers.

2. And be it further enacted, that it shall be the duty of every such employer to intimate to the labourers in his employment the commencement and close of the legal hours of labour, for which purpose a signal shall be given in such manner as shall, in reference to each plantation, have been previously approved by a special justice of the district; which signal shall always be of such a nature as to be distinctly visible or audible to the several prædial apprenticed labourers in the service of any such person.

Task-work prohibited, except with consent of apprenticed labourers or acquiescence of majority.

3. And be it further enacted, that no apprenticed labourer shall be bound to undertake any task-work, except with his own free assent to the same, save in such cases in which the majority of any body of prædial apprenticed labourers attached to any plantation or estate shall be willing and desirous collectively to undertake any task-work; then and in every such case the minority of such body of apprenticed labourers so attached, shall be bound and obliged by the acquiescence of such majority. And in all cases where the employer and such majority of the body of apprenticed labourers cannot agree between themselves respecting the quantity of specified work which the whole body or any part thereof shall perform, it shall be lawful to either party to appeal to the district sessions of special justices to determine what shall be a fair portion of specified work, with reference to a day's work of 7 ½ hours; and the decision of such district sessions being registered, shall be binding for the period of six months on both parties.

Contract for specific work to be in writing, and entered in a book.

4. And be it further enacted, that every contract between the employer and the prædial apprenticed labourer, for the performance of any specific work as a task and in lieu of the prescribed daily labour, or for the performance of any labour in extra hours, shall by such employer be reduced into writing, and entered into a book to be kept for that purpose on the plantation; which book it shall be the duty of the chairman or senior special justice of the district to inspect, as often as he shall in manner aforesaid repair to the several plantations within his district.

Such contract not to continue in force longer than 14 days, unless sanctioned by special justice.

5. And be it further enacted, that no contract between the employer and the prædial apprenticed labourer for the performance of any such specific or task-work, or for the performance of any labour in extra hours, shall endure or continue in force, or be binding upon the the parties entering into the same, or either of them, after the expiration of 14 days from the making thereof, unless the same shall have been made and entered into by such parties in the presence and with the approbation of a special justice of the peace, or unless, having been entered into in his absence, the same shall be confirmed and approved by him before the expiration of such 14 days; and every such approbation of any such contract shall, by such special justice be attested under his hand in the book so to be kept as aforesaid.

Special justice to ascertain that contract is understood by apprenticed labourer.

6. And be it further enacted, that it shall be the duty of the special justice of the peace, before approving any such contract, to ascertain that the terms thereof are distinctly understood by the apprenticed labourers entering into the same; and that such labourers have entered into such contract freely and voluntarily, and that the same is not unreasonable or unjust.

Terms of contract defined.

7. And be it further enacted, that in every such contract for task-work or for extra service, extending beyond the period of one fortnight, the nature and amount of the extra labour to be performed, and the amount of the consideration to be given for the same, and the time and manner of paying such consideration, shall be distinctly expressed.

Contract not to be for more than a year.

8. And be it further enacted, that no contract for such extra service as aforesaid shall continue in force for more than one year from the day of the date thereof.

Execution may be awarded against employer for non-payment of consideration.

9. And be it further enacted, that upon proof being made to the satisfaction of the district sessions of special justices of the non-payment of the consideration stipulated for in any such contract as aforesaid, whether for task-work or for extra service, it shall be competent to such district sessions to award execution against such employer for the amount of such consideration, and if the same shall not be paid within one week next after such award, to levy on the property of the employer; which award and levy shall be respectively in the forms annexed, marked (R.) and (S.); and in default of sufficient property being found, then it shall and may be lawful for such district sessions to issue a warrant of apprehension and commitment as in other cases of debt; and such warrant of apprehension and commitment shall be in the form marked (T.)

Execution and levy, how to be executed.

10. And be it further enacted, that such execution and levy as aforesaid shall be executed by the sergeant of the police of the district, who shall thereunder seize and sell so much of the property of the employer as may be necessary for the payment of such debt, delivering over the surplus, if any, to such employer; and every apprehension, when necessary as aforesaid, shall be carried into effect by such sergeant of police.

Penalties upon apprenticed labourers for breach of contract.

11. And be it further enacted, that any apprenticed labourer violating the terms of such contract as aforesaid, for task-work or for extra services, shall be liable to the same pains and penalties as are before provided in respect of the violation by any such labourer of the duties to be by him performed in the discharge of the services owing by him by law to such his employer.

Married women and children may enter into such contracts.

12. And be it further enacted, that every married woman, notwithstanding her coverture, and every child of the age of 12 years and upwards, notwithstanding infancy, shall be competent to enter into such contracts as aforesaid for task-work or for extra services.

Penalty for beating or ill treating apprenticed labourer.

13. And be it further enacted, that if any employer of any apprenticed labourer shall whip, beat, imprison, confine in the stocks, or otherwise maltreat any such apprenticed labourer, or shall by way of punishment commit any assault upon his person, such employer shall incur a penalty, to be imposed by the district sessions of special justices, not exceeding 20 l., with imprisonment for any time not exceeding one month, in default of the payment of such fine.

Penalty, whole or part, may be awarded to apprenticed labourers.

14. And be it further enacted, that in any such case as last aforesaid, it shall be competent to such district sessions to award the whole or any part of such penalty to the apprenticed labourer injured, as and for damages for such assault; and it shall also be competent to such district sessions, if it shall seem meet, to abstain from imposing such penalty, and to commit the offender to take his trial for such offence before either of the supreme courts of the Colony having jurisdiction in the premises. If any such employer shall be convicted before any such supreme court of any cruelty towards his apprenticed labourer, or if any such employer shall be twice convicted, if the case be of an aggravated nature, of inflicting any corporal punishment, or of making any assault upon the person of any such labourer, then the labourer may be discharged from his apprenticeship by sentence of such supreme court, in addition to any other punishment awarded against such employer.

Employer twice convicted of cruelty, apprenticed labourer to be discharged.

Cap. VI.

And for the preservation of peace throughout the Colony, and the maintenance of order and good discipline amongst the said apprenticed labourers, and for preventing the escape of any such apprenticed labourers during their term of apprenticeship, from the Colony:—

Riotous assemblage of apprenticed labourers to be dispersed.

1. Be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, that if any three or more apprenticed labourers shall unite together in any riotous assemblage, any special justice of the peace, or officer of police, headborough or constable, who shall be present at the same, shall cause a flag or some other conspicuous signal to be exhibited as a warning to all persons there present to separate and disperse quietly; and that all and every such apprenticed labourers, who at the expiration of 10 minutes from the exhibition or signal shall continue present at any any such riotous assemblage, shall be taken into custody, and shall on conviction be liable to imprisonment for six weeks, with or without hard labour, and whipping not exceeding 39 stripes, or to imprisonment with hard labour for any time not exceeding 12 months.

No apprenticed labourer to reside beyond his plantation without authority.

2. And be it further enacted, that no apprenticed labourer shall reside beyond the boundary of the plantation or establishment in which he or she is or may be employed, unless either with the consent of his or her employer, or by the authority in writing of a special justice of the district in which such plantation or establishment shall be situated; and any apprenticed labourer residing off the plantation or establishment without such consent or authority as aforesaid, shall for the first offence be adjudged to one night's solitary confinement; and for a repetition of the offence shall be adjudged a deserter, and punished accordingly.

Apprenticed labourer found beyond district may be arrested.

3. And be it further enacted, that every apprenticed labourer found beyond the limits of the district to which he or she belongs, or in which he or she may be employed, except in his or her way to or from some place of public worship on Sundays, and not having with him or her a written pass for that purpose from his or her employer, or from a special justice of such district, shall be liable to be apprehended and detained; and shall, on proof and conviction that he or she shall have left his or her district without a pass, be adjudged a vagabond, and punished accordingly: provided, however, that it shall be competent to every apprenticed labourer, of his or her own free will, and without a pass, to attend during his or own time any market of the district in which he or she may reside.

xceptions, and punishment.

Absence of seven days without reasonable cause.

4. And be it further enacted, that any apprenticed labourer who shall for seven days or upwards absent himself or herself from his or her employer's service without reasonable cause, to be determined by the district sessions of special justices of the district to which he or she may belong, shall be adjudged a runaway, and shall be sentenced to imprisonment with or without hard labour not exceeding three months, or if a male, to whipping not exceeding 39 stripes.

Apprenticed labourers establishing themselves as a distinct community, to be dislodged.

5. And be it further enacted, that if it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of any special justice that any apprenticed labourers have without lawful authority established themselves in any part of the Colony as a distinct community, habitually abandoning and neglecting to perform the duties imposed upon them by law, such justice of the peace shall report the same to the district sessions of special justices; and such district sessions, upon sufficient proof being adduced, shall cause any such community to be dislodged, and if necessary shall also cause their habitations to be taken down and destroyed.

Punishment for being a member of an illegal community.

6. And be it further enacted, that if any labourer shall be convicted of having been a member of any such community, he or she shall be liable to imprisonment with hard labour for any term not exceeding six months; and if a male, to whipping by any number of stripes not exceeding 39.

Assistance of the militia may be called in.

7. And be it further enacted, that all officers and privates of the colonial militia, when called upon, shall be aiding and carrying into effect any directions which may be issued by any district sessions of special justices as aforesaid, for dislodging any such community as aforesaid.

Thirteenth section of Act of Parliament adopted.

8. And whereas, by the 13th section of the said Act of Parliament, it was enacted, that if any child who on the 1st day of August 1834 had not completed his or her sixth year, or if any child to which any female apprenticed labourer might give birth on or after the 1st day of August 1834, should be brought before any justice of the peace holding any such special commission as thereinafter mentioned; and if it should be made to appear to the satisfaction of such justice that any such child was unprovided with an adequate maintenance, and that such child had not completed his or her age of 12 years, it should be lawful for such justice, and he was thereby required, on behalf of any such child, to execute an indenture of apprenticeship, thereby binding such child as an apprenticed labourer to the person or persons entitled to the services of the mother of such child, or who had been last entitled to the services of such mother; but in case it should be made to appear to any such justice that such person or persons aforesaid was or were unable or unfit to enter into any such indenture, and properly to perform the conditions thereof, then it should be lawful for such justice, and he was thereby required, by such indenture, to bind any such child to any other person or persons to be by him for that purpose approved, and who might be willing and able properly to perform such conditions; and it should by every such indenture of apprenticeship be declared whether such child should thenceforward belong to the class of attached prædial apprenticed labourers, or to the class of unattached prædial apprenticed labourers, or to the class of non-prædial apprenticed labourers; and the term of such apprenticeship of any such child should by such indenture be limited and made to continue in force until such child should have completed his or her 21st year, and no longer; and every child so apprenticed as aforesaid, by the order of any such justice of the peace as aforesaid, should during his or her apprenticeship be subject to all such and the same rules and regulations respecting the work or labour to be by them done or performed, and respecting the food and other supplies to be to him or her furnished, as any other such apprenticed labourers as aforesaid: provided always, that the said indenture of apprenticeship should contain sufficient words of obligation upon the employer to allow reasonable time and opportunity for the education and religious instruction of such child: Be it therefore enacted and declared by this ordinance, that it is unnecessary to make further or other provisions, rules or regulations touching or concerning the matters and things set forth and contained in the said 13th section of the said Act of Parliament herein recited.

Apprenticed labourers unlawfully taking possession of land, to be dislodged.

9. And be it further enacted, that if any labourer shall without lawful authority enter into possession of any land belonging to His Majesty, or to any other person, it shall be lawful for any district sessions of special justices to dispossess such labourer of such land, and from any buildings thereon erected, and to cause the same with all crops growing thereupon to be delivered up to the owner of such land; or in case such owner shall not, within one month after such seizure, appear and prefer his claim to such land, then such crops, cattle and other goods seized shall be sold by order of such district sessions, and the proceeds of such sales shall be paid over to the colonial receiver-general or assistant colonial receiver-general of this Colony.

Punishment for unlawfully taking possession of land.

10. And be it further enacted, that any district sessions of special justices may further adjudge any apprenticed labourer unlawfully taking possession of such land to imprisonment with hard labour for any time not exceeding three months, if it shall be made to appear by sufficient proof that such possession was taken fraudulently and without knowledge that the party had no lawful claim to such possession.

Apprenticed labourer not to quit Colony without passport.

11. And be it further enacted, that no apprenticed labourer shall quit the Colony without a passport from the Governor, which passport shall not be granted except with the written consent of the employer.

Penalty for attempting to quit Colony.

12. And be it further enacted, that any labourer quitting the Colony without such passport shall be liable to imprisonment with hard labour for any term not exceeding six months.

Colony vessels, boats and crafts to be registered.

13. And be it further enacted, that all vessels, boats and craft not required to be registered under the Navigation Act, owned at, or employed in intercourse with, either of the ports of entry and clearance in this Colony, shall be registered at the offices of the respective fiscals in George Town or New Amsterdam, according to the district of the Colony to which any such vessel, boat or craft respectively belongs; and every such registration shall contain the description of the vessel, boat or craft, the name of the owner, the person in command thereof, and the place at which the same is usually moored or fastened: a copy of which registration shall be furnished gratis to the owner at the time of registry, and must accompany the vessel, boat or craft, and always be produced by the person in charge of such vessel, boat or craft, whenever he should be required to exhibit the same by any justice of the peace or constable. And all vessels, boats and craft required to be registered by this ordinance, and not so registered and accompanied by a certificate of registration, shall be liable to seizure and confiscation, together with all and every article on board of any such vessel, boat and craft: and further, every vessel, boat or craft which shall be registered in conformity with this ordinance, shall have the number of the registry painted on the bow, stern, or some other conspicuous place, otherwise such vessel, boat or craft shall be liable to seizure and confiscation.

Apprenticed labourer engaging in any occupation on sea without consent of owner, to be punished.

14. And be it further enacted, that any apprenticed labourer engaging in any occupation on the sea or on any navigable stream, as a fisherman or mariner, without the consent of his employer, shall in every such case be liable to imprisonment with hard labour not exceeding three months, or to such minor punishment as may be commensurate with the offence; and that the person in charge of any vessel, boat or craft where any such fisherman or mariner is employed, without such consent as aforesaid, shall, if an apprenticed labourer, be liable to imprisonment with hard labour, not exceeding three months, nor less than one month: Provided, however, that if it shall appear on investigation that the owner or agent of such vessel, boat or craft, is the offending party, such person in charge of any such vessel, boat or craft, shall not be liable to such punishment, unless he be the owner or agent himself; but such owner or agent shall incur a fine of not less than 10*l.* nor more than 20*l.* sterling, and shall be subject to imprisonment not exceeding three months, unless such fine be paid. And further, any person in charge of any vessel, boat or craft, who shall receive on board of any such vessel, boat or craft any apprenticed labourer, for the purpose of removing such apprenticed labourer from his district or from his employer's service, without the consent of such employer, or written permission from some person in authority over such apprenticed labourer, shall be subject to imprisonment with hard labour; or if such person in charge of such vessel, boat or craft be not an apprenticed labourer, he shall incur a penalty of not less than 10*l.* nor more than 20*l.*, and shall moreover be subject to imprisonment not exceeding three months, unless such fine be paid: Provided however, that if it shall appear upon investigation that the owner or agent of such vessel, boat or craft, is the offending party, such person in charge of such vessel, boat or craft, shall not be liable to such punishment or fine as aforesaid, unless such person be the owner or agent himself; but such owner or agent shall incur a penalty of not less than 10*l.* nor more than 20*l.* sterling, and shall be liable to imprisonment not exceeding three months, unless such fine be paid: provided also, that it shall be lawful for the person in charge of any registered vessel, boat or craft to receive on board any apprenticed labourer, for the purpose of conveying such apprenticed labourer from one side of either of the rivers of Demerara or Berbice to the other side of such rivers respectively, on any Sunday of the year.

Penalty for removing or assisting to remove apprenticed labourer from the Colony.

15. And be it further enacted, that every person removing, assisting or attempting to remove, any apprenticed labourer from the Colony in any boat or vessel, without a passport from from the Governor, shall be liable to a penalty of 100 l. or to imprisonment for any time not exceeding one month; and that if such apprenticed labourer shall be actually removed from the Colony by any such assistance, every person convicted thereof shall forfeit and pay to the employer the full value of the services of such apprenticed labourer, over and above the penalty of 100*l.*, or imprisonment for any time not exceeding one month as aforesaid.

Cap. VII.

And with respect to the determining the manner and form in which, and the solemnities with which, the voluntary discharge of any apprenticed labourer from such his or her apprenticeship may be effected; and for prescribing the form and manner in which, and the solemnities with which, the purchase by any such apprenticed labourer of his or her discharge from such apprenticeship without, or in opposition, if necessary, to the consent of the person or persons entitled to his or her services, shall be effected; and how the necessary appraisement of the future value of such services shall be made, and how and to whom the amount of such appraisement shall in each case be paid and applied; and in what manner and form, and by whom, the discharge from any such apprenticeship shall thereupon be given, executed and recorded:—

All persons may discharge apprenticed labourers from service, with the concurrence of all interested therein.

1. Be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, that subject to the regulations hereinafter made, any person being the employer of any apprenticed labourer in this Colony may, by his or her last will, or by deed under his or her hand and seal, at his or her pleasure, discharge and set free any such apprenticed labourer, so far as relates to the interest of every such testator or grantor in and to the services of such apprenticed labourer; and that every such discharge shall, as far as relates to the interest of the testator or grantor, as the case may be, but no further or otherwise, be valid and effectual in the law for the perpetual discharge and enfranchisement of any such apprenticed labourer: provided nevertheless, that no person having a partial or temporary interest in the services of any apprenticed labourer may, to the extent of such interest, effect his or her discharge gratuitously, unless all other persons having a partial, future or reversionary interest in such services shall consent or be parties to such discharge, or unless such partial, future or reversionary interests shall be purchased in the manner hereinafter provided.

If apprenticed labourer is discharged gratuitously, bond must be given for his maintenance, if he be above the age of 50 years.

2. And in order to prevent the fraudulent discharge from apprenticeship of apprenticed labourers incompetent from age or disease to earn their own living, it is further ordered, that in case any deed or instrument of such discharge shall be executed gratuitously, and without any valuable consideration passing to the employer or other person effecting the same, the apprenticed labourer so to be discharged shall, previously to the execution of any such deed or instrument, appear before a special justice of the peace for the district in which the apprenticed labourer is resident; and if it shall appear to the said special justice of the peace that such apprenticed labourer is above the age of 50 years, or is labouring under any habitual disease or infirmity of mind or body, the employer or person effecting such discharge shall, under his or her hand and seal, execute and deliver to the said special justice a bond to His Majesty in the penal sum of 100*l.*, with a condition thereunder written for the defeasance thereof, if such apprenticed labourer shall be properly fed, clothed and maintained, until the expiration of the period of his or her original apprenticeship; and no such gratuitous discharge shall be valid and effectual in the law until such bond as aforesaid shall be duly executed, registered and deposited, to the satisfaction of the aforesaid justice of the peace: provided nevertheless, that the chief justice or either of the puisne judges of this Colony shall be and he is hereby authorized, by an order under his hand, to dispense with such bond as aforesaid, in any case in which it shall be made to appear to him that neither the welfare of the apprenticed labourer so to be discharged from apprenticeship, nor the interest of the Colony at large, requires that such bond should be so entered into.

Bond not necessary in case of discharge by will. Testator's estate liable.

3. Provided nevertheless, and be it further enacted, that no such bond as aforesaid shall be required in the case of any discharge from apprenticeship by will; but if at the time of the death of the testator the apprenticed labourer so discharged shall be above the age of 50 years, or labouring under any such disease or infirmity as aforesaid, the estate of every such testator shall be liable to and chargeable with the maintenance of such apprenticed labourer until the expiration of the period of his or her apprenticeship, as fully as if the said testator had in his or her lifetime executed such bond as aforesaid.

With the concurrence of a special justice, apprenticed labourers may contract with their employers for the purchase of their discharge.

4. And to prevent ignorant apprenticed labourers effecting the purchase of their discharge from apprenticeship from persons unable to make any valid title to the same, Be it further enacted, that it is and shall be lawful for any person, being the employer of any apprenticed labourer in this Colony, to contract with such apprenticed labourer through the agency of any special justice of the peace of this Colony, acting for and on behalf of such apprenticed labourer, but not otherwise, for the discharge from apprenticeship of the said apprenticed labourer, at a price to be agreed upon between the said employer and special justice of the peace respectively; and in case of any such contract, it shall be the duty of the said special justice of the peace to obtain from the registry of apprenticed labourers a certificate of the name or names of the person or persons by whom such apprenticed labourer was last registered, as entitled to his, her or their services; and it shall also be the duty of the said special justice of the peace to give notice by advertisement in the public Gazette of this Colony, of such intended discharge from apprenticeship, 14 days at the least before before the same is effected; and if, from such certificate as aforesaid, it shall appear that the person or persons proposing to contract for the discharge from apprenticeship of any such apprenticed labourer is or are not the registered employer or employers of such apprenticed labourer, or that any future or reversionary interest in the services of any such apprenticed labourer is vested in any person or persons who is or are not a party or parties to or consenting to such proposed discharge from apprenticeship, the said special justice of the peace shall, on behalf of such apprenticed labourer, refuse to proceed with such contract. And it shall also be the duty of the said special justice of the peace, on behalf of the said apprenticed labourer, to satisfy himself that the person proposing to effect the said discharge from apprenticeship has good right and title; and it shall also be the duty of the said special justice of the peace, without fee or reward, to prepare in every such case the proper deed or instrument of discharge from apprenticeship, which shall in all cases be executed in the presence of and attested by the said special justice of the peace, or some proper person to be especially appointed by him to be such witness thereto; and every such deed or instrument being so executed, shall by such special justice of the peace be enrolled in the supreme court of civil justice in and for the district of this Colony to which he or she belongs, within one calendar next after the date and execution thereof; and in case any such deed or instrument shall not be so enrolled by the said special justice of the peace within the said period of one calendar month, the said special justice of the peace shall incur and be liable to the payment of a fine not less than 2 l. nor more than 20 l.

Apprenticed labourers may effect the purchase of their discharge by a compulsory process. If the employer be unwilling or unable to effect the discharge, or labour under any incapacity, or if any excessive sum be demanded, the chief-justice or puisne judge is to cite all persons having an interest in the services of the apprenticed labourer, to attend.

5. And to provide for the discharge from apprenticeship of apprenticed labourers desiring to obtain the same by purchase, in cases where the employer of such apprenticed labourers may be unable or unwilling to contract for such discharge from apprenticeship; Be it further enacted, that if the employer of any apprenticed labourer in this Colony, or any person having any interest in the services of any such apprenticed labourer, shall be unwilling to effect his or her discharge from apprenticeship, or shall be unable to execute a valid and effectual discharge from apprenticeship of such apprenticed labourer; or if the employer or any other person having a charge upon or interest in the services of any such apprenticed labourer shall be a minor, or a married woman, or idiot, or lunatic; or if the employer of any such apprenticed labourer shall be absent from the district of this Colony to which the apprenticed labourer belongs, or shall not be known; or if the employer of any such apprenticed labourer shall demand, as the price of his or her discharge from apprenticeship, a greater sum of money than may appear to the said special justice of the peace to be the fair and just value thereof; then, and in each and every case aforesaid, the chief justice, or either of the two puisne judges of this Colony, on application to one or either of them for that purpose, made by a special justice of the peace, shall issue a summons under his hand and seal, requiring the employer or the manager of such apprenticed labourer to appear before him by themselves or their agents, at some convenient time and place to be in such summons for that purpose appointed, and notice shall be published by the said special justice of the peace in the public Gazette of the Colony of the time and place appointed for the purpose aforesaid; and in such notice all persons having or claiming to have any title or interest to or in the services of the apprenticed labourers proposed to be discharged from apprenticeship, either in their own right, or as the agents, guardians, attorneys, trustees or representatives of any other person, shall be required to attend and prefer such claims.

On proof made to the judge of due service and publication of service, he is to require special justice and owner each to name an appraiser, and is himself to name an umpire. The judge, when necessary, is to nominate the appraiser also.

6. And be it further enacted, that at the time appointed for any such meeting as aforesaid, the chief justice, or either of the two puisne judges of the Colony, in the presence of the special justice of the peace acting for and on the behalf of the apprenticed labourer, and also in the presence of the employer or manager of the apprenticed labourer proposed to be discharged from apprenticeship, or upon proof being made to him upon oath of the due service and publication of such notice as aforesaid, then, if necessary, in the absence of such employer or manager, shall proceed to hear in a summary way what may be alleged by the said special justice of the peace, and by the employer or manager, or other persons claiming any interest in the services of the said apprenticed labourer proposed to be discharged from apprenticeship, and attending in pursuance of any such notice: and in case the said parties, or any of them, shall refuse to effect such discharge from apprenticeship at a price approved by the said special justice of the peace; or in case it shall be made to appear to the said chief justice or puisne judge that a valid and effectual discharge from apprenticeship of such apprenticed labourer cannot legally be effected by private contract; or that the employer of such apprenticed labourer, or any person having a charge upon or interest in the services of such apprenticed labourer, is a minor or a married woman, or idiot, or lunatic; or that the real employer of such apprenticed labourer is absent from the Colony, or is unknown, or cannot be found; or that any action is depending in any court of justice in the Colony, wherein the right or title to his or her services is in controversy, then and in every such case the said chief justice or puisne judge shall require the special justice of the peace, and the employer or manager of such apprenticed labourer, if attending in pursuance of such notice, each to nominate an appraiser of the value of his or her services, and the said chief judge or puisne judge shall himself nominate an umpire between such appraisers: but if such employer or manager, being duly summoned as aforesaid, shall fail to attend or attending, shall refuse or omit to nominate an appraiser, then the said chief justice or puisne judge shall not only nominate such umpire as aforesaid, but shall also nominate an appraiser on behalf of such employer or manager.

The appraisers to make a valuation in seven

7. And be it further ordered, that the appraisers so to be nominated as aforesaid shall be duly sworn, by and before the said chief justice or puisne judge, to make a fair and impardays; failing which, the umpire is to make the valuation.

tial appraisement of the value of the services of the apprenticed labourer so proposed to be discharged from apprenticeship; and within seven days next after such appointment, such appraisers shall make a joint valuation of the services of the said apprenticed labourer for the unexpired period of his or her apprenticeship, and shall certify such their valuation to the said chief justice or puisne judge under their hands and seals; and in case such joint certificate shall not be so made and delivered to the said chief justice or puisne judge within the said term of seven days, then the said umpire, being duly sworn in manner aforesaid, shall within the next succeeding seven days certify his valuation to the said chief justice or puisne judge; and the valuation to be made in manner aforesaid, either by the said joint appraisers, or in their default, by the said umpire, shall be binding and conclusive, and shall be entered and enrolled among the records of the supreme court of civil justice in and for the Colony.

On proof to the judge of fraud or injustice in making the valuation, he may set it aside; and so on, until an unobjectionable valuation is made.

8. Provided nevertheless, that if it shall be made to appear to the said chief justice or puisne judge, within one calendar month next after such valuation shall have been made, that in the making thereof the said appraisers or umpire, or any of them, acted fraudulently or unjustly, or under the influence of any improper motive, or under any mistake as to the nature of their or his duty, or under any misapprehension of any material matter of fact; then, but not otherwise, it shall be lawful for the said chief justice or puisne judge to set aside the said valuation and enrolments, and to declare the same to be void, and to direct another valuation to be made in manner aforesaid; for which purpose new appraisers and a new umpire shall in manner aforesaid be appointed and sworn, and shall proceed to make a second valuation, which being certified to the said chief justice or puisne judge in manner aforesaid, shall be to all intents and purposes binding and conclusive: provided, that such second, or any subsequent valuation, may in like manner be set aside by any such judge, on the grounds aforesaid, until a valuation is made not open to any such objection.

If the amount is not paid in three months, the proceedings cancelled.

9. Provided also, that if the amount of any such valuation shall not be paid in manner hereinafter mentioned within three calendar months next after the enrolment thereof, such enrolment shall be cancelled; and it shall not be lawful for any such apprenticed labourer, or for the special justice of the peace on his or her behalf, again to institute such proceedings as before mentioned for his or her discharge from apprenticeship, until the expiration of 12 calendar months, to be computed from the date of such former valuation.

If it be proved, that within five years the slave has been convicted of any robbery, the proceedings are to be stayed till the end of that term.

10. Provided also, that if at any time before the enrolment of any such valuation, it shall be alleged before the said judge by the employer or manager of the apprenticed labourer proposed to be discharged from apprenticeship, that such apprenticed labourer hath within five years next preceding the date of the application made to such chief justice or puisne judge, on his or her behalf, for such discharge from apprenticeship as aforesaid, been convicted in due course of law of any robbery or theft, the said judge shall inquire into the truth of such allegation; and if it shall be made to appear to him by good and sufficient evidence, that such apprenticed labourer hath within the said term of five years been so convicted of any robbery or theft, the said judge shall and he is hereby required to make an order for staying such enrolment as aforesaid; and thereupon the same and all other proceedings for the discharge from apprenticeship of any such apprenticed labourer shall be stayed until the expiration of the full term of five years from the time of conviction of any such apprenticed labourer for any such theft or robbery.

The special justice may pay to the colonial-receiver the price of the services of the apprenticed labourer in three months from the valuation, and enrol the receipt in the supreme court; after which the apprenticed labourer to be discharged.

11. And be it further enacted, that upon or within three calendar months next after the enrolment in the supreme court of justice of the Colony of any such valuation as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for the special justice of the peace, out of any monies to be supplied to him for that purpose by the apprenticed labourer proposed to be discharged from apprenticeship, to pay to the colonial-receiver or assistant colonial-receiver of the respective districts of this Colony, the appraised value of such apprenticed labourer, taking a receipt in writing from such colonial-receiver or assistant colonial-receiver for every such payment; and the chief justice or puisne judge of such Colony shall, upon application to him for that purpose made by the said special justice of the peace, make an order for the enrolment in either of the said supreme courts of civil justice, of such receipt; and the said chief justice or puisne judge shall by such order further proceed to declare and adjudge that the apprenticed labourer by or on behalf of whom such money hath been paid, is discharged from apprenticeship; and such apprenticed labourer shall thereupon be, and be deemed, taken and reputed to be sui juris to all intents and purposes.

How the purchase-money is to be invested, when necessary.

12. And be it further enacted, that the money to arise from the discharge from apprenticeship of any apprenticed labourer, by virtue of the proceedings before mentioned, shall remain in the hands of the colonial-receiver or the assistant colonial-receiver of the respective districts of this Colony, and shall bear interest at the rate of five pounds per cent. per annum, and the colonial revenue shall and is hereby declared to be pledged and responsible for the due payment of such principal money and interest; or shall, in the discretion of the Governor and the Court of Policy, be invested in the purchase, in the names of trustees to be appointed for that purpose, of any public funds or securities of Great Britain and Ireland; and the money in the hands of the said colonial-receiver or assistant colonial-receiver, and the interest accruing on such money, or the public funds of Great Britain and Ireland so to be purchased as aforesaid, and the dividends payable thereupon, shall be the property of the person or persons who was or were the master or masters of such apprenticed labourer so discharged from apprenticeship; and the said colonial-receiver or assistant colonial-receiver shall hold the said money and interest accruing thereupon on the said public funds and dividends, at the disposal of the party or parties thereto entitled by the provisions of the hereinbefore mentioned Act of Parliament.

CAP. VIII.

AND whereas it is necessary to determine the terms and the manner in which the consent of any special justice of the peace to every transfer of labourers from one plantation to another, according to the 9th section of the said Act of Parliament, shall be given, attested and recorded :—

Form of transfer of apprenticed labourers from one plantation to another.

Be it therefore enacted by the authority aforesaid, that in every case in which the consent of a justice of the peace shall be necessary for the transfer of any labourer or labourers from one plantation to another, every such transfer shall be given and attested in the form annexed; and shall, one month after the date thereof, be recorded in a book to be kept for that purpose in each of the respective registrars' offices of Demerara and Essequibo and Berbice, to which such labourer or labourers may belong.

CAP. IX.

AND in respect to the manner and form in which the indentures of apprenticeship set forth and mentioned in the 13th section of the said Act of Parliament, shall be made on the behalf of such children as are in the said 13th section mentioned; and in respect to the registering and preservation of all such indentures :—

Form of indentures of apprenticeship.

Be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, that all and every indenture of apprenticeship, made and entered into in pursuance of the 13th section of the said Act of Parliament, shall be in the form annexed; and shall be kept and recorded in either of the registrars' offices of Demerara and Essequibo, or of Berbice, to which any such apprenticed child may belong.

CAP. X.

AND whereas, by the 10th section of the said Act of Parliament, it was further enacted and declared, that the right or interest of any employer or employers, to and in the service of any such apprenticed labourers as aforesaid, should pass and be transferable by bargain and sale, contract, deed, conveyance, will or descent, according to such rules and in such manner as shall for that purpose be provided by any such Acts of Assembly, Ordinances or Orders in Council as thereinafter mentioned; provided, that no such apprenticed labourer should by virtue of any such bargain and sale, contract, deed, conveyance, will or descent, be subject or liable to be separated from his or her wife or husband, parent or child, or from any person or persons reputed to bear any such relation to him or her :—

Right to the services of apprenticed labourers to be transferable property.

Be it therefore enacted by the authority aforesaid, that the right or interest of any employer or employers, to and in the services of any such apprenticed labourers aforesaid, shall pass and be transferable by bargain and sale, contract, deed, conveyance, will or descent, according to the provisions of the said Act of Parliament: provided nevertheless, that in every case in which the services of an apprenticed labourer shall or may be transferred by sale, no such apprenticed labourer shall be publicly exhibited or compelled to attend at the place of sale, as was the custom with respect to slaves.

CAP. XI.

AND whereas, by the 22d section of the said Act of Parliament, after reciting, that whereas it might be expedient that persons in the condition of apprenticed labourers should, during the continuance of such their apprenticeship, be exempted from the performance of any civil or military service, and be disqualified from holding any civil or military office, and from the enjoyment of any political franchise within this Colony, and should be exempted from being arrested or imprisoned for debt; it was therefore enacted, that nothing in that Act contained, extended, or should be construed to extend, to interfere with or prevent the enactment by the respective Governors, Councils and Assemblies, or by such other local Legislature as aforesaid, of any such Colonies, or by His Majesty in Council, in reference to such of the said Colonies as were subject to the legislative authority of His Majesty in Council, of any Acts, Ordinances or Orders in Council, for exempting any such apprenticed labourers aforesaid, during the continuance of such their apprenticeship, from any such civil or military service as aforesaid; or for disqualifying them or any of them, during the continuance of any such apprenticeships, from the enjoyment or discharge of any such political franchise as aforesaid; or for exempting them, during the continuance of such apprenticeships, from being arrested or imprisoned for debt: And whereas it is expedient to exercise the powers and authority by the said 22d section granted and permitted :—

Apprenticed labourers exempted from certain duties, civil or military.

Be it therefore enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that persons in the condition of apprenticed labourers shall, during the continuance of such their apprenticeship, be exempted from the performance of any civil or military service, and be disqualified from holding any civil or military office, and from the enjoyment of any political franchise within this Colony, and shall be exempted from being arrested or imprisoned for debt: provided nevertheless, that nothing herein contained shall absolve any apprenticed labourer from the duty of serving in any civil or military capacity to which he may be called by the Governor, in case of

of invasion, rebellion, or any other great public exigency; or to any apprenticed labourer holding the office of constable, or any office in the service of any corporation or body politic, or in any church or ecclesiastical society, such as the situation of beadles, parish clerks, and any other employment, sometimes called offices, and which carry with them no political character or franchise.

CAP. XII.

1. AND be it further enacted, that every special justice of the peace shall be competent, and he is hereby authorized to administer oaths to all persons touching or concerning any matters or things belonging to or coming under his cognizance by virtue of this ordinance.

Definition of the word "employer."

2. And be it further enacted, that whenever the word "employer" shall have been made use of, or shall be found in this ordinance, the same shall mean the person who would be entitled to the possession of any apprenticed labourer still in a state of slavery.

Definition of "a day's hard labour."

3. And be it further enacted, that a day's hard labour shall be a period of time not exceeding 12 hours of actual labour within the 24 hours.

Memorandum of transfer of services of apprenticed labourers to be recorded.

4. And be it further enacted, that from and after the 1st day of August 1834, no deed or instrument whereby the services of any apprenticed labourer or labourers in this Colony shall be transferred or affected, or intended to be transferred or affected, shall be good or valid in law, to pass or convey, or affect the services of any such apprenticed labourer or labourers, unless an annotation or memorandum of such deed or instrument shall be made or recorded in a book to be kept for that purpose in the colonial registrar's office of each of the respective districts in this Colony, within one month after the making or executing such deed or instrument, if made or executed in this Colony; or within one month after the arrival in this Colony of any such deed or instrument, if made or executed out of the Colony.

Application of fines.

5. And be it further enacted, that all fines incurred and imposed under and by virtue of this Act, shall be paid into the colonial chest of the Colony.

And that no ignorance shall be pretended of this our Ordinance, these presents shall be printed and published in the customary manner.

Thus done and enacted at our adjourned Assembly, held at the Colony House, George Town, Demerara, this 8th day of March 1834, and published the following.

MAURITIUS.

AN ORDER of the KING in COUNCIL, "for giving effect in the Colony of the Mauritius to the Statute 3 & 4 Will. IV, c. 73, for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Dominions."

At the Court at St. James's, the 17th day of September 1834;

Present,

The King's Most Excellent Majesty in Council.

WHEREAS, by a certain Act of Parliament passed in the 3d and 4th years of His Majesty's reign, intituled, "An Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies, for promoting the Industry of the Manumitted Slaves, and for compensating the Persons hitherto entitled to the Services of such Slaves," it is, amongst other things, recited, that it is necessary that various rules and regulations should be framed and established for ascertaining with reference to each apprenticed labourer within the said Colonies respectively, whether he or she belongs to the class of attached prædial apprenticed labourers, or to the class of unattached apprenticed labourers, or to the class of non-prædial apprenticed labourers, and for determining the manner and form in which and the solemnities with which the voluntary discharge of any apprenticed labourer from such his or apprenticeship may be effected, and for prescribing the form and manner in which and the solemnities with which the purchase by any such apprenticed labourer, or his or her discharge from such apprenticeship without, or in opposition, if necessary, to the consent of the person or persons entitled to his or her services shall be effected, and how the necessary appraisement of the future value of such services shall be made, and how and to whom the amount of such appraisement shall in each case be paid and applied, and in what manner and form and by whom the discharge from any such apprenticeship shall thereupon be given, executed and recorded; and that it is also necessary for the preservation of peace throughout the said Colonies, that proper regulations should be framed and established for the maintenance of order and good discipline amongst the said apprenticed labourers, and for ensuring the punctual discharge of the services due by them to their respective employers, and for the prevention and punishment of indolence, or the neglect or improper performance of work by any such apprenticed labourer, and for enforcing the due performance by any such apprenticed labourer of any contract into which he or she may voluntarily enter for any hired service during the time in which he or she may not be bound to labour for his or her employer, and for the prevention and punishment of insolence and insubordination on the part of any such apprenticed labourers towards their employers, and for the prevention or punishment of vagrancy, or of any conduct on the part of any such apprenticed labourers injuring or tending to the injury of the property of any such employer, and for the suppression and punishment of any riot or combined resistance of the laws on the part of any such apprenticed labourers, and for preventing the escape of any such apprenticed labourers during their term of apprenticeship from the Colonies to which they may respectively belong; and that it will also be necessary for the protection of such apprenticed labourers as aforesaid that various regulations should be framed and established in the said respective Colonies for securing punctuality and method in the supply to them of such food, clothing, lodging, medicines, medical attendance, and such other maintenance and allowances as they are by the said Act declared entitled to receive, and for regulating the amount and quality of all such articles, in cases where the laws at present existing in any such Colony may not in the case of slaves have made any regulation or any adequate regulation for that purpose; and that it is also necessary that proper rules should be established for the prevention and punishment of any frauds which might be practised, or of any omissions or neglects which might occur respecting the quantity or the quality of the supplies so to be furnished, or respecting the periods for the delivery of the same; and that it is necessary in those cases in which the food of any such prædial apprenticed labourers as aforesaid may either wholly or in part be raised by themselves by the cultivation of ground to be set apart and allotted for that purpose, that proper regulations should be made and established as to the extent of such grounds, and as to the distance at which such grounds may be so allotted from the ordinary place of abode of such prædial apprenticed labourers, and respecting the deductions to be made from the cultivation of such grounds from the annual time during which such prædial apprenticed labourers are hereinbefore declared liable to labour; and that it may also be necessary by such regulations as aforesaid to secure to the said prædial apprenticed labourers the enjoyment for their own benefit of that portion of their time during which they are not hereby required to labour in the service of their respective employers, and for securing exactness in the computation of the time during which such prædial apprenticed labourers are hereby required to labour in the service of such their respective employers; and that it is also necessary that provision should be made for preventing the imposition of task-work on any such apprenticed labourer without his or her free consent to undertake the same; but that it may be necessary by such regulations in certain cases to require and provide for the acquiescence of the minority of the prædial apprenticed labourers attached to any plantation or estate, in the distribution and apportionment amongst the whole body of such labourers of any task-work which the majority of such body shall be willing and desirous collectively to undertake; and that it is also necessary that regulations should be made respecting any voluntary contracts into which any apprenticed labourers may enter with their respective employers, or with any other person for hired service for any future period, and for limiting the greatest period of time to which such voluntary contract may extend, and for enforcing the punctual and effectual performance of such voluntary contracts on the part both of such apprenticed labourers, and of the person or persons engaging for their employment and hire; and that it is also necessary that regulations should be made for the prevention or punishment of any cruelty, injustice, or other wrong or injury which may be done to or inflicted upon any such apprenticed labourers by the persons entitled to their services; and that it is also necessary that proper regulations should be made respecting the manner and form in which such indentures of apprenticeship as aforesaid shall be made on behalf of such children as aforesaid, and respecting the registering and preservation of all such indentures; and that it is also necessary that provision should be made for ensuring promptitude and dispatch, and for preventing all unnecessary expense in the discharge by the justices of the peace holding such special commissions as in the said Act mentioned of the jurisdiction and authorities thereby committed to them, and for enabling such justices to decide in a summary way such questions as may be brought before them in that capacity, and for the division of the said respective Colonies itno districts for the purposes of such jurisdiction, and for the frequent and punctual visitation by such justices of the peace of the apprenticed labourers within such their respective districts; and that it is also necessary that regulations should be made for indemnifying and protecting such justices of the peace in the upright execution and discharge of their duties; and that such regulations as aforesaid could not without great inconvenience be made except by the respective Governors, Councils and Assemblies, or other local Legislatures of the said respective Colonies, or by His Majesty, with the advice of His Privy Council, in reference to those Colonies to which the legislative authority of His Majesty in Council extends; it is therefore enacted and declared in and by the said Act, that nothing therein contained extends or shall be construed to extend to prevent the enactment by the respective Governors, Councils and Assemblies, or by such other local Legislatures as aforesaid, or by His Majesty, with the advice of His Privy Council, of any such Acts of General Assembly, or Ordinances or Orders in Council, as may be requisite, for making and establishing such several rules and regulations as aforesaid, or any of them, or for carrying the same or any of them into full and complete effect: provided nevertheless, and it is thereby enacted, that it shall not be lawful for any such Governor, Council and Assembly, or for any such local Legislature, or for His Majesty in Council, by any such Acts of Assembly, Ordinances, or Orders in Council as aforesaid, to make or establish any enactment, regulation, provision, rule or order, which shall be in anywise repugnant or contradictory to the said recited Act, or any part thereof, but that every such enactment, regulation, provision, rule or order shall be and is thereby declared to be absolutely null and void, and of no effect.

Now, therefore, in pursuance of the said recited Act of Parliament, and for carrying the same into effect within the Island of Mauritius, it is hereby ordered by His Majesty, by and with the advice of His Privy Council, that the several rules and regulations contained in the 12 chapters hereunto subjoined and annexed, and which 12 chapters are and shall be taken to be part of this present Order, shall extend to and be in force within the Island of Mauritius, and the dependencies thereof, upon, from and after the 1st day of February 1835.

(signed) C. C. Greville.

Cap. I.

On the Judicial and Ministerial Agency to be employed.

1. The Colony of Mauritius shall be divided into not less than seven judicial districts.
2. The Governor shall by proclamation define, and, as occasion may require, shall alter the limits of such districts.
3. One special justice, at least, shall be appointed to each of the before-mentioned districts.
4. In each district shall be set apart one or more tract or tracts of land, which, with the building to be erected thereon, shall be called the police settlement or police settlements of the district.
5. Every such police settlement shall be established in the vicinity of as large a body as may be of the population of the district.
6. It shall be lawful for the special justice or special justices of each district to license in such district places of safe custody and correction, situate at convenient distances from each other.
7. The Governor shall appropriate for the formation of the police settlements any waste lands of the Crown which may be situate conveniently for that purpose; and in districts where such Crown lands cannot be found, shall, by exchange or purchase, procure the lands wanting for the purpose.
8. At the first formation of any such police settlement, the members thereof, assisted by such hired labourers as may be indispensable, shall be employed in the erection of temporary buildings for their own occupation, such buildings to be hereafter superseded by more permanent buildings, to be erected by the means subsequently mentioned.

9. At each police settlement shall be erected a house of correction.

10. Until permanent police settlements shall be formed, and the buildings requisite for that purpose erected, it shall be lawful for the Governor, with the advice and consent of the Legislative Council to procure and provide, by hire or otherwise, suitable buildings, to be occupied temporarily as police settlements.

11. At each police settlement shall also be established a penal gang, to be composed of such persons as shall be condemned to imprisonment with hard labour.

12. Every such police settlement, place of safe custody and correction, shall be placed under the general charge of the special justices of the district, and under the immediate superintendence of a special justice of the district, to be selected by the Governor for that purpose, and who shall be called a superintending special justice, and shall reside thereat, or in the immediate vicinity thereof.

13. Each police settlement shall consist of no less than one sergeant and five privates, all being able-bodied men, between the ages of 20 and 50 years.

14. The sergeant and privates of each police settlement shall be appointed by the Governor, and shall be liable to be removed by him for bad conduct or inefficiency.

15. The sergeants and privates shall be liable to be suspended from office by the superintending special justice or justices of the district, subject to the Governor's confirmation or disallowance of such suspension.

16. In addition to the police force stationed at each police settlement, the superintending special justice shall appoint and swear in such persons in their respective districts as they shall think fit to act as constables. Nothing herein contained shall prevent an apprenticed labourer from being appointed, sworn in and acting as a constable.

17. The superintending special justices shall, once in each quarter, respectively make to the Governor a report of the effective strength and condition of the police force at each settlement, and of the state of the buildings and provision grounds there, and of the state and conduct of the prisoners confined therein.

18. The Governors shall from time to time, by and with the advice of the legislative Council, frame and publish all necessary rules for the internal discipline of the said police settlements, and of the said places of safe custody and correction; for the clothing, arming, supporting and remunerating the sergeant and privates of the said police; for remunerating the said constables; for securing the due performance, by the said police and constables, of their respective duties; for the employment of the penal gang, and also of the sergeants and privates of the said police when not engaged in police duties; for the support of the prisoners in the said houses of correction and places of safe custody; for a due separation of prisoners of different sexes; for the classification of prisoners; for their religious instruction; for the maintenance of cleanliness, order and sobriety amongst them; and for the prevention and prompt punishment of any neglect or violation of such rules. And all rules so framed and published shall be transmitted for His Majesty's approbation, and shall, until disallowed or altered, remain in full force.

19. It shall be the duty of the sergeant and the privates to carry into execution such orders as they shall receive from the special justice for the prevention or repressing of crimes, and for enforcing obedience to the law, and for inflicting such punishments as are hereby authorized.

Cap. II.

On the Procedure to be observed by the Special Magistrates in the Exercise of their Jurisdiction.

1. Every superintending special justice shall reside within the district to which he is appointed, unless when prevented by sickness or other reasonable cause, to be allowed by the Governor.

2. Every such superintending special justice shall, one day in each week, or oftener if need be, at the place of his residence, hold a session for the hearing and deciding upon such cases as may be brought before him.

3. Every plantation in each district, upon which 10 or more apprenticed labourers shall be employed, shall be visited by a superintending or other special justice once in each fortnight, or oftener if need be, who shall there take cognizance of such cases as may be brought before him, whether such cases shall relate to apprenticed labourers employed on that plantation or to any other apprenticed labourers.

4. Every such special justice shall keep a journal of all the cases brought before him, in which he shall enter, 1st, the date of the complaint; 2d, the name of the complainant; 3d, the substance of the complaint; 4th, the names of the witnesses adduced on either side; 5th, the substance of the evidence; 6th, his decision on the case; 7th, whether the decision has been carried into effect; 8th, any general remarks which he may think desirable.

5. All such journals shall be kept in one uniform manner, to be prescribed for that purpose by the Governor.

6. At the end of each quarter the special justice shall transmit to the Governor a duplicate of his journal for the preceding quarter, with an affidavit thereto annexed, to the effect that it has been faithfully kept, and that, with the exception of unintentional errors, it contains a true account of all the proceedings in which the deponent has been engaged, as such special justice, during the quarter to which it refers.

7. On

7. On receiving any complaint, it shall be the duty of the special justice to reduce it to writing, and to cause it to be read by, or to read it over, to the complainant, by whom it shall be subscribed.

8. If the complaint shall appear to the justice immaterial, and not to deserve further inquiry, he may at once dismiss the complaint; but if he shall think inquiry necessary, he shall call upon the complainant to make oath that the complaint is true.

9. Upon taking any complaint, to the truth of which such oath shall have been so made, the special justice shall either issue his warrant for the arrest of the party charged, or shall issue, if necessary, a summons for his attendance, as the case may require. The warrant of arrest shall be in the form annexed, marked (A.), and the summons in the form annexed, marked (B.)

10. The warrant of arrest shall be issued in all cases which impute to the party charged a capital or a transportable offence; in all cases where there is reason to apprehend that the party charged would endeavour to escape; and in all cases where there is reason to apprehend danger to the public peace from delay. In all other cases the justice is to proceed in the first instance by summons, if necessary.

11. In cases in which it may be necessary to adduce witnesses in support of or in answer to any such complaint, the justice shall issue a summons, if necessary, to every such witness, in the annexed form, marked (C.)

12. At the time and place appointed by any such warrant or summons for proceeding upon any such complaint, the justice shall, in the presence of all parties, or of such of them as being summoned shall attend in pursuance of such summons, first read over the written complaint, and then take down in writing the answer of the party charged, and then proceed to examine on oath the party complaining, and the witnesses, taking down in writing the deposition of each witness, which shall be read over to and signed by him.

13. The justice may from time to time adjourn any such proceeding for further inquiry, and, if necessary, commit the party charged to custody pending such adjournment, or take bail for his appearance. Every such commitment or bail shall be in the annexed forms, marked (D.) and (E.)

14. At the close of such proceedings the justice shall pronounce his decision thereupon, which decision he shall reduce into writing, and subscribe with his hand.

15. By any such decision the justice shall, as law and reason may seem to him to require, either dismiss the complaint, or sanction any lawful compromise between the parties which he may think just, or convict the party charged, or commit him to prison to take his trial for the imputed offence.

16. If the complaint shall be dismissed, the justice shall, in such his written decision, state whether it was so dismissed as being unproved, or as being frivolous and vexatious, or as being malicious.

17. If any such complaint shall be so dismissed as frivolous and vexatious, the justice may adjudge the complainant, if a labourer, to work in the service of his employer for any time not exceeding in the whole 15 extra hours in any one week, or to any number of stripes not exceeding 15; or if the complainant be the employer, the justice may adjudge such employer to the payment of a penalty, for the use of the labourer, of not less than 10*s.* sterling, and not greater than 5*l.* sterling.

18. If any such complaint shall be so dismissed as malicious, it shall be competent to the justice, at the instance of the party charged, to adjudge the complainant, if an apprenticed labourer, to imprisonment with hard labour for any time not exceeding one month, or to any number of stripes not exceeding 30; or, if the employer of any such labourer, to a fine not less than 40*s.* sterling, and not greater than 10*l.* sterling, for the benefit of the party charged; which judgment shall be a bar to any suit, action or prosecution against such complainant for calumny, defamation, or otherwise, in respect of such his complaint.

19. If the justice shall, by such his decision, convict the party charged, or shall convict the complainant of preferring a frivolous and vexatious or a malicious complaint, such conviction shall be severally drawn up according to the forms annexed, marked (F.) and (G.)

20. If such magistrates shall commit the party charged to take his trial for the imputed offence, such commitment shall be drawn up in the form annexed, marked (H.)

21. Upon any such conviction as aforesaid by such special justice, he shall forthwith issue a warrant for the execution thereof.

22. All summonses, warrants, commitments and other orders, so to be issued by any such justice as aforesaid, shall be executed by the police officers of his district; such justice being nevertheless authorized, as occasion may require, to address the same to any other person or persons jointly with, or instead of, such officers of police as to him may seem requisite.

23. Any summons, warrant or order issued by any such special justice within his own district may, without any further authority, be carried into execution in any part of the Colony, though beyond such district.

24. If any person summoned by such justice as a witness shall not appear in obedience to such summons, or, appearing, shall refuse to be sworn or examined, or to answer any question proposed to him by such justice in relation to the matters depending before him, it shall be lawful for such justice to issue his warrant for the arrest of any such defaulter, or to commit him to close custody, there to remain until he shall submit to be so sworn and examined, and to make such answers as aforesaid. Every such warrant of arrest or commitment shall be in the form annexed, marked (I.) and (K.)

25. If it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the Governor and Legislative Council

Council that the forms of proceeding hereinbefore prescribed are needlessly burdensome upon the justices of the several districts within the Colony, or of any one or more of such districts, or that they impede or interfere with the prompt and effective execution of the law, the Governor, with advice and consent of the Legislative Council, shall be entitled to suspend any part of the preceding rules relating to such procedure, or to adapt the same to the circumstances of the case, so as more effectually to promote the punctual, orderly and effective execution of the law; and for that purpose to frame and publish rules and ordinances, which shall be transmitted for His Majesty's confirmation, and which, until disallowed, shall be in full force.

26. It shall be lawful for the Governor to assign to such one or more of the special justices as he shall select for that purpose the following duties; namely, to examine into the quarterly journals hereby directed to be transmitted by the special justices to the Governor; to visit the judicial districts throughout the whole or any part of the Colony, and to inspect the police settlements and places of safe custody and correction belonging to such district; and to examine into the state of the police force, and of the prisoners in the houses of correction and places of safe custody, and of the penal gangs in such districts, and generally to ascertain how far the rules hereby established, or to be established, under the provisions herein contained are duly observed, and to report to the Governor, at such times and in such manner as the Governor shall direct, upon the several matters aforesaid.

27. If any suit or action shall be commenced against any special justice in respect of any act, matter or thing by him done by virtue and in pursuance thereof, and if the Court shall give judgment for the defendant, the plaintiff shall, by such judgment, be condemned to pay treble costs of suit.

28. If in any such suit or action such justice shall, at any time before final judgment, tender to the plaintiff sufficient amends for the wrong or injury in respect of which the same may be brought, and submit to pay the costs of suit up to that time incurred, and if the plaintiff shall refuse to accept such amends and costs of suit, then upon proof made to the court at the trial of such suit that such amends have been so tendered and were sufficient, judgment shall be given for the plaintiff in the amount of the sum so tendered, subject nevertheless to the reduction therefrom of the costs of suit of the defendant.

29. No suit or action shall be brought against any such justice in respect of any matter or thing by him done under or in pursuance hereof, unless the same shall be commenced within six months after the cause of action occurred.

Cap. III.

On the Division of Apprenticed Labourers into their respective Classes.

1. By a day to be appointed for that purpose, the registrar of slaves shall deliver to every owner of slaves a list of the slaves appearing in the registry to belong to him; for which a fee of 2*s*. only shall be charged.

2. By a time to be fixed for the purpose, every such owner of slaves shall return such list to the registrar, distinguishing in reference to each slave therein mentioned, to which of the three classes he belongs.

3. To every such return shall be annexed an affidavit, to the effect that the distinctions therein made correspond with the occupations usually pursued for 12 months next preceding the date of the Act by each of the slaves to whom such returns may refer.

4. If in any case the registrar shall see cause to doubt the accuracy of the return, he shall appoint a time and place, at which the owner shall attend him, to substantiate the accuracy of such return.

5. At the time and place so to be appointed, the person to whom such notice shall be addressed shall attend such registrar, and if required, shall bring with him any slave respecting whom any such doubt may have arisen.

6. The registrar shall then proceed to examine the person making such return, and the slave respecting whom such doubt has arisen, and any witnesses who may be adduced respecting the truth of such return, and may, if necessary, adjourn such examination from time to time.

7. The registrar shall then either confirm or correct any such return as he may see fit, giving notice to the party making such return, and to the slaves respectively, of such his decision.

8. If either of the party making such return, or the slave to whom it may refer, shall be dissatisfied with the decision of the registrar, such party may, on his own behalf, and the registrar may, on the behalf of such slave, apply to the chief or to any other judge of the superior court in such Colony, by petition, setting forth the nature of such decision and the objections thereto.

9. The judge to whom any such petition may be preferred shall proceed in a summary way to hear and decide the same, and his decision shall be final and conclusive.

10. The judges of the said court shall make all necessary rules for regulating the proceedings upon every such petition in the manner which may be most conducive to method, punctuality and dispatch.

11. When such proceedings as aforesaid shall have taken place, there shall be affixed to the entry of the name of each prædial attached slave in the registry, the letters P. A.; of each prædial unattached slave, the letters P. U.; and of each non-prædial slave, the letters N. P.

12. During

12. During the continuance of the apprenticeship, the slave registry, so corrected as aforesaid, shall be deposited amongst the records of the superior courts of the Colony; and when any question shall arise respecting the class to which any apprenticed labourer belongs, such corrected registry, or a certified extract thereof, shall be taken as conclusive evidence of the fact.

13. Any person neglecting or omitting to make the return, or the affidavit before-mentioned, or to attend the registrar when summoned by him for that purpose, shall incur a penalty of not more than 10*l.*, nor less than 20*s.*; and in the event of the wilful absence of any such person, it shall be lawful for the registrar to proceed and to decide any such question as though such party had attended.

Cap. IV.

On the Maintenance of the Apprenticed Labourers.

1. It shall be the duty of every employer of prædial apprenticed labourers, within the third week of the month of September of each year, to deliver, or cause to be delivered to the special justice of the district in which such prædial apprenticed labourers are resident, a written declaration in the form annexed, marked (L.), specifying whether it is the intention of such employer, during the current year, to maintain his prædial apprenticed labourers by the cultivation of ground, to be to them appropriated for that purpose, or by an allowance of provisions.

2. That every employer who shall, by such declaration as aforesaid, propose to maintain his prædial apprenticed labourers by an allowance of provisions, shall be and is hereby bound and required to supply to such prædial apprenticed labourers such amount of provisions, and of such kind, as by the clause next hereinafter contained are directed to be supplied to non-prædial apprenticed labourers above the age of 10 years.

3. Every employer shall be and is hereby bound and required to maintain his non-prædial apprenticed labourers, and also his prædial apprenticed labourers, until such written declaration shall have been so made and delivered by him as aforesaid, by an allowance of provisions, and to supply such provisions to the amount and of the kinds following; that is to say, each and every apprenticed labourer, above the age of 10 years, shall receive in each week not less than six pints of wheaten or rye flour, or rice, or nine pints of corn-meal or farine of manioc, or 7 lbs. of biscuit, or 50 full-grown plantains, or 21 lbs. of yams or sweet cassada, or sweet potatoes, or eddoes, or tanniers, and 3 ½ lbs. of good salted cod fish, commonly called salt fish; and to all apprenticed labourers under the age of 10 years, one-half of the above allowance.

4. All provisions so to be supplied to the apprenticed labourers in the Colony of Mauritius shall be sound and fit for consumption, and of good average merchantable quality.

5. The Governor of the said Colony may from time to time by proclamations, to be by him for that purpose issued, authorize the substitution for the provisions aforesaid of any other provisions equivalent to and equally nutritious with the same.

6. The apprenticed labourers to whom such provisions shall be supplied shall also be provided by, and at the expense of their employers, with the means of preserving the same from week to week, and of properly preparing the same for human food.

7. Every employer of prædial apprenticed labourers who shall by such declaration as aforesaid propose to maintain such prædial apprenticed labourers by the appropriation of ground, to be by them cultivated for that purpose, shall be and is hereby bound and required to set apart for every prædial apprenticed labourer so to be maintained half an acre of land, properly adapted for the growth of provisions, and not more than two miles distant from the place of residence of such prædial apprenticed labourer.

8. Every such employer shall be and is hereby bound and required to supply every prædial apprenticed labourer for whom any such ground shall be so appropriated with such seeds and with such implements of husbandry as may be necessary for the cultivation of such ground, on the first entering of such prædial apprenticed labourer in the occupation thereof.

9. It shall not be lawful for any person whomsoever to dispossess any prædial apprenticed labourer of any land so cultivated by him or her, until such labourer shall have had full time and opportunity for reaping and gathering in all crops by him or her planted and growing upon such ground.

10. The crops, when growing upon any such ground, and when severed therefrom, shall and are hereby declared to be the sole and absolute property of the prædial apprenticed labourer for and in respect of whom such ground shall have been appropriated and set apart.

11. Every prædial apprenticed labourer for or in respect of whom any ground shall be so appropriated and set apart for his support shall, out of the annual time during which such prædial apprenticed labourer is by the said recited Act required to labour, after the rate of 45 hours per week as aforesaid, be allowed such number of hours, not being fewer than 4 ½ hours per week, and not being more than 7 ½ hours per week, as the Governor, with the advice and consent of the Legislative Council, shall, by rules to be framed for that purpose, determine; which rules shall be duly transmitted for His Majesty's approbation, and until disallowed or altered, shall remain in full force.

12. If any employer of prædial apprenticed labourers within the said Colony of Mauritius shall neglect or omit to sign and deliver, in manner and within the time hereinbefore mentioned, tioned, such written declaration as aforesaid, he or she shall incur a penalty of 2*l.* for such omission or neglect in respect of the first week in which the same shall occur, with additional penalties of 4*l.* in the second week, 6*l.* in the third week, and so on in arithmetical progression in respect of each additional week during which such neglect shall be continued; and if any employer or manager of apprenticed labourers shall not supply to such apprenticed labourers provisions of such amount and quality, and at such times as he is hereinbefore required to supply the same, or shall not provide such apprenticed labourers with the means of preserving such provisions from week to week, or with the means of properly preparing the same for human food, every employer shall incur and become liable to a penalty equal to twice the value of the provisions which ought so to have been supplied, or for the preservation and preparation of which such means as aforesaid ought to have been provided, which last-mentioned penalties shall accrue to and be for the benefit of the apprenticed labourers injured by any such omission or neglect; and if any such employer of prædial labourers shall not set apart for every prædial apprenticed labourer who is maintained by the cultivation of ground such land, of such quality and quantity, and so situate as hereinbefore is required, or shall neglect or omit to supply any such prædial apprenticed labourer with such seeds and implements of husbandry as aforesaid, or shall dispossess any such prædial apprenticed labourer of any land by him or her cultivated, until such prædial apprenticed labourer shall have had full time and opportunity for reaping and gathering in all crops by him or her planted, and growing upon such ground, every person so offending shall incur and become liable to a penalty equal to twice the amount of the loss sustained by every such prædial apprenticed labourer by every such act, omission or neglect, which penalty shall go and be applied to and for the use and benefit of the prædial apprenticed labourer so injured; and if any such employer of prædial apprenticed labourers shall neglect or omit to allow to any prædial apprenticed labourer for or in respect of whom any ground shall be so appropriated such number of hours as aforesaid in each week for the cultivation thereof, every person so offending shall for each and every such offence incur a distinct and separate penalty of 10*s.*, which shall go and be applied to and for the benefit of the prædial apprenticed labourers injured thereby, the number of such penalties being equal to the number of prædial apprenticed labourers affected by such offence multiplied by the number of the days on which such offences may have been repeated.

13. It is and shall be the duty of every employer of apprenticed labourers within the said Colony once, that is to say, either in the month of January or in the month of June in each year, and he or she is hereby required to deliver to every such apprenticed labourer for his or her use, either in the month of January or in the month of June in each and every year, the following articles; that is to say,

To every male apprenticed labourer above the age of five years, one felt hat, one Scotch bonnet, one cloth wrapper or jacket, two red flannel or Oznaburg or check shirts, two pairs of cloth, Oznaburg, or duck or sheeting trousers, and one knife.

To each and every female apprenticed labourer above the age of five years, one felt hat, one cloth wrapper, two neckerchiefs, two linen or cotton shifts, two dowlas or Oznaburg petticoats, and one pair of scissors. Also, to every apprenticed labourer one tin pan or pannikin annually, one blanket every two years, and one iron pot every three years, or oftener, if necessary.

14. Provided always, and it is further ordered, that with the authority in writing of any special justice of the district in which any such apprenticed labourers are resident, the employer of any such apprenticed labourers may, and is hereby authorized to substitute for the articles hereinbefore enumerated any other articles of clothing or household furniture which shall, in the judgment of such special justice, be equivalent to the articles hereinbefore directed and prescribed; and all the articles so to be supplied to such apprenticed labourers as aforesaid, which shall be conformable to the before-mentioned directions, or substituted in manner aforesaid, shall be of good average merchantable quality.

15. If any employer of apprenticed labourers in the said Colony shall neglect or omit, within the time or times hereinbefore for that purpose limited, to supply and deliver to and for the use of any apprenticed labourer under his or her management such articles of clothing and household furniture as are hereinbefore referred to, the person so offending shall incur and become liable to a fine equal to twice the value of the article or articles so withholden, which penalty shall go and be applied to and for the use and benefit of the apprenticed labourer injured by such neglect.

16. Every employer of apprenticed labourers within the said Colony shall be and is hereby required to supply each and every apprenticed labourer under his or her management with a wooden or iron bedstead, or with boards so arranged as to enable every such apprenticed labourer to sleep during the night at an elevation of one foot, at the least, above the ground; and every employer who shall neglect or omit so to supply any such apprenticed labourer with such bedstead, or such means of sleeping above the ground as aforesaid, shall for every such neglect or omission incur and become liable to a fine of 5*s.* in respect of each and every apprenticed labourer, which fine shall be again incurred from week to week as long as such neglect or omission shall continue.

17. Every person in the said Colony being the employer of 40 apprenticed labourers or upwards, shall and is hereby required to engage a medical practitioner to visit such apprenticed labourers in such his medical capacity once at the least in each 14 days; and it shall be the duty of such medical practitioner, and he is hereby authorized and required to keep a journal of the health of such body of apprenticed labourers so placed under his medical superintendence, in which journal he shall, once in each 14 days, record what is the general ral state of health of such body of apprenticed labourers, and shall also enter the name of each apprenticed labourer then labouring under sickness, distinguishing such apprenticed labourers as are thereby disqualified for the ordinary amount of labour, and prescribing such medicines or articles of diet as may in his judgment be necessary for the restoration of the sick; and it shall be the duty of every such medical practitioner once in each fortnight to deliver a copy of the entries so made by him in his journal to the employer of such apprenticed labourers, which employer shall be and is hereby required to supply such apprenticed labourers with such medicines or nourishments, and to allow to such apprenticed labourers such relaxations of labour as may by such medical practitioner be so recommended and prescribed; and in reference to every apprenticed labourer for whom any such nourishment may be provided, the rules hereinbefore contained respecting the food of apprenticed labourers shall be and are hereby suspended; and every such medical practitioner shall and is hereby required, in obedience to any requisition to him for that purpose made in writing by any such superintending special justice, to produce to such justice his journal; and in case of any acute or dangerous disease of any apprenticed labourer, the employer of such apprenticed labourer shall and is hereby required to employ, at his own costs and charges, a medical practitioner for the care and medical treatment of such apprenticed labourer.

18. If any such employer of apprenticed labourers as aforesaid in the said Colony, or if any such medical practitioner as aforesaid shall refuse, neglect or omit to do or perform any matter or thing which such employer or medical practitioner is hereby required to do and perform in and about the engagement of such practitioner, or in or about the keeping such journal as aforesaid, or in or about the medical treatment, nourishment, or temporary relaxation of labour of any apprenticed labourer, or in or about the production, when thereunto required, of any such journal as aforesaid, the person so offending shall for and in respect of every such offence incur and become liable to a fine of not less than 2 l. or more than 20 l.

19. Every apprenticed labourer who, on account of any disease, the medical practitioner shall deem it necessary to confine to the hospital, or to any apartment thereof, for the purpose of cure, shall be bound, and if necessary may be compelled, to submit to such hospital regulations as shall be sanctioned by a superintending special justice of the district in which such apprenticed labourer shall be resident.

Cap. V.

On the Duties to be performed by the Apprenticed Labourers, and the Penalties for their Non-performance.

1. As regards the apportionment of the 45 hours per week, during which prædial apprenticed labourers are required by law to work for their employers, it shall be lawful for the Governor, with the advice and consent of the Legislative Council, to make such regulations in respect thereof as may appear to them best adapted to promote the interests both of the apprenticed labourers and their employers, and to frame and publish rules and ordinances for that purpose, which shall be duly transmitted for His Majesty's approbation, and which, until disallowed or altered, shall remain in full force.

2. Subject to the provision lastly hereinbefore contained, and subject also to the deduction of the time hereinbefore directed to be allowed to prædial apprenticed labourers for the cultivation of their provision-grounds, every prædial apprenticed labourer shall be bound and obliged to work and labour for seven hours and a half in each and every day in the year (Sundays and holidays hitherto allowed by law to the labouring population excepted) in the service and for the benefit of his employer.

3. For every hour in which any labourer shall absent himself from his employer's service without reasonable cause he shall be compelled to serve two extra hours, and so in proportion for every portion of time greater or less than an hour, provided that such extra hours shall not exceed 15 in the whole in any one week.

4. Any apprenticed labourer absenting himself without reasonable cause for more than seven and a half hours in any one week shall be adjudged a deserter.

5. Any apprenticed labourer absenting himself without reasonable cause for two days during one week shall be adjudged a vagabond.

6. Any apprenticed labourer absenting himself without reasonable cause for more than six days in any one week shall be adjudged a runaway.

7. The reasonableness of the cause of absence shall in each case be decided by the special justice.

8. Apprenticed labourers adjudged deserters shall be confined to hard labour for any time not exceeding one week; those adjudged vagabonds, to hard labour for any time not exceeding two weeks, and to any number of stripes not exceeding 15; those adjudged runaways, to hard labour for any time not exceeding one month, and to any number of stripes not exceeding 30.

9. Any apprenticed labourer convicted of performing his work indolently, carelessly or negligently, shall for the first offence be adjudged to labour in his employer's service for any time not exceeding 15 hours in the whole (in any one week); or in case such labourer be a non-prædial labourer, to whipping not exceeding 15 stripes; for the second offence, if within two calendar months, to confinement with hard labour for any time not exceeding one week; for the third or any subsequent offence, if within two calendar months of the first offence, to confinement with hard labour for any time not exceeding one fortnight, with whipping not exceeding 20 stripes.

 10. Any

10. Any labourer who by the careless use of fire shall wilfully endanger the property of his employer or any other person, or who shall wantonly injure the property of his employer intrusted to his care, or who shall ill-use the cattle or other live stock of his employer, or who shall by wilful negligence expose his employer's property to any damage or injury, shall for such offence be adjudged, in the discretion of the justice, either to extra labour in his employer's service for any time not exceeding 15 hours in the whole in any one week, or to confinement to hard labour for any time not exceeding one month, or to any number of stripes not exceeding 30 lashes, or to any two of such punishments: provided that this enactment shall not exempt any such labourer from his or her liability to such actions or prosecutions as other persons of free condition may be subject and liable to in respect of any such acts by him or her done or omitted, although no such labourer shall be liable to be so sued or prosecuted both under this order and under such general law as aforesaid.

11. Any apprenticed labourer who shall contumaciously disobey the lawful commands of his employer shall be liable to any one or any two of the punishments last aforesaid.

12. Any three or more apprenticed labourers who shall agree together to make any resistance to the lawful commands of their employers shall be deemed guilty of an unlawful conspiracy, and shall be adjudged to confinement to hard labour for any period not exceeding six months, with whipping not exceeding 39 stripes.

13. Any three or more labourers who shall be engaged in a combined and open resistance to the lawful commands of their employer shall, on conviction, be adjudged to the punishments last aforesaid, or any one of them.

14. Any apprenticed labourer who shall be in a state of drunkenness, or who shall be found fighting, or who shall conduct himself in an insolent and insubordinate manner towards his employer, or any person in the immediate superintendence of his labour, shall for every such offence be liable, on conviction, to imprisonment with hard labour for any time not exceeding one week, or to whipping not exceeding 15 stripes.

15. Provided always, that no woman shall be subject to be punished by whipping for any offence by her committed, but that in all cases aforesaid in which that punishment is authorized, it shall be understood as applying to the case of males only, and that all the offences in respect of which such punishment may be inflicted on any such male offender, shall, when committed by females, be punished by confinement in the stocks. The stocks to be employed for that purpose shall all be according to one general model, to be sanctioned by the Governor, and no female shall for any offence by her committed be confined in the stocks after sunset or before sunrise, or for more than eight hours in the whole for any one day, or for more than two days consecutively, or for more than six days on the whole for any one offence.

16. All the offences aforesaid shall be inquired of by the magistrates having special commissions, and not by any other justice of the peace; but any such special magistrate may, if he shall see occasion, refer any such case for trial to the superior court of the colony.

Cap. VI.

On the Duties to be performed by the Employers towards their Apprenticed Labourers, and the Penalties for their Non-performance.

1. If the employer of any prædial apprenticed labourer shall, by force or fraud, protract the weekly services of such labourer beyond the period by law allowed for that purpose, he shall forfeit, for the benefit of such labourer, the sum of 1*s.* in respect of every hour which such service shall be protracted.

2. It shall be the duty of every such employer to intimate to the labourers in his employment the commencement and the close of the legal hours of labour, for which purpose a signal shall be given, in such manner as shall in reference to each plantation have been previously approved by the special justice of the district.

3. No apprenticed labourer shall be bound to undertake any task-work, except with his own free assent to the same, save as hereinafter is excepted.

4. Every contract between the employer and the prædial apprenticed labourer, for the performance of any specific work as a task, and in lieu of the prescribed daily labour, or for the performance of any labour in extra hours, shall by such employer be reduced into writing and entered in a book to be kept for that purpose on the plantation, which book it shall be the duty of the special justice to inspect, as often as he shall in manner aforesaid repair to the several plantations within his district.

5. No contract between the employer and the prædial apprenticed labourer for the performance of any such specific or task-work, or for the performance of any labour in extra hours, shall endure or continue in force, or be binding upon the parties entering into the same, or either of them, after the expiration of 14 days from the making thereof, unless the same shall have been made and entered into by such parties in the presence and with the approbation of such special justice of the peace, or unless, having been entered into in his absence, the same shall be confirmed and approved by him before the expiration of such 14 days; and every such approbation of any such contract shall by such special justice be attested under his hand in the book so to be kept as aforesaid.

6. It shall be the duty of the special justice before approving any such contract to ascertain that the terms thereof are distinctly understood by the apprenticed labourers entering into the same, and that such labourers have entered into such contract freely and voluntarily, and that the same is not unreasonable or unjust.

7. In

7. In every such contract for task-work, or for extra service extending beyond the period of one fortnight, the nature and amount of the extra labour to be performed, and the amount of the consideration to be given for the same, and the time and manner of paying such consideration, shall be distinctly expressed.

8. No contract for such extra service as aforesaid shall continue in force for more than one year from the day of the date thereof.

9. Upon proof being made, to the satisfaction of such special justice, of the non-payment of the consideration stipulated for in any such contract as aforesaid, whether for task-work or for extra services, it shall be competent to such justice, and he is hereby authorized to award execution against such employer for the amount of such consideration, and if the same shall not be paid within one week next after such award, to issue an attachment against the produce, utensils and other chattels upon such plantation, which execution and award shall be respectively in the forms annexed, marked (M.) and (N.)

10. Such execution and attachment as aforesaid shall be executed by the sergeant of the police of the district, who shall thereunder seize and sell so much of the produce, utensils and other chattels as may be found upon such plantation, as may be necessary for the payment of such debt, delivering over the surplus, if any, to such employer.

11. Any apprenticed labourer violating the terms of such contract as aforesaid for task-work or for extra services shall be liable to the same pains and penalties as are before provided in respect of the violation by any such labourer of the duties to be by him performed in the discharge of the services owing by him by law to such his employer, unless specific penalties are named in the contract.

12. Every married woman, notwithstanding her coverture, and every child of the age of 12 years and upwards, notwithstanding his infancy, shall be competent to enter into such contracts as aforesaid for task-work or for extra service.

13. If any employer of any apprenticed labourer, or any person who as manager or otherwise exercises the authority of the employer over any apprenticed labourer, shall whip, beat, imprison, confine in the stocks, or otherwise maltreat any such apprenticed labourer, or shall by way of punishment commit any assault upon his person, such employer or other person shall incur a penalty, to be imposed by such special justice as aforesaid, not exceeding 5*l.*, with imprisonment for any time not exceeding one month in default of the payment of such fine.

14. In any such case as last aforesaid it shall be competent to any such apprenticed labourer, instead of preferring his complaint to such special justice, to maintain any civil suit or action, as in the case of any other free person, for damages for such assault; and it shall also be competent to such special justice, if he shall see occasion, to abstain from imposing such penalty, and to commit the offender to take his trial for such offence before any court having jurisdiction in the premises. If any such employer or other person shall be convicted before any court of competent jurisdiction of any cruelty towards his apprenticed labourer, or if any such employer or other person shall be twice convicted of inflicting any corporal punishment, or of making any assault upon the person of any such labourer, then the labourer may be discharged from his apprenticeship by order of the court before which such conviction shall be had.

Cap. VII.

On Offences which may be committed by the Apprenticed Labourers against the State, and the Punishment of such Offences.

1. If any three or more apprenticed labourers shall unite together in any riot or tumultuous assemblage, any justice of the peace who shall be present at the same shall cause a flag or some other conspicuous signal to be exhibited as a warning to all persons there present to separate and disperse quietly.

2. All persons who at the expiration of 10 minutes from the exhibition of such flag or signal shall continue present at any such riotous assemblage, shall, on conviction, be liable to imprisonment with hard labour for any time not exceeding 12 months.

3. No prædial attached apprenticed labourer shall reside beyond the limits of the plantation on which he may be resident on the 1st of February next, unless either by the authority of his employer or with the consent in writing of the special justice of such district.

4. Every labourer found in any place more than five miles distant from his residence, except in his way to or from some place of public worship, and not having with him a written pass for that purpose from his employer, or from the special justice of the district, shall be liable to be apprehended and detained, and brought before a special justice; and unless such labourer shall make it appear to the satisfaction of such special justice that he or she when so found was employed upon his or her lawful occasions, such labourer shall on conviction be adjudged a vagabond and punished accordingly.

5. If it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of any special justice that any apprenticed labourers have without lawful authority established themselves in any part of the Colony as a distinct community, habitually abandoning and neglecting to perform the duties imposed upon them by law, such justice of the peace shall cause any such community to be dislodged, and, if necessary, shall also cause their habitations to be taken down and removed.

6. Any labourer convicted of having been a member of any such community shall be liable to imprisonment with hard labour for any term not exceeding six months, and if a male, to whipping by any number of stripes not exceeding 39.

7. If any labourer shall without lawful authority enter into possession of any land belonging to His Majesty or any other person, it shall be lawful for any special justice to dispossess such labourer from such land, and from any buildings thereon erected, and to cause the same, with all crops growing thereupon, to be delivered up to the owner of such land; or in case such owner shall not, within one month after such seizure, appear and prefer his claim to such land, then the special justice shall order the crops, cattle and other goods seized thereupon to be sold, and the proceeds of such sales to be paid over to the public treasurer of the Colony.

8. The summary process aforesaid shall not be taken in any case where any such apprenticed labourer may have been for two years in the undisturbed possession of any such land.

9. The special justice may further adjudge any apprenticed labourer unlawfully taking possession of such land to imprisonment with hard labour for any time not exceeding three months, if it should be made to appear to his satisfaction that such possession was taken fraudulently and with knowledge that the party had no lawful claim to such possession.

10. No apprenticed labourer shall quit the Colony except with a passport from the Governor, which passport shall not be granted except with the written consent of the employer.

11. Any labourer quitting or attempting to quit the Colony without such passport shall be liable to imprisonment with hard labour for any term not exceeding six months.

12. All persons whose ordinary occupation is on the sea or on any navigable stream, as fishermen or mariners, shall be registered as such at the office of the special justice of the district; and any apprenticed labourer engaging in such occupation without being first so registered shall be liable to imprisonment with hard labour for any time not exceeding three months.

13. All vessels and boats not registered under the Navigation Acts shall be registered at the office of the special justice of the district, with whom shall be entered the description of the vessel or boat, the name of the owner, and the place at which the same is usually moored.

14. No person shall keep a vessel or boat so registered except by a licence from the Governor.

15. All licensed owners of such boats or vessels shall be bound to moor them when not actually afloat at the place or places mentioned in such licence.

16. All unlicensed vessels and boats shall be liable to seizure and confiscation; and all other vessels and boats moored at any place not mentioned in the licence shall be liable to detention until the owner thereof shall have paid a fine of not less than 20*s.*, nor more than 5*l.*

17. All persons removing or assisting to remove any apprenticed labourer from the Colony in any boat or vessel, without a passport from the Governor, shall be liable to a penalty of 50*l.*, or to imprisonment for any time not exceeding one month.

Cap. VIII.

On the Dissolution of the Apprenticeship by Contract or Appraisement.

1. Subject to the regulations hereinafter made, any person being the employer of any apprenticed labourer in the said Island of Mauritius may by his or her last will, or by deed under his or her hand or seal, at his or her pleasure, discharge any such apprenticed labourer, so far as relates to the interest of every such testator or grantor; and every such discharge shall, as far as relates to the interest of the testator or grantor, as the case may be, but no further or otherwise, be valid and effectual in the law for the perpetual discharge of any such apprenticed labourer: provided nevertheless, that no person having a partial or temporary interest in any apprenticed labourer may to the extent of such interest effect his or her discharge gratuitously, unless all other persons having a partial, future or reversionary interest in such apprenticed labourer shall consent, or be parties to such discharge, or unless such partial, future or reversionary interests shall be purchased in the manner hereinafter provided.

2. And in order to prevent the fraudulent discharge of apprenticed labourers, incompetent from age or disease to earn their own living, it is further ordered, that in case any such deed of discharge shall be executed gratuitously and without any valuable consideration passing to the employer or other person effecting the same, the apprenticed labourer so to be discharged shall, previously to the actual execution of any such deed, appear before the special justice for the district in which the apprenticed labourer is resident; and if it shall appear to the said special justice that such apprenticed labourer is under the age of 14 years or above the age of 50 years, or is labouring under any habitual disease or infirmity of mind or body, the employer or person effecting such discharge shall, under his or her hand and seal, execute and deliver to the said special justice a bond to His Majesty in the penal sum of 50*l.*, with a condition thereunder written for the defeasance thereof if such apprenticed labourer shall be properly fed, clothed and maintained until the time when the term of apprenticeship would have expired if such discharge had not been made; and no such gratuitous discharge shall be valid and effectual in the law until such bond as aforesaid shall be duly executed.

3. Provided nevertheless, that no such bond as aforesaid shall be required in the case of any discharge by will; but if at the time of the death of the testator the apprenticed labourer so discharged shall be under the age of 14 years or above the age of 50 years, or labouring labouring under any such disease or infirmity as aforesaid, the estate of every such testator shall be liable to, and chargeable with, the maintenance of such apprenticed labourer, as fully as if the said testator had, in his or her lifetime, executed such bond as aforesaid.

4. And to prevent ignorant apprenticed labourers effecting the purchase of their discharge from persons unable to make any valid title to the same, it is further ordered and declared, that it is and shall be lawful for any person, being the employer of any apprenticed labourer in the said Colony, to contract with such apprenticed labourer, through the agency of any such special justice as aforesaid, acting for and on behalf of such apprenticed labourer, but not otherwise, for the discharge of the said apprenticed labourer, at a price to be agreed upon between the said employer and the said special justice respectively; and in case of any such contract, it shall be the duty of the said special justice, on behalf of the said apprenticed labourer, to satisfy himself that the person proposing to effect the said discharge has good right and title in the law, and is competent to effect the same; and it shall also be the duty of the said special justice, without fee or reward, to prepare, in every such case, the proper deed of discharge, which shall in all cases be executed in the presence of and attested by the said special justice, or some proper person to be especially appointed by him to be such witness thereto; and every such deed being so executed, shall by such special justice be enrolled in the Supreme Court of Civil Justice in and for the said Colony of Mauritius within one calendar month next after the date and execution thereof; and in case any such deed shall not be so enrolled by the said special justice within the said period of one calendar month, the said special justice shall incur and be liable to the payment of a fine of not less than 10*l.* nor more than 50*l.*

5. And to provide for the discharge of apprenticed labourers desiring to obtain the same by purchase, in cases where the employers of such apprenticed labourers may be unwilling or unable to contract for such discharge, it is hereby further ordered, that if the employer of any apprenticed labourer in the said Colony of Mauritius, or any person having any interest in any such apprenticed labourer, shall be unwilling to effect his or her discharge, or shall, by reason of any mortgage or settlement, or lease or charge upon, or interest in such apprenticed labourer being vested in any other person or persons, be unable to execute a valid and effectual discharge of such apprenticed labourer; or if the employer, or any other person having a charge upon or interest in any such apprenticed labourer shall be a minor, or a married woman, or idiot, or lunatic; or if the real employer of any such apprenticed labourer shall be absent from the said Colony, or shall not be known; or if any suit or action shall be depending in any court of justice in the said Colony, wherein the right to the service of such apprenticed labourer shall or may be in controversy; or if the employer of any such apprenticed labourer shall demand, as the price of his or her discharge, a greater sum of money than may appear to the said special justice to be the fair and just value thereof; then and in each and every of the cases aforesaid, the chief civil judge of the said Colony, on application to him for that purpose made by the said special justice, shall issue a summons under his hand and seal, requiring the employer of such apprenticed labourer to appear before him at some convenient time and place to be in such summons for that purpose appointed, and notice shall be published by the said special justice in the public gazette of the said Colony of the time and place appointed for the purpose aforesaid, and in such notice all persons having or claiming to have any title or interest to or in the services of the apprenticed labourer proposed to be discharged, either in their own right or as the agents, guardians, attornies, trustees or representatives of any other person, shall be required to attend and prefer such claims.

6. At the time appointed for such meeting as aforesaid, the chief civil judge of the said Colony, in the presence of the said special justice, and also in the presence of the employer of the apprenticed labourer proposed to be discharged, or upon proof being made to him upon oath of the due service and publication of such notice as aforesaid, then, if necessary, in the absence of such employer, shall proceed to hear in a summary way what may be alleged by the said special justice, and by the employer, or other persons claiming any interest in the services of the apprenticed labourer proposed to be discharged, and attending in pursuance of any such notice; and in case the said parties, or any of them, shall refuse to effect such discharge at a price approved by the said special justice, or in case it shall be made to appear to the said chief civil judge that a valid and effectual discharge of such apprenticed labourer cannot legally be effected by private contract, or that the employer of such apprenticed labourer, or any person having any charge upon or interest in the services of such apprenticed labourer, is a minor, or a married woman, or idiot or lunatic, or that the employer of such apprenticed labourer, or any person having any charge upon or interest in the services of such apprenticed labourer, is absent from the said Colony, or is unknown, or cannot be found, or that any action is depending in any court of justice in such Colony wherein the right to the services of such apprenticed labourer is in controversy, then and in every such case the said chief civil judge shall require the special justice and the employer of such apprenticed labourer, if attending in pursuance of such notice, each to nominate an appraiser of the value of his or her services for the remainder of such apprenticeship, and the said judge shall himself nominate an umpire between such appraisers; but if such employer, being duly summoned as aforesaid, shall fail to attend, or, attending, shall refuse or omit to nominate an appraiser, then the said judge shall not only nominate such umpire as aforesaid, but shall also nominate an appraiser on behalf of such employer.

7. The appraisers so to be nominated as aforesaid shall be duly sworn by and before the said chief civil judge, to make a fair and impartial appraisement of the value of the services of the apprenticed labourer so proposed to be discharged, and within seven days next after such such their appointment such appraisers shall make a joint valuation of the said services, and shall certify such their valuation to the said chief civil judge under their hands and seals; and in case such joint certificate shall not be so made and delivered to the said judge within the said term of seven days, then the said umpire, being duly sworn in manner aforesaid, shall within the next succeeding seven days certify his valuation to the said judge; and the valuation to be made in manner aforesaid, either by the said joint appraisers, or in their default by the said umpire, shall be binding and conclusive, and shall be entered and enrolled among the records of the Supreme Court of Civil Justice in and for the said Colony.

8. Provided nevertheless, that if it shall be made to appear to the said judge, within one calendar month next after such valuation shall have been made, that in the making thereof the said appraisers or umpire, or any of them, acted fraudulently or unjustly, or under the influence of any improper motive, or under any mistake as to the nature of their or his duty, or under any misapprehension of any material matter of fact, then, but not otherwise, it shall be lawful for the said judge to set aside the said valuation, and to declare the same to be void, and to direct another valuation to be made in manner aforesaid, for which purpose new appraisers and a new umpire shall, in manner aforesaid, be appointed and sworn, and shall proceed to make a second valuation, which being certified to the said judge in manner aforesaid, shall be to all intents and purposes binding and conclusive; provided that such second or any subsequent valuation may in like manner be set aside by any such judge on the grounds aforesaid, until a valuation is made not open to any such objection.

9. Provided also, that if the amount of any such valuation shall not be paid in manner hereinafter mentioned, within three calendar months next after the enrolment thereof, such enrolment shall be cancelled.

10. Upon or within three calendar months next after the enrolment in the Supreme Court of Justice of the said Colony of any such valuation as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for any special justice as aforesaid of such Colony, out of any monies to be supplied to him for that purpose by the apprenticed labourer proposed to be discharged, to pay to the treasurer of the said Colony the appraised value of the services of such apprenticed labourer, taking a receipt in writing from such treasurer for every such payment; and the chief civil judge of the said Colony shall, upon application to him for that purpose made by the said special justice, make an order for the enrolment in the said Supreme Court of Justice of such receipt; and the said chief judge shall by such order further proceed to declare and adjudge, that the apprenticed labourer, by and on behalf of whom such money hath been paid, is discharged; and such apprenticed labourer shall thereupon be and be deemed, taken and reputed to be discharged, to all intents and purposes, from such apprenticeship.

11. The money to arise from the discharge of any apprenticed labourer by virtue of the proceedings before mentioned shall remain in the hands of the public treasurer of the said Colony, and shall bear interest at and after the rate of 5 l. per cent. per annum; and His Majesty's revenue in the said Colony shall and is hereby declared to be pledged and responsible for the due payment of such principal money and interest, or shall, in the discretion of such treasurer, be invested in the purchase, in his name, of any public funds or securities of Great Britain and Ireland; and the chief civil judge of the said Colony shall, and he is hereby authorized, upon application to him for that purpose made, to direct that the money in the hands of the said treasurer, and the interest accruing on such money, or the public funds of Great Britain and Ireland so to be purchased as aforesaid, and the dividends payable thereupon, shall be the property of the person or persons who was or were entitled to the services of such discharged apprenticed labourers, and shall be subject and liable to all such and the same uses, trusts, limitations, conditions, mortgages, claims and demands, of what nature or kind soever, as such services were subject unto at such time of the discharge of such apprenticed labourer; and the said treasurer shall hold the said money, and the interest accruing thereupon, or the said public funds and dividends, subject to such order as such chief judge of the said Colony may, upon a summary application of any person interested therein, and upon notice to all other persons interested therein, or their agents, see fit to make; and such principal money and interest shall by such treasurer be paid and disposed of in pursuance of and in obedience to any such order.

12. It shall and may be lawful for the chief civil judge of the said Colony to make and prescribe, and from time to time to revoke and alter, as occasion may require, all such rules and orders as may be necessary for the regular and proper exercise of the jurisdiction hereby in him vested, and for regulating the proceedings of all persons who may be parties to or interested in any question so depending before him.

Cap. IX.

On the Removal of Prædial Apprenticed Labourers from one Plantation to another.

In every case in which, according to the provisions of the said Act of Parliament, the consent of the justice of the peace shall be necessary for the transfer of any apprenticed labourer from one plantation to another, every such transfer shall be given and attested in the Form annexed, marked with the letter (O.), and shall, within one month after the date thereof, be recorded in a book to be kept for that purpose by the special justice of the district to which such apprenticed labourer shall belong.

CAP. X.

On the Apprenticeship of Children.

Every indenture of apprenticeship to be made and entered into by any such special justice as aforesaid, in pursuance of the said Act of Parliament, on behalf of any children of any apprenticed labourers shall be in the form annexed, marked with the letter (P.), and shall be kept and recorded in the office of the special justice for the district to which such apprenticed child may belong.

CAP. XI.

On the Alienation by Sale, Inheritance or Will, of the Services of Apprenticed Labourers.

The right or interest of any employer or employers to and in the services of any such apprenticed labourers as aforesaid, shall, upon the death of any such employer, pass to and become vested in such and the same person or persons as, if the said Act had not been passed, would, by will or descent, as the case may be, have been entitled to such apprenticed labourer as his, her or their slave; and such right or interest shall pass and be transferable, inter vivos, in such manner and form, and under and by virtue of such deeds, instruments and conveyances, as slaves have hitherto been transferable and have passed in the said Colony.

Provided always, that no such apprenticed labourer shall be publicly or privately exhibited, or be liable or compelled to attend in person at the time or place of any sale or transfer of his or her services.

CAP. XII.

On the Relation in which the Apprenticed Labourers will stand towards the State.

No apprenticed labourer shall, during the continuance of his or her apprenticeship, be liable or competent to serve His Majesty in any civil office or in any military capacity within the said Colony, or to enjoy or exercise any political franchise therein.

Provided always, that nothing herein contained shall exempt any such apprenticed labourer from the obligation of rendering to His Majesty any service, civil or military, which, in case or in the prospect of any invasion, rebellion or any great public exigency, may by His Majesty, or by the Governor for the time being of the said Colony, or by any other lawful authority, be imposed upon him.

Provided also, that nothing herein contained extends or shall be construed to disqualify any such apprenticed labourer from undertaking and discharging any office or employment in the service of any corporate or ecclesiastical body, or of any person or persons, in cases where such employments or offices may not be connected with the discharge of any military or political duties.

No. 17.

ORDER in Council, 31 July 1835, declaring that adequate and satisfactory Provision hath been made in the Colonies of Antigua, Bermuda, Bahamas, St. Christopher's, Dominica, Grenada, St. Lucia, Trinidad, Mauritius and the Cape of Good Hope, for giving effect to an Act of Parliament, made in the 3d & 4th year of His present Majesty, for the Abolition of Slavery.

AT the Court at St. James's, the 31st of July 1835.

Present,

The King's Most Excellent Majesty.

Lord President.	Viscount Howick.
Lord Chamberlain.	Lord Auckland.
Earl of Albemarle.	Lord Glenelg.
Lord John Russell.	Sir John Hobhouse, Bart.
Viscount Palmerston.	The Chancellor of the Exchequer.
Viscount Melbourne.

Whereas by an Act of Parliament, made and passed in the 3d & 4th year of the reign of His present Majesty, intituled, "An Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies, for promoting the Industry of the Manumitted Slaves, and for compensating the Persons hitherto entitled to the Services of such Slaves," it is enacted, that from and after the

the 1st day of August 1834, all persons who, in conformity with the laws now in force in the said Colonies respectively, shall on or before the 1st day of August 1834 have been duly registered as slaves in any such Colony, and who on the said 1st day of August 1834 shall be actually within any such Colony, and who shall by such registries appear to be on the said 1st day of August 1834 of the full age of six years or upwards, shall by force and virtue of the said Act, and without the previous execution of any indenture of apprenticeship, or any other deed or instrument for that purpose, become and be apprenticed labourers: And whereas by the said Act it is further enacted, that subject to the obligations imposed by the said Act, or to be imposed as therein mentioned, upon such apprenticed labourers as aforesaid, all and every the persons who on the said 1st day of August 1834 shall be holden in slavery within any such British Colony as aforesaid, shall upon and from and after the said 1st day of August 1834 become and be, to all intents and purposes, freed and discharged of and from all manner of slavery, and shall be absolutely and for ever manumitted; and that the children thereafter to be born to any such persons, and the offspring of such children, shall in like manner be free from their birth; and that from and after the said 1st day of August 1834 slavery shall be and is thereby utterly and for ever abolished and declared unlawful throughout the British Colonies, plantations and possessions abroad: And whereas by the said Act it is provided that the Lords Commissioners of His Majesty's Treasury may raise the sum of 20,000,000*l.* sterling towards compensating the persons entitled to the services of the slaves to be manumitted and set free by virtue of the said Act, for the loss of such services.

And whereas in the said Act it is recited that various rules and regulations are or may be necessary for the purposes therein specified, and that such regulations could not without great inconvenience be made, except by the respective Governors, Councils and Assemblies, or other local Legislatures of the said respective Colonies, or by His Majesty with the advice of his Privy Council, in reference to those Colonies to which the legislative authority of His Majesty in Council extends; and it is therefore by the said Act enacted and declared that nothing in the said Act contained shall extend, or be construed to extend, to prevent the enactment, by the respective Governors, Councils and Assemblies, or by such other local Legislatures as aforesaid, or by His Majesty with the advice of His Privy Council, of any such Acts of General Assembly, or Ordinances or Orders in Council, as might be requisite for making and establishing such several rules and regulations as aforesaid, or any of them, or for carrying the same or any of them into full and complete effect.

And whereas it is by the said Act further enacted, that no part of the said sum of 20,000,000*l.* sterling shall be applied or shall be applicable to the purposes therein aforesaid, for the benefit of any person entitled to the services of any slave in any of the Colonies therein aforesaid, unless an Order shall have been first made by His Majesty, with the advice of His Privy Council, declaring that adequate and satisfactory provision hath been made by law in such Colony for giving effect to the said Act, by such further and supplementary enactments as therein mentioned; nor unless a copy of such Order in Council, duly certified by one of the Clerks in ordinary of His Majesty's Privy Council, shall by the Lord President of the Council have been transmitted to the Lords Commissioners of His Majesty's Treasury, or to the Lord High Treasurer for the time being, for their or his guidance or information; and every such Order shall be published three several times in the London Gazette, and shall be laid before both Houses of Parliament within six weeks next after the date thereof, if Parliament shall be then in session, and if not, within six weeks from the then next ensuing session of Parliament.

And whereas, in order to carry into effect the objects of the said recited Act, an Act hath been passed by the Governor, Council and Assembly of the Island of Antigua, intituled, "An Act for relieving the Slave Population from the obligations imposed upon them by the recent Act of the Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, intituled, 'An Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies, for promoting the Industry of the Manumitted Slaves, and for compensating the Persons hitherto entitled to the Services of such Slaves.'" And an Act hath also been passed by the Governor, Council and Assembly of the Island of Bermuda, intituled, "An Act for the Abolition of Slavery in these Islands, in consideration of Compensation." And an Act hath also been passed by the Lieutenant-governor, Council and Assembly of the Bahama Islands, intituled, "An Act auxiliary to an Act of the Imperial Parliament, intituled, 'An Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies, for promoting the Industry of the Manumitted Slaves, and for compensating the Persons hitherto entitled to the Services of such Slaves;'" and also an Act, intituled, "An Act to provide for the payment of Salaries to certain Special Magistrates therein designated, and to repeal certain clauses or sections of an Act of the General Assembly, made and passed in the fourth year of His Majesty's reign, intituled, 'An Act auxiliary to an Act of the Imperial Parliament, intituled, An Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies, for promoting the Industry of the Manumitted Slaves, and for compensating the Persons hitherto entitled to the Services of such Slaves;'" and also an Act, intituled, "An Act to amend an Act of the General Assembly of these Islands, intituled, 'An Act auxiliary to an Act of the Imperial Parliament, intituled, An Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies, for promoting the industry of the manumitted Slaves, and for compensating the persons hitherto entitled to the services of such Slaves.'" And certain Acts have also been passed by the Lieutenant-governor, Council and Assembly of the Island of St. Christopher, respectively intituled, "An Act for the Abolition of Slavery in this Island, and for the establishment of a system of Apprenticeship for a limited time, in lieu thereof;" "An Act for prescribing the Powers and Duties Duties of Special Magistrates;" "An Act to divide Apprenticed Labourers into several Classes;" "An Act to provide for Apprenticed Labourers during the Term of their Apprenticeship;" "An Act for prescribing the Duties and regulating the Conduct of Apprenticed Labourers within this Island;" "An Act for prescribing the Duties to be performed by Employers towards their Apprenticed Labourers, and to enforce the Performance of the same;" "An Act to regulate the removal of Prædial Apprenticed Labourers from one Plantation to another, to establish certain Rules to govern the Sale of the Services of all classes of Apprenticed Labourers, and the disposition thereof by Will, as well as to regulate the descent of the same in cases of Intestacy;" "An Act for dividing this Island into Districts, and for establishing a sufficient Police within the same;" "An Act to punish Apprenticed Labourers for Offences against the public welfare;" and "An Act to regulate the dissolution of Apprenticeship by the voluntary act of the Employer, and to compel such dissolution in cases where the Labourer is able and willing to purchase his or her discharge from Apprenticeship;" and also an Act intituled "An Act to extend to the Island of Anguilla the several Acts passed by the Island of St. Christopher pursuant to an Act of Parliament made in the 3d & 4th of William 4th, intituled 'An Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies, for promoting the industry of the Manumitted Slaves, and for compensating the Persons hitherto entitled to the Services of such Slaves,' except as hereinafter provided." And an Act hath also been passed by the Lieutenant-governor, Council and Assembly of the Island of Dominica, intituled "An Act for the Abolition of Slavery in this Island in consideration of Compensation, and for promoting the Industry of the Manumitted Slaves." And an Act hath also been passed by the Lieutenant-governor, Council and Assembly of the Island of Grenada, intituled "An Act for carrying into effect the provisions of an Act of the Imperial Parliament of Great Britain and Ireland, passed in the 3d & 4th years of the reign of His present Majesty King William the Fourth, for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies;" and also an Act intituled "An Act to amend an Act intituled 'An Act for carrying into effect the provisions of an Act of the Imperial Parliament of Great Britain and Ireland, passed in the 3d & 4th years of the reign of His present Majesty King William the Fourth, for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies, and to make further provision for the purposes in the said Act mentioned.'" And three several Orders have also been made by His Majesty in Council for carrying into effect, in the respective Colonies of St. Lucia, Trinidad and Mauritius, the provisions of the said recited Act of Parliament. And an Ordinance hath also been made and passed by the Governor and Legislative Council of the Cape of Good Hope, intituled "An Ordinance for giving due effect to the provisions of an Act of Parliament passed in the 3d & 4th year of the reign of His Majesty King William the Fourth, intituled 'An Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies, for promoting the Industry of the Manumitted Slaves, and for compensating the Persons hitherto entitled to the services of such Slaves.'"

And whereas it is considered by His Majesty in Council, that adequate and satisfactory provision hath been made by law, in the respective Islands and Colonies of Antigua, Bermuda, Bahamas, St. Christopher, Dominica, Grenada, St. Lucia, Trinidad, Mauritius and the Cape of Good Hope, for giving effect to the said recited Act of Parliament, by such further and supplementary enactments as therein mentioned, according to the true intent and meaning of the said Act.

His Majesty is therefore pleased, by and with the advice of His Privy Council, to declare, and it is hereby declared, that adequate and satisfactory provision hath been made by law in the several and respective Islands and Colonies of Antigua, Bermuda, Bahamas, St. Christopher, Dominica, Grenada, St. Lucia, Trinidad, Mauritius and the Cape of Good Hope, for giving effect to the said recited Act of Parliament, by such further and supplementary enactments as therein are mentioned. And the Right honourable the Marquis of Lansdowne, the President of His Majesty's Privy Council, and the Right honourable Lord Glenelg, one of His Majesty's principal Secretaries of State, are to give the necessary directions herein, as to them may respectively appertain.

COPY of a DESPATCH from Governor Sir Evan J. Murray M'Gregor, Bart. to Mr. Secretary Stanley.

Sir, Government House, Antigua, 2 July 1833.

IN consequence of your circular Despatch of the 20th of May last, relative to measures now under consideration of the Imperial Parliament for the extinction of Slavery, I convened His Majesty's Privy Council, of whose proceedings, under date the 1st instant, a copy is enclosed.

1 July 1833.

Soon after my arrival in Antigua, having issued a notice (Enclosure No. 2), I consider it inadvisable, for the present, to renew a similar appeal to the slave population, from a dread of weakening, by too frequent repetition, the effects of publications of that nature; but my constant and most vigilant attention will be directed towards the adoption of whatever precautions circumstances may demand, in case of the manifestation of excitement by any class of this community.

23 May 1833.

With respect, however, to the planters, although I have every reason to be satisfied with the reception they have afforded me, I beg permission to observe, that a governor's principal means of acquiring influence with those gentlemen formerly arose from that description of personal intercourse which, in regard to the Leeward Islands and Dominica, under the recent arrangements of His Majesty's Government, has necessarily ceased.

I am, &c.

His Excellency directs the Secretary to read a circular Despatch of the 20th May last, from the Right honourable E. G. Stanley, Secretary of State for the Colonies.

The opinion of the Board is requested as to the propriety of adopting precautionary measures for preserving order and subordination in the Colony in the anticipation of any excitement arising in consequence of these propositions. Several observations are made on this subject, the result of which appears to be as follows:

That the Board do not at present apprehend any immediate excitement to such an extent as to endanger the peace of the community. That with regard to the slaves, their present feeling appeared to be one of expectation of some plan being in progress for their freedom; of the nature of which plan they were at this moment wholly ignorant: that if they were made acquainted with the plan now in contemplation, their feeling would probably be changed to that of general disappointment.

 That

That it might be desirable to guard against the effects of such disappointment, by stationing a small detachment of regular troops in such a position as to afford a facility of moving them to any point where their presence might be deemed useful; and the Board suggest that Monks Hill would afford in itself the most convenient post for that purpose.

NOTICE.—BY HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR.

WHEREAS there is the strongest reason to believe that evil-minded persons have been actively spreading among the negroes malicious reports that certain benefits granted to them by The King are withheld by those under whose charge and protection they are placed; and that the Governor is empowered by His Majesty to grant emancipation to the slave population, which reports are calculated to unsettle their minds and be equally injurious to the slave and the owner—It is hereby declared, that such reports are false and utterly without foundation. And moreover that whatever advantages His Majesty may at any future period be pleased, through His paternal care, to grant to the slaves, it will be incumbent on the Governor to make known to them the nature and extent of such concessions, and to ensure their immediate enjoyment thereof.

If, in disregard of this solemn assurance, any sedition or insubordination shall be exhibited, his Excellency earnestly warns the negro population, that the most prompt and irresistible means will be used to quell the same, and to chastise, in the severest manner, the ring-leaders, whose disobedience can but tend to postpone indulgences which it might be the gracious wish of His Majesty the King eventually to bestow.

And whereas several appeals have been addressed to His Excellency by slaves to the great inconvenience of distant parties and witnesses—It is desired to be understood, and to be carefully explained to them, that the Governor will listen to no complaint, unless satisfied that the complainant has previously applied to the nearest Justice of the Peace. And those desirous of submitting appeals to the Governor are hereby further cautioned, that while the strictest justice will be done to any slave who may have been wronged or injured, the applicants will find an equal determination on his Excellency's part, to cause the infliction of such punishment as may be due to persons guilty of wilful misrepresentations whenever the charges thus preferred shall prove unfounded, frivolous or vexatious.

And it is hereby further directed, that whenever the slaves of any estate conceive they have just cause of complaint, they are on no account to presume to make the same in gangs or large bodies, but are to depute two, or at the utmost three of their number, who may proceed to lay the same before the magistrate or magistrates of the division in which they reside. And only in the event of a failure of redress in such quarter are they, in like manner, to represent their grievances to the Governor.

EXTRACT of a DESPATCH from Governor Sir Evan J. Murray M'Gregor, Bart. to Mr. Secretary Stanley, dated Government House, Antigua, 18 July 1833.

ON the 17th, for which day the Legislature had been summoned, I had the honour of receiving your circular Despatch of the 13th June, together with the Resolutions of The House of Commons therein referred to; and that communication seemed to me so important, and calculated to produce such conspicuously salutary effects, that I requested the gentlemen of the Council to meet in Privy Council, at Government-House that morning, before entering on the exercise of their legislative functions.

17 July 1833.

For what passed on that occasion, as well as subsequently, between the Council, Assembly and myself, I beg leave to refer to Enclosures Nos. 3, 5 and 6, wherein it will be found that these bodies have pledged themselves respectively to meet further communications on this subject "with respectful and dispassionate consideration," and to "approach the question with dispassionate seriousness."

It is truly satisfactory to me to add the assurance that, in this Island the influential colonists evince every disposition to propitiate the British Nation, under existing circumstances, in the most conciliatory spirit, while the labouring classes await the anticipated change in their condition without the slightest indication of impatience.

Read circular Despatch of the 13th June 1833, from the Right honourable Secretary of State for the Colonies, on the projected extinction of Slavery, with the Resolutions of The House of Commons thereon.

Printed in Parl. Papers, 16 April 1835, No. 177, page 5.

It is the unanimous opinion of the Board, that a communication so important and interesting as the one just read, should be imparted without loss of time to the local Legislature, which has been convened already for other purposes this day. It is accordingly ordered, that a copy thereof be forwarded forthwith to both Houses, with a message from his Excellency.

Sir, Government House, Antigua, 3 October 1833.

HAVING deemed it advisable to communicate the Bill for the Abolition of Slavery, as amended by The House of Lords, to His Majesty's Privy Council of Antigua; I have the honour of laying before you the proceedings of the Board thereon, as well as in regard to certain Resolutions, adopted at a recent public meeting in St. John's, and now under the consideration of the Legislative Council and Assembly.

1 October 1833.

Without expressing any "opinion on the tenor or conditions contained in the said Resolutions," the Board represent, "that the general feeling of the proprietors in this colony is, that they would decidedly prefer immediate emancipation to the system of apprenticeship."

These sentiments rest, as I am assured, on the confidence generally reposed in the superior intelligence and good disposition of the labouring population of this island, with whose education and religious instruction every pains appear to be taken by the regular clergy and missionaries, liberally countenanced by the gentlemen of the country.

ANTIGUA.—At a Meeting of the Members of the PRIVY COUNCIL, held by special Summons, at Government House, on Tuesday, the 1st October 1833.

Present,

His Excellency Sir Evan J. Murray M'Gregor.

The Honourable Samuel Warner.	The Honourable Francis F. Brown.
„ Meade H. Daniell.	„ George S. Martin.
„ Richard W. Nanton.

His Excellency the Governor lays before the Board the Slavery Abolition Bill, which he informs them had passed the Lords' House of Parliament, and which he had received by the last packet.

The Bill is read.

The Board is of opinion, that the Attorney-General for this Colony should be requested to prepare a form of public notice or proclamation to be issued by the Executive so soon as this Bill shall have been officially transmitted for the information of the local Legislature; that the object of such notice should be, to make the slave population fully acquainted with the new position in which they are about to be placed, and to that end, that it should contain in plain terms the heads of the Bill, as far as relates to their condition; that it should also inform them of the precise period when the Bill is to come into operation, and admonish them of the necessity for their own sakes of preserving in the meantime perfect order and submission.

It is also the opinion of the Board that the law officers of the Crown for this Colony be requested to engage immediately in the inquiry by what enactments the existing laws may be most conveniently adjusted to a state of society in which slavery will be unknown.

His Excellency calls the attention of the Board to certain Resolutions entered into at a public meeting in this Island on the 11th September, and which Resolutions he understands are now in the form of a memorial before the two Houses of Legislature. The Board hereupon deem it their duty to represent to his Excellency that the general feeling of the proprietors in this Colony is, that they would decidedly prefer immediate emancipation to the system of apprenticeship; the Board, however, expresses no opinion on the tenor or conditions contained in the said Resolutions. They are as follows:

ANTIGUA.—At a Meeting of the PROPRIETORS of ESTATES and others interested in Slave property, held this 11th day of September 1833, at the Court House in the Town of St. John, in this Island, to take into consideration the state of proceedings having for their object the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies,

The Honourable John Duncombe Taylor in the Chair,

It was resolved,

1st. That this Meeting is decidedly of opinion that a temporising system in this Colony would only prolong and increase present difficulties; that a period of apprenticeship, as proposed by Mr. Secretary Stanley in his Bill now before Parliament, would be one of most anxious irritation to all parties, tending to the moral degradation of the negro, and the grievous grievous oppression of the present slave owner, and that any proportion of compensation which might be allotted would be rendered abortive by the expensive and complicated machinery of Commissioners, &c. for its distribution.

2d. That if slavery be a crime, of which it is expedient that the British Nation should absolve itself, every principle of justice demands that the British Nation should provide full compensation, or the most ample indemnity, before it can interfere with the legally established system of its Colonists, or have any right to claim their assistance in carrying into effect any measure of experiment with property so repeatedly sanctioned by the Imperial Legislature; and that at whatever period the British Parliament may determine to proclaim freedom to the slaves in these Colonies, the relative obligations of the owner of these slaves will cease, and there can exist no constitutional power or authority to force upon the Colonists the necessity of employing labourers over whose conduct they would have no control.

3d. That this Meeting is fully impressed with the great and peculiar difficulties which consequently surround every attempt to abolish slavery in the British Colonies, and is equally sensible that the integrity of the Mother Country, the welfare of the slaves, and the safety of the Colonies, require that the destructive agitation of the question be quickly set at rest.

4th. That, urged by these important considerations, the members of this Meeting, submitting their objections, founded on long experience and local knowledge, to their earnest desire to repel the charge of upholding slavery in this Colony, and to afford British philanthropy a definite limit for its exercise, are willing, at the earliest possible period, to accede to the entire and unconditional emancipation of their slaves in this Island, and to use every influence in forwarding the passing of such Acts by the Colonial Legislature as may be requisite to provide for the consequent change of circumstances, upon there being absolutely vested in Government securities for their use the sum of thirty pounds sterling per negro, and upon an exemption to this Island from the payment of the 4 ½ per cent. Duties.

5th. That the Meeting comes to this conclusion without reference or meaning to imply the fitness of its application to the circumstances of any other Colony.

6th. That these Resolutions be inserted in a book (to be kept at the store of William Macfarlane, Esquire), and that all parties interested be invited to sanction them, and that a copy be presented to the Colonial Secretary by Anthony Brown, Esquire, the Island agent, for the consideration of His Majesty's Ministers.

7th. That Petitions, founded on and embodying these Resolutions, be presented to both Houses of Legislature, praying their concurrence and adoption of such measures to attain the object of this Meeting as may seem best calculated to preserve the interests of the slave owners, and secure the welfare of the slave.

8th. That the Honourable John Duncombe Taylor, the Honourable Samuel Otto Bayer, and Francis Shand, Esquire, be appointed a committee to frame such Petitions, and be authorized to sign and obtain the presentation of the same as the Petitions of this Meeting.

Sir, Government House, Antigua, 2 November 1833.

FROM the enclosed extract of this day's Minutes of His Majesty's Privy Council of Antigua, it will be observed, that the Attorney-General is requested to draw up a Bill, which the Board, in anticipation of the change in the condition of the labouring classes, to be effected on the 1st of August next, have agreed to introduce in their legislative capacity, for the purpose of modifying in this Island the present system of slave treatment.

2 November 1833.

ANTIGUA.

Under the impression of its not proving unacceptable to you, it is an object of my anxious solicitude that the right of inflicting corporal punishment upon the slave population should, by an Act of the Legislature, henceforward be transferred from their owners, the proprietors or managers of estates, &c. to the colonial magistracy.

The conciliatory disposition evinced by the Council, in favourably entertaining my suggestion, is highly satisfactory, and it will afford me sincere pleasure hereafter to be enabled to report, that the Assembly have assented to the proposed enactment.

ALTHOUGH the Governor will abstain from recommending a measure of this nature to the notice of the Legislative Council and Assembly, especially because its effects would prove infinitely more salutary if originating with and voluntarily emanating from those bodies, his Excellency deems it an act of duty to solicit the attention of His Majesty's Privy Council to the propriety and policy of endeavouring to anticipate the change in the position of the labouring classes of this community, destined to occur on the 1st of August next, by the adoption of such modifications in the present system of slave punishment and general treatment, as the experience of the honourable members may lead them to consider best adapted to local circumstances, during the intervening period of time.

The Board is decidedly of opinion that it would be wise to make such arrangements in the intermediate time between this and the 1st August, as would render the change in the condition of the slaves as little striking as possible; and thus lessen the excitement that may then naturally be expected to take place. An enactment to the effect proposed by the Governor is of course liable to opposition in the Assembly; but the Board embark readily in the proposition of his Excellency; and it is agreed that the Attorney-General (now a member of this Board) do draw up a Bill which shall fully accomplish this object.

Sir, Downing-street, 14 December 1833.

I HAVE had the honour to receive your Despatch of the 2d November last, enclosing an extract of the Minutes of His Majesty's Privy Council of Antigua, by which it appears that the Attorney-General is requested to draw up a Bill, which the Board, in anticipation of the change in the condition of the labouring classes, to be effected on the 1st August next, have agreed to introduce in their legislative capacity, for the purpose of modifying, in the island of Antigua, the present system of slave treatment.

With respect to the wish which you have expressed, that the right of inflicting corporal punishment upon the slave population should by an Act of the Legislature henceforward be transferred from their owners, the proprietors or managers of estates, &c. to the colonial magistracy, I have to observe, that if the Act to which you refer be intended to be in operation only till the 1st August, there can be no objections to it, but that, on the contrary, it appears a salutary and wise provision. It must, however, be borne in mind, that if it be intended under such an Act to continue, during a system of apprenticeship, the power of interference between master and apprentice to the colonial magistracy, it would be repugnant to the express enactment of the British statute, which vests that power exclusively in the special (though not only in the stipendiary), magistrates. If, on the other hand, on the 1st of August next unrestricted freedom be introduced, then this objection falls to the ground.

COPY of a DESPATCH from Governor Sir E. J. M'Gregor, Bart. to Mr. Secretary Stanley.

Sir, Government House, Antigua, 4 November 1833.

IT has been already represented by His Majesty's Privy Council, as stated in my letter of the 3d ultimo, "that the general feeling of the proprietors in this colony is, that they would decidedly prefer immediate emancipation to the system of apprenticeship."

Of that preference, having had under consideration, comformably with my Report of the 17th ultimo, the Act of the 28th of August last, together with your circular Despatch of the 5th of September, the Legislative Council and House of Assembly, through the medium of a joint letter to me, from their Honours the President and Speaker, herewith forwarded, unanimously concur in announcing their adoption.

2 November 1833.

1. 2. 3. 4.

The sentiments of the clergy, agreeably to the statement of the Reverend the Rector of Saint John's, as well as of the senior Wesleyan and Moravian missionaries, will be found likewise in accordance with those of the Privy Council and Legislature upon this interesting subject.

In the Address of the President and Speaker the utmost anxiety is evinced speedily to ascertain in how far the Mother Country may be inclined to countenance and promote their object of accomplishing at once, under the 23d clause of the Act of Abolition, the views of Parliament, by admitting the slave population, without the intervention of apprenticeship, to the enjoyment, on the 1st of August next, of unrestricted freedom.

Their honours have explained, so fully and with so much ability, the impression of the Local Legislature, that there are two points only on which, perhaps, observations of mine may not quite be misplaced.

The actual diminution of regular troops, to which they make allusion, does not exceed a deduction of 20 men from the ordinary number of the garrison, and arises solely from the readiness, with which his Excellency, Sir Lionel Smith, has been pleased to meet requests for strengthening detachments in St. Christophers, Montserrat, Nevis and the Virgin Islands.

Previously to the next 1st of August it may be advisable, in any case, to solicit a reinforcement for Antigua, not so much on account of the free inhabitants, whom the King's troops present and the militia are sufficient to protect, as for the sake of the newly liberated slaves themselves, in order to overawe them by a show of force, and thereby to guard against the consequences of excesses, in which they might otherwise be tempted to indulge, on the first introduction of a great change in the nature of their social condition. At the same time it may be further deserving of attention, whether such a reinforcement, which, should absolute freedom be conceded, would seem but temporarily requisite, during a short season of excitement, may not be rendered indispensable throughout the whole term of apprenticeship, if His Majesty's Government, on whose undeviating support the negroes have been accustomed implicitly to rely, shall come to be placed, in relation to them, in the totally opposite light of forcibly prolonging their restraint in that intermediate stage of servitude, contrary to the earnest intercession and recommendation of their masters.

The other topic that it may be right in me to notice, is a proposal for the relinquishment, by the Crown, of the 4½ per cent. Duty, producing in this Island, on an average for the last ten years, a revenue of about 12,000*l.* sterling annually.

If it shall be consistent with the policy of His Majesty's ministers to accede to this proposition, and thereby to accelerate the attainment of liberty by the Antigua negroes, on account of their alleged superior advancement in civilization and instruction, the expediency is submitted of imposing, as a condition, on the Council and Assembly, by whom this boon is asked on behalf of the labouring classes, the obligation of providing an adequate income, for a circuit judge or judges. This stipulation is suggested in reference to the desire already intimated by the King's Government for the formation in this Colony of a general Legislature for the Leeward Islands, the benefits of which, as well as of the removal of the diversity in their several constitutions, may prove more immediately conspicuous, observing that, instead of being, as now, confined in separate Colonies, the negro population, by virtue of the privilege of proceeding in search of employment from one Island to another, will, at no distant period, become, as it were, common to the whole.

ANTIGUA.

Having formerly borne testimony, as well to the orderly demeanor of the Antigua slaves, as to the liberality of their owners in regard to them, it is due from me to both anxiously to hope that it may be compatible with the arrangements of The King's Government so to receive the present application as at once to obviate any revulsion of feeling on the part of the labouring classes, and to encourage the respectful confidence that prompts the local Legislature for relief from difficulties, described as depressing the general interests of the Colony, earnestly to court the protecting influence of the ministers of the Crown.

I have, &c.

Enclosure in No. 151.

Enclosure in No. 151.

Sir, Antigua, November 2, 1833.

The Board of Council and House of Assembly of this Island embrace the earliest opportunity afforded them of acknowledging the communication of your Excellency of the 16th instant, accompanying the circular Despatch of His Majesty's Secretary of State for the Colonies of the 5th September last, together with printed copies of the all-important Act (3 & 4 Will. 4, ch. 73), which has recently passed the Imperial Parliament for the Abolition of Slavery, as well as a Proclamation issued by His Majesty in relation thereto.

The crisis at which we are thus arrived is so unexampled, so vitally important, and absorbs so exclusively the solicitor's attention of the Board of Council and House of Assembly, and at the same time involves to so fearful an extent the great interest confided to their vigilant charge, that they feel no apology can possibly be required of them for expressing to your Excellency the sentiments with which they are impressed in a manner the most frank and unreserved. They will waive, as totally irrelevant to the existing state of things, and as altogether unprofitable in their results, all discussions regarding Negro Slavery, or the expediency of its immediate extinction throughout the British Dominions: nor will they put forth against the strong arm of power any unavailing pretensions founded on an infringement of their chartered rights and legislative privileges. They are even willing to admit that a measure of such incalculable magnitude as the Abolition of Negro Slavery, upheld as it has been for ages by so many laws of the parent State, and interwoven as it is in the great commercial machinery of the Empire, could not properly or effectively have been brought about by any mere local colonial authority. The course of public events, and the heedless, but uncontrollable violence of public opinion in Great Britain had indeed gradually prepared our minds for this mighty change; but we must candidly say, that the interposition of a probationary stage, clogged with such exceedingly onerous terms and provisions as are limited and defined in the Act of Parliament, has not only surprised and grieved us, but fills our minds with no little consternation and dismay.

Without fatiguing your Excellency with an attempt to enumerate the various objections to the details of this Act, and which may in part be collected from other sources of public information, we deem it advisable merely to state our settled conviction, that the apprenticeship stage must disappoint the hopes and reasonable expectations of philanthropists, and can be productive only of a constant sense of humiliation and disquietude to all parties concerned; tending to substitute for the kindly feelings, mutual dependence, and the interchange of good offices, which, whatever may be alleged to the contrary, do now in a great majority of instances so happily prevail, a state of constant irritation, discontent and strife, leaving the negroes in all human probability in a condition more unfit for the enjoyment of a rational freedom, than at the commencement of it; subjecting, moreover, the master to the obligation of maintaining labourers, over whose conduct he can have no personal influence or control; superseding the usual motives which stimulate to industrious labour in the case of freemen, and yet doing away with that necessary sense of an instantly impending coercion in duties designed to be of an involuntary and compulsory nature.

Without entering more fully into the painful difficulties which beset the present enactments, we would not however omit to remark, that the diminished fertility of our soil in many districts, and the uncertainty of our climate every where, render our supplies of food for our labouring population at all times precarious, notwithstanding the most industrious cultivation. The provisions reaped, seldom supply more than half of our consumption, even under the present system of coercion; it is therefore evident that the restricted labour of 45 hours per week proposed under the scheme of apprenticeship would neither secure food, nor yield a sufficient return of produce to the proprietor to enable him to procure it, unless, indeed, his means should in some other way be simultaneously and permanently invigorated, so as to admit of his paying hire for the remaining 15 hours. Similar remarks might reasonably be pressed as to the obstruction created to the seasonably taking off the crops in a country where we necessarily depend on the uncertain and fitful operation of windmills. The distinction, moreover, regarding the time of servitude of the prædial and non-prædial classes, is, we think, unfortunate, and calculated to excite a jealousy, not unnatural on the part of those who constitute in truth the most useful and meritorious class, and to confirm those existing prejudices against mere rustic occupation, as being more degrading, which it is of such infinite importance to counteract.

But

ANTIGUA.

But as regards the Island of Antigua, we confess, Sir, we are strongly inclined to look at once to a better state of things. Actuated, as we trust we are, by feelings not less benevolent than those of our fellow subjects in Europe, and desirous to evince the most loyal concurrence in the ulterior objects of the Imperial Legislature, we are exceedingly solicitous at this early period, when only the short interval of nine months can elapse before the time assigned for the commenced operation of the Act before us, to ascertain, through the good offices of your Excellency, how far we might hope for the countenance and support of His Majesty's Government (profiting by the more enlarged interpretation of the twenty-third clause of the Act) in carrying into effect the specific objects of the statute as set forth in the title thereof, without the intervention of any term of apprenticeship, to the consequences of which we confess we do look with an anxiety much more intense. Thus might we hope to effect for the Island of Antigua at least, that consummation so devoutly to be prayed for, a complete and final settlement of this most harassing and embittering question; and that without the necessity of a measure entailing such great and enduring expense, and so unrecognized by the British Constitution as the appointment of stipendiary magistrates from Europe, unacquainted as they must be with the peculiar habits, customs and character of the people, and ignorant of the municipal institutions by which they have hitherto been governed; and also by only one stage of excitement, instead of the three most unnecessarily, as we think, assigned for us by the Act of Parliament. As this Act contemplates the successive advancement of different portions of the mass of slaves to an unqualified freedom in each Colony; so it is not very apparent why each Colony might not successively arrive at a general state of freedom according to the social improvement which each may appear to have attained. We do not, we confess, discover any sufficient reason referable to this Island, why an unrestricted emancipation should not answer as well in One thousand eight hundred and Thirty-four as in One thousand eight hundred and Thirty-eight or forty; and we are perfectly satisfied, that no possible future efforts during so short a term of years can bring the slaves of most of the other Colonies to the same state of religious and social improvement as that to which those of Antigua have already reached.

It cannot have escaped the observation of your Excellency, even during your short residence among us, that there are circumstances in the condition of this Colony which invite more to such a favourable change than perhaps in any other; among these may be suggested the all-important and paramount one of an utter dependence, from peculiarity of climate and the absence of unoccupied lands, except those of absolute sterility, of the labourer on the proprietor and capitalist for the means of procuring food; and that a large portion of the population, whether bond or free, could not hope for the means of subsistence except by some laborious occupation in one of those frequent periods of long drought especially to which we are almost annually subject.

Moreover it has been the policy of our Island, placing no impediment at any time in the way of the most perfect religious toleration and security, to civilize, instruct and improve the negro race; whatever may have been the case in this respect in any other of the West India Colonies, as pointedly adverted to in Mr. Secretary Stanley's Despatch, happily we, and our forefathers at least, to use the language of the great Apostle, have not closed the "door of utterance" to any who might seek to unfold the mystery of Christ. The number of teachers of religion, places of divine worship, and schools in operation, can scarcely, we apprehend, be surpassed in any rural district of like extent in The King's Dominions: to this gratifying state of things have also contributed perhaps the residence of a larger portion of proprietors than in some other Islands, and the facilities afforded by the face of the country, of simplifying the operations of agriculture by the plough and other machinery.

We do not presume to say that an immediate state of absolute freedom to every inhabitant of the Colony could be beneficially brought about by us without the co-operation and assistance of The King's Government; but with the humane and enlarged views by which they are doubtless impelled, there can be little reason to doubt their concurrence, particularly as the elements of the measure seem to us to be sufficiently simple, could we be brought to feel the perfect conviction, that the proposed amount of compensation would be actually available to our necessities, contemporaneously with the Act of Emancipation, or even fairly vested, so that the interest might accrue in aid of our establishments, and thereby enable us to put the new system advantageously in train. In the first place, it would be imperatively necessary that provision should be made for the care and maintenance of the aged, infirm, diseased, and otherwise helpless of those who are now in a condition of slavery, and who are or may hereafter become incapable of supporting themselves by labour or industrious pursuits, and which, viewing the cachectic constitution of the negro race, and how exceedingly subject they are over and above the ordinary catalogue of human infirmities to elephantiasis and leprosy in various forms, inveterate ulcers, ruptures, and so forth, it is feared must amount to a large part of the aggregate population. This important object we apprehend, on common principles of equity and christian benevolence, ought to be effected conjointly by the three great parties to the change in the social system by the free negroes themselves, whose kindred they are, by the British Nation and Government which seek and irresistibly propel the innovation, and by the proprietors of the soil, who are largely concerned in the future preservation of public tranquillity and reciprocal feelings of good-will among all classes of the community. The contribution of the able-bodied labourers might be procured by a voluntary appropriation of a small part of the weekly wages, that of the Government, by a relinquishment on the part of the Crown of the 4 ½ per cent. impost, and of the proprietors, by permitting the occupation of cottages and negro grounds, affording facilities for raising the usual live stock, and defraying the annual medical charges. To the rest, the other principal ingredient for rendering successful the proposed reformation, is, we conceive, a course of policy on the part of the parent State tending to foster the trade, and stimulate the agriculture of the Colony, so as to enable the planter, by a steady though moderate profit on capital and industry, to pay regularly and continuously the wages of free labour. In short, whether the period of an unrestricted freedom be immediate or more remote, it cannot, as we humbly conceive, be too deliberately and anxiously weighed by His Majesty's Government; whether to insure the successful solution of the great problem of tropical free labour, and which must be presumed to embrace alike the well-being of the labourer and his employer, and the permanent upholding of these Colonies as sources of revenue and national wealth; whether it is not in their power so to augment the remunerating value of the Colonial productions, by rigidly securing against the participation of all foreign slave-holding countries, the exclusive command of the home markets to the products of our future industry, by permitting some reasonable competition in the breweries and distilleries, and by every conceivable device which shall lessen the cost of production to the planter, who henceforward will give unexceptionable employment to the large class of persons whom it is the generous design of the nation to raise from slavery to a state of useful and productive freedom. As a measure auxiliary to such desirable results, our local experience prompts us to suggest the issue of a small coinage for colonial circulation, in order to supply the requisite means of paying the rustic labourers their wages every week; and which species of coinage we might hope to retain in circulation by fixing on it a denomination beyond its intrinsic value, and by some restrictive measure making it liable to seizure on exportation, under the authority of Parliament.

Common prudence at the same time would point out the establishment of an efficient police, and some addition to the military force in garrison, which so far from being hitherto augmented, we are inclined to believe is weaker than at any preceding period.

Such, sir, are the views and explanations the Board of Council and House of Assembly are desirous to bring under the immediate notice of His Majesty's Government, in order that we may have, if possible, timely rescue from the most obnoxious and repulsive system to be introduced by virtue of the Act of Parliament; a system, the difficulties of which, our experience teaches us no local enactments could possibly overcome.

Should we fail in procuring the coincidence of those holding the reins of government, we shall feel at least that we have performed a solemn duty towards all classes of His Majesty's subjects, bond or free, resident in or otherwise connected with this Island, who are entitled to look to us for a faithful and vigilant protection of their interests.

If for the sake of uniformity of system, the apprenticeship stage, whether to be mitigated or made more austere towards the master, by local laws, grounded on the projected Order in Council, should yet be pressed on this Colony, it will still remain for us to implore the attention of His Majesty's Ministers to one most essential feature of the case, and which seems hitherto in no degree to have been adverted to; which is, that if one-fourth of the labourer's time is to be withdrawn, all allowances of food, clothing, medical charges, and so forth remaining the same, and these to be looked into with the most scrupulous precision, there must be some countervailing increased remuneration on the productions of our industry, or removal of collateral burthens now pressing on it, whereby to enable proprietors to defray that increased cost, occasioned by a payment of wages for a part of the week; and this in proportion of course to the time so to be subtracted from the master and allotted to the servant. Though the sum of Twenty millions sterling to be dispensed by way of partial indemnity, may be supposed to afford to a certain extent the means of meeting such contingency, yet such fund to be awarded to a multitude of claimants, through intricate channels, by a tedious and dilatory process, and after indefinite curtailments and reductions, can in very few instances alleviate the urgency of the case; and the majority of individuals in possession, who will be looked up to for a successful administration of their properties, will remain unfurnished with resources for promoting the end proposed, of encouraging even partially free labour by the occasional payment of wages. So little satisfactory, so complex, and so far removed in their completion do the arrangements for payment appear to us, indeed, that we are almost tempted to say with the Roman orator, "Non tam justitia quam litigandi tradunt vias." Under any circumstances the modicum of compensation, whatever it may ultimately prove to be, cannot of course bear a comparison, as matter of importance in our eyes, with those measures which are essential for giving fortunate results hereafter to this momentous experiment. Thus the expediency of an abandonment of the 4 ½ per cent. Duties is still most forcibly presented to our view to facilitate the general good, as well of the servile class whose industrious habits it is laudably intended to encourage, as of the employers who are now but too sadly depressed by overwhelming difficulties of all kinds. If any West India Colony struggling through the general adversity, has yet not been unmindful of its obligations to improve the moral worth of the lower classes by liberal views and by some sacrifices of time and expenditure, it surely cannot be the desire of the Crown or the people of England to place the agricultural resources of such Colony on a worse footing than that of others, which may have been more regardless of such observances. There does not seem to remain a single plausible motive why the loyal and more ancient dominions of His Majesty, labouring under greater physical difficulties, should not enjoy at least the same fiscal advantages as those possessed of more natural capabilities, but more recently brought under subjection to the British Crown. At a moment when the extirpation of the deep-rooted and inveterate errors and evils of the political frame is resolutely determined on, what reason, we would ask, can there be for retaining this vicious and consuming excrescence? If it be desirable to conciliate every where the colonists, why not at so critical and agitating a conjuncture yield this small boon? It cannot be imagined that an opulent power which magnanimously resolves on raising twenty millions of money for kindred objects, cannot otherwise provide for the charges settled on this insignificant branch of revenue; if that be the case, better as we apprehend to take a portion of the intended Compensation Fund, than continue this, or any other unnecessary restraint on the expansion of the industrious pursuits of the present and future generations.

We are indeed, sir, unhesitatingly led to make this claim on the justice of His Majesty's Government; for the reciprocal covenants under which this most irksome impost alleged to have been made, do seem to us to be virtually abrogated by the recent Act of the National Councils. The recollection that it was originally wrung under false and unjust pretences from a feeble and unprotected people under a profligate reign, cannot but add, we trust, to this our most earnest appeal to the wisdom and beneficence of our gracious Sovereign. We do therefore, sir, humbly submit, that in any local Act which we may be called upon to pass to carry into execution the designs of Government, we may have His Majesty's sanction for repealing the Act of our island of the 20 Charles II. anno dom. 1668, intituled, An Act for the Settlement of the Custom or Duty of 4½ per cent.

Praying that your Excellency will lose no time in submitting these grave matters on the part of the Board of Council and House of Assembly, to the consideration of His Majesty's Ministers, we remain, with the tender of our highest and most dutiful regard,

Sir,

I HAVE had the honour of receiving your Excellency's communication, and in compliance with the request therein contained, I beg leave to offer the following as my opinion on the question proposed:

That the slaves of this island have attained to that degree of religious and civil improvement as to be qualified for receiving unrestricted emancipation on the 1st of August next, without previously passing through an intermediate state of apprenticeship. If the masters have means at their command for regularly paying the people their wages, I fully expect that the people will not decline working the land; and from the quietness and good order which they have in general maintained, and the regard they have hitherto shown to the instructions and admonitions of the ministers of the Gospel, I have good hope that they will not prove less orderly nor less influenced by religion when they shall have been advanced into a state of unqualified freedom.

I HAVE the honour to receive a communication from your Excellency, requesting any opinion, "as to the fitness of the slave population of this island to receive unqualified freedom after the 1st of August next, instead of being subjected, before final emancipation, to an intermediate system of apprenticeship."

I beg most respectfully to assure your Excellency, that it has long been, and still is, my decided opinion, that the slaves on this island are in a state of entire fitness to receive the proposed boon. bold to aver to your Excellency that I can scarcely conceive of any possibility of danger to any class of His Majesty's subjects, which could arise from immediate and entire negro emancipation in this Colony; provided that such an enactment should meet the approbation of the Colonial Legislature and the generality of the slave proprietors; and provided also that a vigorous police be established for the first few weeks, and that legal provision be made for the support of the aged and infirm.

I would further most humbly submit to your Excellency, that it has been and is my invariable opinion, that the entire annihilation of slavery in the manner above specified would tend greatly to the advantage of all classes of this community.

COPY of a DESPATCH from Mr. Secretary Stanley to Governor Sir Evan J. Murray M'Gregor, Bart.

Sir, Downing-street, 13 December 1833.

I HAVE received your Despatch of the 4th November last, inclosing a communication which you have received from the Legislative Council and Assembly of Antigua, in the form of a joint letter from the President and Speaker of those bodies; and I feel it my duty, in the first place, to express my satisfaction that this communication, involving subjects of the highest importance to the colony, and made at a period of peculiar interest and anxiety, is characterized by a spirit of moderation, and that the objections which it brings forward to the plan of emancipation, which has been formed by the Imperial Parliament, are temperately, although earnestly supported.

It affords me no small gratification that I am enabled, to some extent at least, to meet these objections, so far as relates to the colony of Antigua.

The first and principal question to which the Legislature of Antigua has thus directed my attention is, whether they may provide for the complete emancipation of the slaves in that colony, on the 1st of August next, without the intervention of any apprenticeship. Upon this most important topic I have in fact already expressed my opinion. In my circular despatch of the 19th October last, I have signified to you that you are not to consider yourself bound to refuse your assent to any Bill which may be passed in any of the colonies over which you preside, in furtherance of the Act for the Abolition of Slavery, merely because such Bill should dispense with the intermediate state of apprenticeship. I have, therefore, merely to confirm that instruction. The plan of emancipation which the Imperial Legislature has sanctioned, was framed so as to afford to all the colonies the option of a gradual and safe transition from slavery to freedom; but it was intentionally left open to each colony to make such modifications in that plan as might best suit its own peculiar circumstances; and it was anticipated that in those colonies in which the state of the negro population might be such as to render it feasible to shorten or relax the proposed state of transition, the Colonial Legislatures would not be reluctant to adopt such a course. It is with no small satisfaction, therefore, that I learn that the negro population in Antigua is, according to the opinion of those who are the most competent to judge, in a state of civilization and instruction sufficiently advanced to qualify them for immediate and unrestricted emancipation, and this satisfaction is enhanced by my perceiving that the Legislature of Antigua and the resident resident proprietors are willing to evince their concurrence in the views and wishes of the Mother Country, by conferring the boon of freedom without delay and without qualification.

It will be a gratifying reflection to these proprietors, and cannot fail of adding to the satisfactory working of the new system, that for so material an improvement in their conditions, the negroes will be indebted to their own good and orderly conduct.

As affording important facilities for the development of the new system about to be introduced, the Legislature of Antigua express considerable anxiety for the speedy distribution of the compensation fund. The mode of effecting that distribution was devised for the express purpose of obviating the delays, the complexities and the expense of that litigation, which the Legislature of Antigua so earnestly deprecate; and I confidently hope that the diligent exertions of the Commissioners who have been selected for this purpose will quietly dispel all apprehension upon the subject.

With regard to the suggestion thrown out by the Legislature of Antigua, that the amount of compensation should be vested contemporaneously with the Act of emancipation, I am happy to be able to say, that arrangements will be so made that the sum which may be determined as the proper share for the colony of Antigua will bear interest, for the benefit of the parties entitled, not indeed from the actual passing of the Colonial Act of emancipation, but from such period as they may fix upon for the commencement of its practical operation.

It affords me satisfaction to perceive that the Legislature of Antigua, in contemplating the subject of emancipation, has not lost sight of a very important difficulty attending its immediate adoption. I allude to the necessity of providing for the support of those negroes who, by disease and bodily infirmity, may be rendered incapable of their own maintenance. I have no doubt they will so frame their enactments upon this head as not only to accomplish the objects intended, but at the same time to hold out the greatest possible inducements to habits of prudence and forethought on the part of the labouring population, who have hitherto had but little opportunity or motive for the exercise of these qualities.

As tending to create and foster such habits, and also as affording an adequate circulating medium, adapted to the new circumstances in which the colony will be placed, the establishment of banks and the issue of a local coinage of small denomination for colonial circulation, is under the anxious consideration of His Majesty's Government. With regard to the specific measures of relief and protection which are especially pointed out by the Legislature of Antigua, (namely) the abolition of the 4½ per cent. Duties, the monopoly of the home market, as against foreign slave-holding states, and the encouragement of the cultivation of sugar, by giving facilities for its use in breweries and distilleries, I regret that I must confine myself to the general intimation of my intention to give to these subjects the most impartial and careful attention. At the same time, however, I may venture to assure you, that the line of conduct which the colony of Antigua is disposed to pursue upon this momentous occasion, secure to it a strong claim upon the Imperial Parliament for such relief and assistance as can be afforded without adding to the fiscal burthens, or injuring the general interests of the Mother Country.

I HAVE received your Despatch of the 27th of November last, in which you inform me that the Bill for transferring the power of corporally punishing slaves from owners, magistrates, &c. to the colonial magistrates, which had passed the Council, was thrown out by the Assembly.

I cannot but feel considerable regret, that a measure should have been rejected which seemed to be so entirely in accordance with the humane sentiments displayed in the letter from the President of the Council and the Speaker of the Assembly to yourself of the 2d November last, and to be consistent with that advanced moral condition of the Negro population in Antigua, which has induced the Legislature of that colony to desire that the intermediate state of apprenticeship sanctioned by the British Parliament should be dispensed with.

Sir, Antigua, 16 February 1834.

THE two Houses of Legislature, in submitting to your Excellency the Act just passed for the final Abolition of Slavery throughout the Island of Antigua, have thought it might not be altogether inexpedient on so serious an emergency, that its transmission to England should be accompanied by such few brief explanations as the instant departure of the mail may permit, in order that if possible it may secure a more favourable reception by His Majesty's Government.

In the first place, it seems necessary to state, that it is intended this preliminary Act should be followed by one for establishing an efficient police throughout the island, and another for encouraging encouraging the voluntary binding of children as agricultural apprentices till twenty-one years of age, under proper conditions, and of course in perfect consistency in all respects with the provisions of the late Act of Parliament; this will be with the view not only of relieving the parents to a large extent from the burthen of maintaining their children, but of bringing up the rising generation to habits of industry, and of training them betimes to rural labour.

As subsidiary to these more important laws, it will probably be found requisite to pass enactments to repress vagrancy, and to define more clearly and extend the law of trespass, as well as to modify our existing law (No. 70) for the summary recovery of wages and other small debts.

One of the most formidable obstacles to an emancipation of the slaves in our Island has always appeared to be, the difficulty of providing for the large proportion of infirm and diseased persons among them, who must be incapable of earning their subsistence; and the extent of this difficulty can scarcely be appreciated by those who have had no opportunity of visiting this part of the world, or of mingling in the details of its rural economy. It will be seen in the Act now submitted, that as regards such portion of the negroes who may be in that afflicted, helpless and destitute condition at the moment of emancipation, their maintenance is fixed as a permanent burthen or annuity-charge, as it were, on the respective plantations to which they were severally attached during the period of slavery; as it is conceived that the proprietors will be able to do this on easier terms to themselves, and with less general inconvenience than could be effected by any other means; but should it hereafter prove otherwise, a parochial relief, or some other benevolent course, partaking of the nature of friendly societies, if found more convenient and equally effectual, is kept in view. His Majesty's Secretary of State, in his considerate despatch of the 13th December last, very judiciously expresses a hope that our legal provisions may be such as to hold out the greatest possible inducements to habits of prudence and forethought on the part of the labouring population. Such, certainly, is our most anxious desire; and we purpose by no means to deviate from the well-regulated system of administering to the relief of the destitute, which has long obtained in this island. The parish vestries being merely empowered to grant relief by rates on the close investigation of each individual case, but not authorized to give aid to any one as a legal due: in this way the idle, improvident and able-bodied receive no assistance, but are very properly cast on the exertion of their own natural energies for a livelihood. With us, therefore, the relief afforded is entirely of a benevolent and compassionate character, as circumstances arise; and on this footing it is of course intended that all those of the entire mass of population, whether white, coloured or black, who, subsequently to the era of emancipation, may be able to exhibit urgent claims of distress on the several parishes, shall receive assistance.

The third clause of our Act has been introduced with the view of rendering as little abrupt as possible the transition from slavery to unrestricted freedom; to keep things, as far as may be, in statû; to prevent any very sudden dislocation and confusion; to allow the newly-manumitted to elect their future places of residence and service, and gradually to settle down and cement the subsequent relations of master and servant.

It is manifest, sir, from this very cursory exposition, that His Majesty's ancient and loyal colony of Antigua will be immediately called upon, for measures of vital security and importance, to incur a large expenditure, for which a long course of adverse circumstances has left it almost entirely unprepared. Not only will the provision for the destitute, as we have described it, lead to considerable expense and consequent charges on the proprietors of the soil (on the precise amount of which it is impossible at present to form any conjecture); but the contemplated police establishment will, in all probability, require an annual outlay of several thousand pounds currency, with the additional cost for providing stations and erecting houses of correction. To no source does it occur to us to look for adequate means in these particulars, and to enable us to meet all other stern exigencies of the approaching crisis, except to a remission of the 4½ per cent. Duties. We humbly trust, therefore, our motives for blending this subject in the present enactment will not be misconstrued, especially after the explicit notice and avowal of our design in the joint Report of the 31st October last, and the hopes which His Majesty's Secretary of State encourages us to entertain of the strong claim which this Colony will have on the Mother Country, in consequence of the advanced position which it has not hesitated to take on so unexampled an occasion. If our present conduct is indeed deserving of public commendation, and has contributed aught to strengthen the hands of the King's Government amid the distracting discussions connected with this momentous question, this is certainly the specific requital which we most sedulously and importunately seek, and which will do most to insure general confidence and good-will, and to cheer us on amidst the numberless difficulties which we cannot disguise to ourselves we shall, under any circumstances, have to encounter. No other boon or bounty, however gracious and munificent, can to our feelings come in competition with this, proving, as the impost does, a dead weight on our agricultural industry, which excites a constant invidious comparison with the other more favoured West India Colonies of His Majesty, and which, at various periods of our history, has created the most painful social bickerings and heart-burnings. We almost despair of adding to the force and earnestness of our late joint Report; but nevertheless we would still remind His Majesty's Government that we are no longer, in this particular, pleading the cause of a few slave-holding proprietors, but that of all classes of His Majesty's free subjects in the Island; and there will be none other. Whatever will relieve the burthens on the agriculture of the Colony, will benefit not only the landholder, but the labourer, whose welfare and continuous employment will depend on the remunerating returns which such agriculture may afford. The emancipated negro himself, who by his savings and industrious course of life may acquire a plot of ground, and cultivate it in any of the minor exportable productions of the climate; as, for instance, ginger, arrow-root, aloes, and so forth, will otherwise receive in this way a check to his laudable exertions, as well as the most considerable cultivator. This impost, therefore, preys on the very vitals; and its retention, at a period of so great a political reformation, would, we confess, appear to us to be not only injurious, but somewhat inconsistent. It is worthy of deliberation if the measures which we thus hold to be essential to ultimate success be thwarted by the continuance of this or any other unnecessary restraint on the productive efforts of the Colony, whether the same 4½ per cent. fund itself may not come speedily to be placed in jeopardy, as well indeed as the whole amount of revenue which the Colony, by its various productions, has paid annually into the King's Exchequer; to say nothing of the collateral stimulus afforded to the shipping interest, and the commercial, manufacturing and agricultural energies of the Nation.

To us, sir, it seems merely a question of the undoubted prerogative of His Majesty, as regards his assent to an Act of the Legislature of Antigua. If the Crown has really divested itself of a portion of the prerogative, and has immediately given up the control of the subject of the 4½ per cent. Duties to Parliament, then we fervently hope the Minister, with his customary talent, candour and sincerity, will propound the measure to Parliament, and we have no misgivings as to its voice and sympathy being decidedly in our favour.

We will only add, that our grateful acknowledgments are due to His Majesty's Secretary of State for his candid reception of our late communication, and for his prompt and liberal acquiescence in some of its suggestions. As regards the payment of interest on our proportionate share of the Compensation Fund, our meaning was, that the parties in possession of plantations should be enabled, from the period of the commenced operation of our local Act, to avail themselves of such interest money, say quarterly or otherwise, to aid in the payment of labourers' wages pending the final distribution by the Commissioners to themselves and all other claimants concerned.

Finally, we submit, sir, that as Antigua seems on the eve of making a more marked and sudden transition in its social state than the neighbouring Colonies, the precaution of a timely augmentation of its garrison may not be unadvisable.

We beg to remain, Sir, your Excellency's most faithful and obedient servants,

No. 3.

ANTIGUA.—A Bill for relieving the Slave Population from the obligations imposed upon them by the recent Act of the Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, intituled, "An Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies, for promoting the Industry of the manumitted Slaves, and for compensating the Persons hitherto entitled to the Services of such Slaves;" and for repealing an Act, intituled, "An Act for the Settlement of the Custom or Duty of Four-and-a-Half per Cent." in order to enable the Colony to sustain the pressure of the heavy additional Burthens which are about to be entailed upon it.

WHEREAS by the twenty-third section of an Act of the Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, passed in the third and fourth years of the reign of His Majesty King William the Fourth, intituled, "An Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies, for promoting the Industry of the manumitted Slaves, and for compensating the Persons hitherto entitled to the Services of such Slaves," it is enacted, "that in case the Governor, Council and Assembly of any one or more of His Majesty's Colonies aforesaid shall by any Act or Acts of General Assembly for that purpose made, substitute for the several enactments therein before contained, or any of them, any enactments accomplishing the several objects in such thereinbefore contained enactments respectively contemplated as fully and to the like effect, but in a manner and form better adapted to the local circumstances of any such Colonies or Colony, and in case His Majesty shall, by any Order or Orders to be by him made, by the advice of his Privy Council, confirm and allow any such Act or Acts of Assembly, and shall in and by any such Order or Orders in Council recite and set forth at length the several provisions and enactments of that Act for which such other enactments as aforesaid shall have been substituted by any such Act or Acts of General Assembly, then and in such case so much and such parts of that Act as shall be so recited and set forth at length in any such Order or Orders of His Majesty in Council shall be suspended and cease to be of any force or effect in any such Colony from and after the arrival and Proclamation therein of any such Order or Orders of His Majesty in Council, and shall continue to be so suspended so long as any such substituted enactments shall continue in force and unrepealed, and no longer:"

And whereas the Governor, and Council and Assembly of this Colony, having maturely considered the system of Apprenticeship prescribed by the said Act of Parliament in all its bearings, have arrived at a conviction of the expediency of dispensing with the same, and allowing the Slave Population to pass to a state of absolute and entire freedom on the first day of August One thousand eight hundred and thirty-four:

And

And whereas the ordinary local resources cannot be justly expected to be equal to bearing the increased expenditure which must obviously be required for accomplishing the several objects contemplated in this Act, and the Legislature is therefore imperatively called upon to appeal to the generous and benevolent feeling and consideration of The King's most Excellent Majesty, and implore his gracious assistance in relieving this ancient Colony from 'the Four and a half per cent. impost,' a burthen which has long and severely pressed upon its interests, under which colonies not more conspicuous for their loyalty and attachment to His Majesty's person and government, though possessing infinitely greater wealth and local advantages, have never laboured, and from which its present impoverished condition and dejecting prospects now urge it, with all due and profound reverence for His Majesty, and an implicit reliance upon his royal and paternal care, and the solicitude he has invariably manifested for the welfare of all classes of his faithful subjects, to prefer its strong equitable claim to be in future equally free:

I. May it therefore please Your most Excellent Majesty, That it may be enacted, and be it enacted by the Governor and Commander-in-Chief of Your Majesty's Islands of Antigua, Montserrat, Barbuda, Saint Christopher, Nevis, Anguilla, the Virgin Islands and Dominica, and the Council and Assembly of this Your Majesty's Island of Antigua, and it is hereby enacted and ordained, by the authority of the same, That all and every the persons, who on the first day of August one thousand eight hundred and thirty-four, shall be holden in slavery within this Colony or its dependencies, shall upon and from and after the said first day of August one thousand eight hundred and thirty-four, become and be to all intents and purposes free, and discharged of and from all manner of slavery, and of and from the obligations imposed by the said hereinbefore in part recited Act of the Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, intituled, "An Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies, for promoting the Industry of the manumitted Slaves, and for compensating the persons hitherto entitled to the services of such Slaves;" and shall be absolutely and for ever manumitted; and that the children thereafter to be born to any such persons, and the offspring of such children shall in like manner be free from their birth; and that from and after the said first day of August one thousand eight hundred and thirty-four, Slavery shall be and is hereby utterly and for ever abolished and declared unlawful within this Colony and its dependencies.

II. And be it further enacted, That the said persons so manumitted shall on the said first day of August one thousand eight hundred and thirty-four, be considered eligible in the several parishes in which they were last holden in slavery, to receive parochial relief on the same footing as all His Majesty's other subjects in this Colony.

III. And be it further enacted, That until the first day of August one thousand eight hundred and thirty-five, it shall not be lawful for the owners or directors of plantations to evict or expel any labourer or labourers, person or persons, who shall be willing to continue to perform such work as shall be assigned to him, her or them, and shall truly and faithfully perform the same for stipulated wages, or who shall be then labouring under any such disease or mental or bodily infirmity as may render him, her or them incapable of earning his, her or their subsistence, from the habitations or tenements which he, she or they respectively personally occupied in their state of slavery, except in case of insubordinate, quarrelsome, disorderly or riotous behaviour, or in case of drunkenness, theft, trespass or other gross delinquency on their part; when it shall be competent to any two or more justices of the peace, upon due and impartial inquiry made into the merits of the complaint, by an authority under their hands and seals to sanction the expulsion of any such delinquent; but the said owners or directors of plantations shall be and are hereby required to permit and suffer the said labourers and persons to have and enjoy respectively the personal occupation of the said habitations or tenements, by way of a temporary and gratuitous accommodation for the year ending on the said first day of August one thousand eight hundred and thirty-five, and no longer, without any molestation or interruption of or by the said owners or directors of plantations, under a penalty of five pounds for every offence, to be recovered and applied in the manner hereinafter mentioned.

IV. And be it further enacted, That from and after the said first day of August one thousand eight hundred and thirty-four, all owners or directors of plantations in this Colony shall be and are hereby required to supply those persons who in their state of slavery were attached to such plantations respectively, and shall at the time of emancipation be afflicted with any such disease or mental or bodily infirmity as may render them incapable of earning their subsistence, with such food, clothing, lodging, medicine, medical attendance, and such other maintenance and allowances, as by the laws now in force in this Colony an owner is required to supply to and for any slaves being of the same age and sex, and under the same circumstances as such persons shall respectively be, until proper arrangements and due and adequate provision shall be made for their maintenance and relief by the respective parishes, or by some other benevolent and effectual plan, in their favour, and no longer, under a penalty of five pounds for every offence, to be recovered and applied in the manner hereinafter mentioned.

V. Provided always, and be it enacted, That in the event of any dispute or difficulty in ascertaining whether any particular individual shall be included in such number of persons, it shall and may be lawful for the parties interested to make their appeal to two or more of the nearest of His Majesty's justices of the peace, who taking to their counsel some experienced medical practitioner, shall under their hands and seals peremptorily and conclusively decide in this behalf.

ANTIGUA.

VI. And be it further enacted, That the penalties imposed by this Act shall and may be recovered before any two or more justices of the peace; and all justices of the peace are hereby empowered and required, upon complaint to them made, to grant a warrant to bring the offender before them, at the time and place in such warrant specified; and if, on conviction of such offender on his or her confession, or on the evidence of any one or more credible witness or witnesses upon oath (which oath such justices are hereby empowered to administer), any such penalty shall not be forthwith paid, it shall and may be lawful to and for such justices to levy the same by distress, and for want of distress, to commit every such offender to the common gaol, there to remain without bail or mainprize for any time not exceeding twenty days, unless such penalty, and all reasonable charges attending the recovery thereof shall be sooner paid; and all such penalties, when so recovered and levied as aforesaid, shall be paid into the public treasury, to be applied to the general uses of the Colony.

VII. And be it further enacted, That an Act of this Island, dated the nineteenth day of May one thousand six hundred and sixty-eight, intituled, "An Act for the Settlement of the Custom or Duty of Four and a Half per Cent," shall be and the same is hereby repealed.

Passed the Assembly on the 13th February 1834, and the Council on the 15th February 1834.

No. 156. COPY of a DESPATCH from Mr. Secretary Stanley to Governor Sir Evan J. Murray M'Gregor, Bart.

Sir, Downing-street, 19th February 1834.

I HAVE been informed by Mr. Brown, the agent for the Island of Antigua, that a Bill for the Abolition of Slavery in Antigua had passed through one or more of its stages in the House of Assembly, containing an enactment repealing the four and a half per cent. duties.

I hope that in the further progress of the measure, the Legislature of Antigua will become sensible of the risk and impropriety of the insertion of such an enactment, and that it will ultimately be omitted, more especially as my reply of the 13th December to your Despatch of the 4th November last, in expectation of which it would appear that the House of Assembly had adjourned for a short interval, will have held out no definite hope of the repeal of those duties.

I trust also that you will not have failed to point out to the Legislature that by the 14th clause of your instructions, under the Sign Manual, you are required "as much as possible to observe in the passing of all laws, that whatever may be requisite upon each different matter be provided for by a different law, without mixing in one and the same Act such things as have no proper relation to each other;" that in my Despatch of the 19th October last, I especially advised you that in case the Legislature were desirous of making any provisions in connexion with the Act for the Abolition of Slavery, the approval of which might in any degree be doubtful, these provisions should be contained in a distinct Act, so as not to endanger the acceptance of the main and substantial part of the measure, upon which the right of the Colony to its share of the compensation might depend. You will, doubtless, also have called the attention of the Assembly to the fact, that the four and a half per cent. duties are under the control of the Imperial Parliament, and that the Assembly of Antigua have no right to legislate as to their repeal or modification. If, notwithstanding these considerations, the Act for the Abolition of Slavery should be passed by the Legislature of Antigua and assented to by yourself, and should contain the objectionable clause to which I have alluded, His Majesty will have no alternative but to disallow it. The primary result of that disallowance will be, that unless the Legislature of Antigua shall be able to take immediate steps for repairing this mistake, and previous to the 1st August to pass another Act for the Abolition of Slavery, to which His Majesty shall find himself able to assent, the British Act will come into unaided operation, and the apprenticeship will commence without any of its incidental regulations having been provided for. I am convinced that the Legislature of Antigua and yourself will be fully sensible of the inconvenience and danger of such a state of circumstances, and that in case the Act for the Abolition of Slavery in Antigua shall not have been transmitted to this country previously to the receipt of this Despatch, and shall contain the clause which Mr. Brown has brought under my notice, the Legislature will require no additional arguments to induce them to prevent the unfortunate consequences which I have pointed out, by taking measures for the omission or repeal of the objectionable enactment.

I have, &c.

COPY of a DESPATCH from Mr. Secretary Stanley to Governor Sir Evan J. Murray M'Gregor, Bart.

Sir, Downing-street, 10th April 1834.

I HAVE received your Despatch of the 17th February last, inclosing copies of the Bill for the Abolition of Slavery which has been passed by the Council and Assembly of Antigua.

My Despatch of the 19th February last, will already have informed you that His Majesty would have no alternative but to disallow this Bill, in consequence of its containing a clause repealing the four and a half per cent. duties, so far as respects Antigua.

Trusting, however, that in pursuance of the intimation conveyed in that Despatch, the Legislature of Antigua will have lost no time in framing a similar Bill, with the omission of the objectionable clauses, I shall delay taking the necessary measures for signifying His Majesty's formal disallowance of the Bill which you have transmitted to me, until I shall again hear from you on the subject.

I conceive, however, that it is due to the Legislature of Antigua not to omit this opportunity of expressing my unqualified approbation of the provisions of the Bill which relate to the Negroes. The objects and probable effects of the 2d and 3d clauses, which provide for the temporary domicile of the Negroes in their present habitations, and for the support of the aged and infirm, until some other system can be devised for that purpose, have been so justly and forcibly pointed out in the joint letter of the President and Council, and the Speaker of the Assembly to yourself, of the 16th February, that I feel it unnecessary to make any comments upon them, further than to express to you my opinion that these benevolent and prudent enactments will in no small degree enhance the value of the boon conferred upon the Negro population; that they will furnish an additional motive for their gratitude and attachment, and will most materially contribute to the successful issue of the important experiment of unqualified and immediate freedom which the Colony of Antigua has determined to undertake.

Sir, Government House, Antigua, 4 June 1834.

YOUR Despatch of the 10th April was communicated to the Council and Assembly on the 2d instant, and I have enjoyed the gratification of this day assenting to a Bill for the Abolition of Slavery in Antigua and its dependencies, "from and after the first day of August next."

This Bill, a transcript of which is enclosed, is similar to that upon the same subject now in your possession, with the omission of the objectionable clause, repealing the four-and-a-half per cent. duties, and with a few other apparently inconsiderable alterations, and is intituled, "An Act for relieving the Slave Population from the obligations imposed upon them by the recent Act of the Imperial Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, intituled, 'An Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies, for promoting the industry of the manumitted Slaves, and for compensating the persons hitherto entitled to the services of such Slaves.'"

Printed in the Appendix (B.) No. 18.

The first clause abolishes slavery in Antigua and its dependencies, on the 1st day of August 1834, for ever.

The second clause grants parochial relief to all persons so manumitted on the 1st day of August, on the same footing as all His Majesty's other subjects in this Colony.

The third clause prohibits owners or directors of plantations from evicting or expelling labourers willing to work for stipulated wages, or labouring under mental or corporeal diseases, or infirmity, from their habitations or tenements on plantations before the 1st day of August 1835, except guilty of disorderly and improper conduct, then by the order of two or more justices of the peace.

The fourth clause compels owners or directors of estates, from and after the 1st day of August 1834, to furnish such diseased or infirm persons as were in a state of slavery attached to the plantation, with the same maintenance, care and attention as the laws now in force in the Colony require to be furnished to slaves of same age and sex, and under similar circumstances, until adequate parochial or other relief is provided.

The fifth clause: In case of dispute or difficulty as to what persons are so entitled to relief, appeal to be made to two or more of the nearest justices of the peace, whose decision to be conclusive.

The sixth clause regulates the mode of bringing offenders before magistrates, and the proceedings before them, and regulates the manner of recovering the penalties imposed by this Act.

Under the peculiar circumstances in which this enactment has been presented to me, my assenting to it will, I trust, be honoured with your approval.

Sir, Government House, Antigua, 30 June 1834.

I DO myself the honour of forwarding two Acts passed by the Governor, Council and Assembly of this Island; viz.

Printed in the Appendix (B.) No. 19 & 20.

1st. An Act for establishing a new System of Police, and for increasing the power of the Magistracy of this Island in the appointment of Rural Constables, and for providing and regulating a House of Correction.

Former Acts repealed; Governor or Commander-in-Chief to select persons for, and to fill up vacancies. Members of police not to follow other occupation or to take fees, to wear uniform, and to be supplied with arms, &c., and not to do militia duty.

Superintendent to keep two horses; to be a justice of the peace, &c.

Assistant of police to act as chief at the station to which he is appointed, &c.

Clerk to be always stationary at St. John's.

In St. John's, besides constabulary duties, to keep watch and ward, to apprehend rogues, vagabonds, &c.

Three other stations to be formed under the authority of the Governor, who is empowered to hire or rent houses, &c.

On application of the owner, two Justices may appoint persons domiciliated as labourers, to be constables on plantations.

Central house of correction established at the new jail, until adequate provision for such institutions be made in the several parishes.

The Act to continue in force for two years.

2d. An Act for enabling Labourers, Artificers and Servants to recover by summary process their Wages from their Employers, and for repealing an Act dated the twenty-eighth of October, in the year one thousand six hundred and eighty-four, intituled, "An Act for enabling Artificers, Labourers and Servants to recover their Wages from their Masters."

Printed in the Appendix.

Clause first, enables artificers, labourers or servants to recover wages due, before any one of His Majesty's justices of the peace: provided complaint made within 30 days, and sum not exceeding 5*l.* current gold and silver money.

Clause second, repeals former Act of 28th October 1684.

A PROCLAMATION.

WHEREAS his Excellency the Governor in the month of December last, then contemplating a system of apprenticeship, notified to the working population of this community, that a statement should in fitting time appear, explaining the circumstances in which they would be placed on and after the first day of August next.

And whereas by an Act lately passed and published, the same being in concert with the views of His Majesty's Government, the legislature of the Island, confiding in the good character which experience had led them willingly to recognize in the labouring classes, have dispensed with the intermediate stage of apprenticeship, and have declared them to be on the ensuing first of August free subjects of The King, to all intents and purposes in like manner as the inhabitants of the United Kingdom.

And whereas the time is now at hand when the race of people, who are to partake of this blessing, will be placed in a situation either to answer, or to disappoint, the confident expectations that have been formed of them.

It hath therefore seemed good to his Excellency the Governor, by and with the advice of His Majesty's Privy Council, to call the serious attention of those, who are so soon to become free, to the following most important points.

First.—That their condition will be no longer that of reliance on their masters for food, house-room and clothing; their new position will remove them from this close connexion with their former owners, and they will henceforth have to depend for the necessaries of life on the honest and industrious labour of their own hands.

Secondly.—That whilst the utmost benefit of the laws, and encouragement from the owners of plantations will be given to those who labour industriously and live soberly and honestly where they are permitted to reside, the magistrates will be by law empowered to order to be taken up and brought to deserved punishment, all such as shall wander about in idleness, or attempt to make a living by robbery, theft or any dishonest means: and the masters, who are required by the Act just passed not only to establish unrestricted freedom, but to let their steady, orderly and reputable dependents remain in undisturbed possession of their present habitations or houses, for twelve months to come, may, nevertheless, avail themselves of the right which the same Act gives them, namely, to expel from their estates such as shall be guilty of "insubordinate, quarrelsome, disorderly or riotous behaviour, or drunkenness, theft, trespass, or other gross delinquency."

 Thirdly.

ANTIGUA.

Thirdly.—That the obligations of free subjects of His Majesty The King, bind them to due obedience and loyal support to all who are here put in authority under The King, and with quiet submission to observe the laws of the land, and also to be ever ready to assist in suppressing and bringing to justice any evil disposed persons who may threaten to disturb the public peace.

Fourthly.—That the said first of August having been, by a proclamation from his Excellency the Governor, ordered to be kept as a day of public thanksgiving to God for His past mercies, and of humble intercession for the continuance of His gracious care and favour, it is confidently expected that the demeanor of those made free on that memorable occasion will be distinguished by the temperance, moderation and decorum that should mark the rejoicing of a christian people, whilst the fear of offending that Almighty Being whose power over the stormy wind and tempest we are taught at that season of the year especially to acknowledge, will deter them from every excess displeasing to Him, and endangering their own peace and safety.

Lastly.—As these individuals have heretofore enjoyed full liberty of conscience in serving God, and attending the means of grace afforded by the several ministers of the Gospel who have long laboured among them for their good, and who have made the most favourable representations of their civilization and fitness to enjoy the boon of freedom (which gratifying testimony was dutifully transmitted by the Governor, to be laid before His Majesty The King), so are they now solemnly called upon to remember and to maintain the conduct thus clearly pointed out to them in the holy Scriptures:

> "Submit yourselves to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake: whether it be to the King, as supreme; or unto Governors, as unto them that are sent by him for the punishment of evil doers, and for the praise of them that do well. For so is the will of God, that with well doing ye may put to silence the ignorance of foolish men: As free, and not using your liberty for a cloak of maliciousness, but as the servants of God. HONOUR ALL MEN. LOVE THE BROTHERHOOD. FEAR GOD. HONOUR THE KING."—1 Peter, chap. ii. ver. 13 to 17.

Sir, Antigua, August 2d, 1834.

OCCUPIED as I presume your Excellency must be on the important occasion of your presence in another part of your government, I should not have trespassed upon your time, but from a conviction that your Excellency will be gratified to hear that the momentous crisis which was looked to with anxiety not unmixed with apprehension, has arrived and passed without any disturbance of the public peace or excess of feeling among the class of persons from which, if even in ebullitions of joy it might naturally have been expected, but that on the contrary, a calm and strict obedience to the solemn and religious observances prescribed by your Excellency's proclamation, appears alone to have actuated and pervaded the whole population, and in the hope that your Excellency's measures elsewhere will be crowned with equal success for the general tranquillity,

ANTIGUA.

Sir, Antigua, 4 August 1834.

I SHOULD not so soon have addressed your Excellency after my letter of the 2d instant, but that I have the satisfaction of informing you that this day on which there was some doubt of the negroes resuming their labours, they have with a very few exceptions made known to me, universally turned out on the conditions generally proposed and understood of 1*s.* per day to the able labourers, and 9*d.* to the second description, and I think there is no reason to suppose but that the whole will very soon come into the same terms.

In the hope of your Excellency's return to this Island, I thought it right to postpone the period appointed for the sailing of the express boat after the packet for 48 hours, that is, from Saturday last at 3 P.M. to the same hour this day, which I trust your Excellency will approve, as intended well; she did not, however, arrive till yesterday, so that the actual detention has been but short.

I am happy to tell your Excellency that the new police is in full operation, with vigilance and activity, and I may add with good effect.

EXTRACT of a DESPATCH from Mr. Secretary Spring Rice to Governor Sir Evan J. Murray M'Gregor, dated Downing-street, 6 September 1834.

I HAVE received your Despatches of the dates and numbers mentioned in the margin, and I have also received a Despatch, dated the 6th August, from the president administering the government of Tortola.

1 Aug. 1834. Virgin Island, Montserrat & Nevis. 2 Aug. 1834. St. Kitt's. 5 Aug. 1834. St. Kitt's. 5 Aug. 1834. Antigua.

By these communications I am put in possession of the state of affairs during the first days of August in each of the Islands under your government, except Dominica, of which accounts have reached me direct from Sir C. Schomberg.

You will receive by the present opportunity, a Despatch written before the arrival of your present communications, in which I signified to you His Majesty's approbation of your measures. The further details with which I am now acquainted can have no other effect than to confirm me in the opinion that every thing has been done which was possible on your part to bring the great measure of Abolition of Slavery into safe and satisfactory operation.

Although I have to regret that the inaction of the negroes in St. Christopher's was continued up to the date of your latest Despatch, it is, on the other hand, very gratifying to perceive that the establishment of perfect freedom in Antigua, if it has risked in some degree the success of the apprenticeship system in a neighbouring colony, has at least had a most auspicious commencement of its own, and has led, without disturbance or struggle, to the employment of the negroes upon moderate, but as I should hope, adequate wages.

Sir, Government House, Antigua, 29 August 1834.

OWING to my late absence from, and constant occupation since my return to Antigua, being without the means of estimating, from personal observation, the probable effects now in progress upon this community, of the sudden elevation of its peasantry from slavery to freedom; and desirous at the same time that no information, which if in my power to procure at a period so interesting, should be withheld from you, I have obtained, and beg leave to submit to your consideration the accompanying Report on passing events, from the superintendent of police, the details of which, as occasion may require, or as new features present themselves in the varying scene, will necessarily engage my earnest and anxious attention.

Some of the difficulties alluded to by the superintendent will, in all likelihood, gradually exhaust themselves, while others may eventually demand legislative remedies; but for the sake of all parties, and particularly of the labouring orders, whose general conduct throughout this unprecedented change of condition has hitherto redounded so highly to their credit, it is to be regretted that the Governor's forced seclusion from society at the most eventful crisis in West Indian history, entirely paralyzes the influence of the executive in their behalf, which might otherwise be actively and usefully exerted, on this important occasion, with the higher classes.

Enclosure in No. 163.

EXTRACT of a LETTER from Henry Loving, Esquire, Superintendent of Police, to Sir E. J. Murray M'Gregor, dated Police-Office, Head Quarters, St. John's, 27th August 1834.

YOUR Excellency's absence during the greater part of the month necessarily precluded you from being immediately acquainted with passing events in this Island, and affords me the advantage of compiling a more comprehensive report of the operations of the Slave Abolition Law of Antigua.

I have now the honour to inform your Excellency that I felt it expedient, from a sense of the high regard entertained of my character by the slave population, to address them on the 31st of July in the shape of a "public notice," which was printed and widely circulated, wherein I gave them much good advice, and endeavoured to reconcile their expectation on the score of wages with the standard which the planters had agreed upon, according to the extent of their ability to afford it. It is not my business to state the positive effects produced by this document, but I leave your Excellency to deduce your own conclusions from the sentiments expressed by one of our journalists who is the organ of the proprietary body; namely, that "the placard did good;" one of these public notices is sent herewith, as forming part of this report.

The eventful 1st of August arrived, proceeded and ended, without one circumstance of a public or private nature to agitate the frame of society, or to mark the transition from a state of slavery to that of freedom. There never was an occasion in this Island, not excepting the Sabbath, where a day was kept with such universal reverence and unbiassed holiness. Every thing appeared to be done from individual conviction that it was a season of no ordinary kind; and praise and adoration and thanksgiving to God were offered up by the whole people in the churches and chapels from eleven o'clock in the morning till eight at night.

The next day (Saturday) was spent by the labouring population in festive enjoyments. They had provided themselves, out of their own means, with new apparel from top to toe, and enough of good fare for every purpose; and I feel much pleasure in assuring your Excellency that they conducted themselves generally with christian propriety.

On Monday the 4th, the gangs on a few plantations went to work cheerfully for the stipulated wages, and on some other estates a trifling number of 10 or 12 labourers out of perhaps a population of between 100 and 200 might be seen in the field; while on other places the labourers altogether had ceased from work for the time. It appeared that the great majority of the peasantry were either bent on a whole week's relaxation, or were calculating how far they might benefit themselves by striking for higher wages on the places of their original domicile, or looking out for new and more beneficial channels for their industry. From that period to the present, a variety of changes from plantation to plantation have taken place among them, and on a few places almost the whole population have been interchanged by their own whim, the love of novelty, the predominance of self-interest, or dislike to their managers or other governors. From the last of these causes, I am to trace most of the difficulties which exist at this moment, in reconciling the peasantry to the new state of things.

Among the various causes which have led the peasantry to disagree with their employers, I may notice some of the most prominent; viz.

1st. The hour of turning out in the morning.

2dly. The collecting and throwing of green fodder for the horses.

3dly. The hour of breaking off work in the evening.

The head quarters of my department has been constantly engaged in hearing complaints or giving advice upon these several heads, and as the law does not refer to either of them, I have taken great pains to impress this upon the minds of the complainants, and to point out that the only remedy afforded them as free men, was to leave their then employers if they could get better terms elsewhere. They have invariably abided by my counsel, and in some cases have resumed their labour on the same plantation, without any palpable discontent.

With respect to the first of these causes, I am to inform your Excellency that it has been created by a want of union among the planters, who, though their interests would appear to be alike, are at variance in their respective plans, according to the view which each of them takes of benefiting his own property. Thus, the humane man requires his labourer to turn out at sun-rise; the middling man rather earlier, and the rigid old school colonist at peep of day, agreeably to the private advice conveyed in a note from an attorney to his manager, "not to abate a tittle of old customs." The watchful and suspicious mind of the peasantry soon discover the contrast, and disagreement quickly follows between them and the more illiberal class of employers. I am of opinion that the people will never consent to commence work before sun-rise in this inhospitable climate, now that they are free; and unless the planters will come into the measure generally, I see no hope of permanent reconciliation.

With respect to the second cause, that of collecting fodder, the practice under the old system was for the people to do so during the two hours said to be allowed them for dinner. They have now withstood the renewal of it, and the planters are giving way in most quarters to the remonstrance, because they find it impossible to overcome it, and some are paying for the supply of fodder, while others allow the people extra time to collect it.

With respect to the third cause, that of breaking off work in the evening, an attempt was made by the peasantry to reject their breakfast and dinner hours, and to work incessantly from the morning till four o'clock in the afternoon, then to cease from labour for the day. The impossibility of their constitutions being able to support it, and the certainty of its ruining the plantations, was opposed to their views, and they gave up the point after a short but obstinate struggle.

Another class of complaints is the aged and infirm, whose circumstances are humanely provided for in the law. I am happy to state that these are rendered very comfortable on many estates, but I am equally sorry to report that this is not the universal practice, and I have had my office thronged more than once with age and disease applying for relief. I have had comparatively fewer of such applicants from day to day, and am in hopes that their circumstances generally are improving; but as such cases are more deserving of notice than any others, I shall be zealously watchful over the interests of that unfortunate class of beings.

There is one circumstance relating to the cultivation of the soil, which I deem of great importance to bring to the knowledge of your Excellency. I find that with some estates the parents are sending off all their children, male as well as female, to live in the towns, which are already populated beyond the means of support. This fact of itself would be alarming enough, but the alarm must be largely increased, when it is remembered that these detached children of from five to twelve years of age are the sprouts of an agricultural people, and that being once lopped off, the soil must be gradually abandoned as the parent roots shall cease to exist.

Another class of evils likely to arise to the welfare of this Colony, is the fact of several slaves from the neighbouring French island having arrived here since the first of the month, and of their having reported that thousands are preparing to follow so soon as they can escape. I sincerely desire to see these people free and prosperous; but absolute pauperism and ruin would be the result of their being permitted to remain in this little Colony.

Upon the whole, and as it relates to the state of things generally in the Island, I shall conclude this report by stating that the labouring population have hardly been guilty of any acts of illegality since the day of their emancipation beyond those of common misdemeanors, such as would happen in the best regulated societies of any country; that they are gradually resuming their former occupations; that one-half of the effective strength may be computed to be at work; that the remainder have either given up agricultural pursuits altogether to better their condition, or are wandering up and down the country in quest of work where they may procure it upon the best terms; and some, it is needless to say, are confirmed idlers and vagabonds from principle, and must be subject to the operation of the police laws; while others have been expelled from certain plantations, by legal authority, from one cause or another, at the instance of their employers; but in several cases a portion of these have returned, made suitable concessions and been forgiven.

There have been faults on both sides, but it would be culpable omission in me not to express the high sense I entertain of the meritorious conduct exhibited by the greater part of the resident proprietors and the representatives of absentees, in conciliating the affections and leading the minds of the peasantry to the right use of the blessings of freedom.

I shall lay before your Excellency the state of the calendar at the end of the month, and shall take that opportunity to mention the number that have been expelled, provided I can get the necessary information in time.

I have, &c.

PUBLIC NOTICE.

In pursuance of the power and authority vested in me, under the Act of this Island for the establishment of a new and more effective system of police, I do hereby give this Public Notice to all whom it may concern, that I shall proceed forthwith to carry the law into effect to the best of my ability and judgment, without fear, favour or affection. And I take this early opportunity to advise every class and description of persons, without reference to their rank or condition in life, to demean themselves as good men and faithful subjects of the King, in order that the peace of society, and the prosperity and happiness of every member thereof, may redound to the credit of Antigua all over the world, and to the honour and glory of Almighty God.

To the labouring population especially I would offer a word in season. They are aware that I am nearly related to them; that I have been their stedfast friend. Let me, therefore, beseech them, by that connexion and friendship, to be peaceable, harmless, frugal, industrious, obedient to their superiors, lovers of religion, lovers of good works. Let them remember, that though they may be called upon by their Maker to pass through many trials and adversities hereafter, yet their new state of life will be as far superior to their past condition as daylight is to darkness; and that all freemen in every country are subjected to numerous rules and regulations to guide, direct and govern both their private and public conduct; and moreover, that a freeman must of necessity be a great slave to himself, that is, he must become a slave to his back, a slave to his belly, a slave to the wants of his wife and children, and to every other domestic comfort.

But above all, let them reflect, that while they are to be exalted to the proud station of freemen, their brethren in the other sugar colonies are still required by the legislatures of those places to serve as apprentices for the next six years. What then are your advantages over theirs? You have good sense enough to answer the question yourself; but permit me to tell tell you, that if you show yourselves worthy of freedom, it will be the means of helping your brethren in those Islands to obtain their liberty likewise, because their masters will find that the people of Antigua are more industrious, contented and happy than they, and the soil better cultivated than theirs.

Under the present embarrassed circumstances of the plantations in this Island (most of them being mortgaged), it is not probable that the persons in charge of them can offer to the labourers a large rate of wages for the present; though I feel confident they will increase the price of labour as soon as the numerous tracts of waste lands begin to be cultivated, and they shall have found things working well on the sugar estates, and their profits increasing under a new and happier state of society. I am consequently obliged, again and again, to admonish my labouring friends to be quiet and satisfied, and to console themselves with the reflection, that if a wise and just Providence has done so much for them already, HE is still able and willing to give them all they desire, provided they will wait with patience for the blessing.

If any discontented labourer can better his condition, or get larger wages by going on a strange plantation, let him do so by all means: Or if he can be profitably employed in any of the towns, let him take the situation, for the law does not prevent him. On the contrary, if he cannot obtain large wages, and will not work for small, he must either starve, or become a burden to society. But will the law permit this burden? No, no! If he be found idling either in town or country, he will be taken up as a vagabond, sent to the house of correction, and worked upon that terrible machine called a tread mill; and in all such cases, the police under my command throughout the Island will pursue and apprehend such characters, not allowing them a moment to enjoy their idleness.

Perhaps it may be better for me to explain myself more fully on several important points.

First.—The King and Parliament of England made a decree last year, that the slaves in the West Indies should serve their masters for six years longer.

Secondly.—The Council and Assembly of Antigua objected to this; because they had a high opinion of the slaves, and they went farther than the King and Parliament. They gave the people their freedom at once.

Thirdly.—They passed an Act for the purpose, and they have gone even beyond the expectations of your best friends: they have allowed all your people who are old and infirm, and all who are afflicted with any disease which will prevent them from working, food, clothing, lodging, medicine and medical attendance, until such time as the parish can provide for them. They have allowed all the country people, whether old or young, healthy or diseased, to remain in their present habitations, without any rent, for twelve months, from the first of August this year till the first of August next year, provided they will perform their work for such wages as the planters can afford to give them, and provided they are not guilty of riotous behaviour, drunkenness, theft or any other diabolical act.

Now listen to my opinion on the subject of your wages, and you will be sure not to get into trouble and mischief. I have given the subject much thought, and I am persuaded that it is impossible for more than one planter out of fifty to give you above one shilling money per day for the strong people, and one bitt per day for the younger folks, or for those who are infirm but can still do light work. It would take a moderate sized estate, at this rate, not less than fifteen hundred pounds per year, for wages alone, besides the maintenance of the old people, and the doctor's charges; the payment of manager's and overseer's salaries, and all the repairs and wear and tear of a plantation, from the mill down to the cattle pens. Some planters have been giving two shillings lately, but it was only for a moment; and when slavery is abolished they will never do it again, except they are hard pushed for labourers, but that will be only now and then; whereas it is better to work for one man all the year round for one shilling per day, than for another who will only want your services for one or two months at two shillings per day. Besides this, I must tell you further, that if a labourer leaves one plantation to work on another, he must look for a new house, new gardens and grounds, wherever he carries his labour; for his old master will not suffer him to make a convenience of his property.

Finally, may you, my labouring friends, never put it in my power to be ashamed of you. I shall be ever ready to protect and do you justice while you act like christians. But when you forget your privileges as freemen, and become disorderly and unreasonable, I shall be compelled, with a heart full of grief and a mind big with regret and confusion, to do my duty as a public officer without fear, favour or affection.

Sir, Downing-street, 14 October 1834.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Despatch of the 29th August, enclosing the Report of the superintendent of police.

I am quite aware of the very peculiar and responsible duties which have devolved upon you, in consequence of the state of the Island of St. Kitt's; and I fully appreciate the earnestness and zeal which you have manifested under circumstances of a very trying nature.

The account which is conveyed to me by you of the conduct of the labouring classes, redounds greatly to their credit; and will, I hope, lead to results as important to them as to the Colony generally.

The report which you enclose is generally able and judicious, and it is gratifying to find that in the superintendent of police you possess so useful and intelligent an officer.

I conceive that your early attention should be directed to his statement with respect to the possible introduction of foreign fugitive slaves into the Island of Antigua. Although such persons, whilst within the British territory, are free, it is fully competent to the authorities at Antigua, to consider whether step administrative or legislative may not be requisite to prevent such fugitives from producing a state of vagrancy and irregularity which may be dangerous to the well-being of society.

Sir, Government House, Antigua, 4 October 1834.

UNDER reference to my communication of the 29th of August, another report from the superintendent of police is herewith presented for your information, regarding the agricultural classes of this Colony.

The clergy, magistrates and proprietors have been consulted by me upon the most eligible mode of promoting the mutual and inseparable interests of the employers and the employed; and the result of the inquiry, as soon as circumstances permit, will be duly laid before you.

Enclosure in No. 165.

Enclosure in No. 165.

Sir, Police Office, Head Quarters, St. John's, 1st October 1834.

THE close of another month since the abolition of slavery in this Island, makes it necessary that I should communicate to your Excellency the information I possess, and the opinions I entertain, on the state of the agricultural affairs of the Colony.

I had entertained the most sanguine hopes that the new system would have produced a double share of advantages to the planters generally during the past month, in comparison to what it did in the preceding one; but I regret to say that this has not been the case, and the evil, in my opinion, may be traced—

1st. To the absence from the plantations of many hundreds of male adult labourers who have thrown up their former occupation and become fishermen and fish-pot makers, bargemen, watersidemen, porters and house servants, on the coasts, and in all the harbours and towns. As it regards the porters, whose numbers are known by their badges, I find that they have increased at the rate of 300 per cent. since the 1st of August. This accession naturally leads one to inquire how far these people may be able to earn a livelihood where competition is so great? The answer is both easy and correct. Portions of them are to be seen daily congregated about the streets in almost perfect idleness, hardly earning in 24 hours wherewith to keep soul and body together, and only saving themselves from the operation of the Vagrant Act by the possession of their badges. Of the watersidemen it may be stated that their number has increased at the rate of ten to one, and all from the plantations. They are a species of hangers-on at fishing places; and I have been informed by the magistrate recently appointed for Five Islands Division, that two days ago he dispersed a body of not less than 60 of these people, who had assembled on one of the bays waiting the arrival of the fishing boats to pick up a few crabs, or the like, rather than earn their bread in an honest laborious way. The end of this will be that those who emigrated from the plantations will be driven either to return to their original occupations, or (what I am more apprehensive of) become depredators on private property, or sink into a state of mendicity and worthlessness arising from habits of idleness and vice, and thus give employment to the public executioner, assist to increase the expenditure of the country, or to burthen the parishes to an alarming extent. This will also probably be the case with many of the new class of house servants.

2dly. To the absence from the plantations of the youth of both sexes. I had the honour to advert to this subject in my former Report to your Excellency as an evil of great magnitude; nitude; and I regret most sincerely that I do not perceive how their restoration could be effected by any legislative enactment. The parents of these young folks eagerly embraced the arrival of their freedom to dissever them from an agricultural life, under the now ridiculous impression (engendered by a state of slavery) that it was the most disgraceful of all situations; and moreover, that they might receive a town education, embracing of course, all that artificial consequence, that love of dress and hatred of laborious occupation, which has been hitherto the cause of real want and misery among a large portion of free negroes, or their coloured descendants, in this and every other town of the Island.

3dly. The predilection entertained by the adult female labourers on the plantations to work a irregular periods during the week, and to fill up the vacant time by huckstering, or going to market to dispose of any pulse vegetables or other roots they may be able to collect from their grounds, or elsewhere, to the value of, perhaps, a few pence; or wood and green fodder taken from the employer's soil without permission. In this way three days have been known to be consumed in the course of one week.

4thly. The want of any thing like union of sentiment or action among the planters, as to the best means of improving the industry or ensuring the constant residence of the labouring population.

And here I may venture to observe, without the fear of contradiction, that the unsettled state of the agricultural interests is greatly owing to the diversity of opinions and regulations adopted on the different plantations. While some planters are holding out trifling auxiliary rewards beyond the pecuniary rate of wages, others have neither the ability nor the inclination to do so. While some are exacting the periods of labour to a very minute, and turning back from the field all those who came to it a moment beyond the stipulated time, and warning them not to return for the remainder of the day; others are carrying on the cultivation with more certain speed and good will by winking at these delinquencies, and allowing the people who entered late to be paid according to the extent of their labour. While some are evicting a father, mother, husband or wife, others are wise and politic, and humane enough to foresee that the near relatives of the evicted party will follow them as a matter of course, and leave the plantations destitute of many hands in the attempt to be rid of a few. While some are encouraging the family women to remain by appointing an old nurse to feed and care their babies in the hours of business, others are opposed to this plan; the employers and mothers mutually disagree, and eviction of the latter is sure to be the consequence.

Passing over the first evil, namely, that of the absence of the male adult labourers, and going to the second, that is, the absence of the children, I would suggest to the planters to attempt a cure by the establishment of a school on each estate, and the election of a teacher by the people from among themselves. Also, that over and above any gratuity which may be allowed him by the planter, a subscription of one penny halfpenny currency per week be given him by each scholar, in order to create in their minds, as well as those of their parents, a degree of pride resulting from these contributions, and to give them a greater interest in an establishment where the master and pupil are mutually dependent on each other. This plan might be the means of enticing back a portion, at least, of the boys and girls, who, like all other children, are fond of being at home; and the planter, proceeding from one stage of sagacity to another, would thus obtain the labour, while he assisted the education, of the rising generation, by apportioning the day so as to meet the wants of both branches.

The remedies for the third class of evils suggest themselves to my mind as follows: The Act for compelling travelling hucksters and pedlars to take out a licence of eight dollars per annum, will check, to a considerable extent, the practice of the labouring women of adopting this uncertain mode of life. The Act for apprehending persons selling wood and green fodder without a written permission from their employers is now operating beneficially under the superintendence of my department, and many idlers who gained their daily subsistence by stealing these articles, are now in a fair way of resuming their rural occupations. Above all, nothing, in my opinion, can provide against the labouring women, or in fact any other description of labourers, dancing attendance at market on every frivolous occasion, but a legislative enactment to establish a general market day once a week for the supply of articles the growth of plantations, except in cases where the employers find it politic or expedient to allow certain persons to carry provisions to any town, with a written permission to dispose of the same.

The fourth evil, that of a want of union or system among the planters generally, rests with themselves to remedy: but I must repeat, that their desultory measures and opinions have been exceedingly detrimental to the advancement of general industry and permanent tranquillity. I am not sufficiently acquainted with agricultural pursuits to lay down any plan whereby the present state of things may be improved. I know there are many gentlemen of the proprietary body who are both mentally and practically capable of doing so, and I trust, that the information which your Excellency has desired from the planters generally may lead to a conclusion which will answer the great objects that are contemplated at this moment in your communication to them.

Notwithstanding this, however, I am constrained to submit that nothing but a contract by the week or month, between the planters and labourers, can insure the steady working of the latter, and although there may be some objections to this plan, it is still far preferable to the day labour or to job work. The former is proving itself to be unproductive of good. The latter would have this evil tendency, that after the performance of one job, the labourers would would consider themselves at liberty to spend their earnings by it ere they undertook a new contract, and there is no telling what mischiefs might befal them in the mean time.

I had almost forgot to mention to your Excellency a fact which came to my knowledge a few days since, and which will go far to prove that a want of uniform system must produce good to one planter while it ruins another, and mars the certainty of general benefit to the landed interests. There are three estates contiguous to each other in Five Island Division. On one of these, the family women are all at work, because their children are nursed. On the others they are not at work, because the reverse of this system is practised. Five hours labour per diem for each woman has been gained by the former, and the same number lost by the latter. The inference speaks for itself.

In conclusion, I feel it a pleasing part of my duty to inform your Excellency that the progress of crime is quite below the level of what it might have been contemplated under the existing circumstances of the Colony, and I am in hopes that a vigorous administration of the laws by all the public authorities will tend to cement the peace, and advance the prosperity of every class of society.

Sir, Colonial Office, 27 December 1834.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Despatch of the 4th October last, and I have to acquaint you, that I have read with great interest, though not without some anxiety, the very sensible report of the superintendent of police respecting the class of agricultural labourers in Antigua. I should be prepared to observe upon this report more fully, were it not that I consider it expedient to wait the result of the inquiry of the clergy, magistrates and proprietors noticed by you. I fully approve of your having opened this communication with them, from the policy and indeed the security of obtaining the co-operation of those classes of society in all measures which may be demanded by the state of the Colony.

I TAKE the liberty of presenting to your consideration a report by a committee of His Majesty's Privy Council on the present situation of this Colony, and on the best means of promoting its prosperity, and of encouraging the peasantry in habits of industry.

Enclosure in No. 167. Enclosure in No. 167.

EXTRACT of a Report to Governor Sir E. J. Murray M'Gregor, by the Council of the Island of Antigua, dated 22 November 1834.

THE members of the Board of Council appointed as a committee to report on the present situation of the Colony, and on the best means of promoting its prosperity, and of encouraging the peasantry in habits of industry, beg leave respectfully to submit to your Excellency's consideration the following remarks, the result of a review of the various Reports of magistrates, proprietors and directors of plantations, laid before them by your Excellency's commands, as well as the fruits of their own observation and experience, during the three months which have elapsed since the great change in the altered relations of our society.

The committee, in commencing their task, deem it due to the negroes of Antigua to remark, that the boon of freedom was received by them with a sobriety of demeanor and expression of religious feeling most creditable to the newly enfranchised; apparently, however, unmixed with any demonstration of gratitude to their late owners, as persons principally concerned in the transaction, so far as the curtailment of the apprenticeship might have have been supposed to have affected them; nor did the recollection of the past, either of good or ill, seem to interfere with the great question at issue, the cultivation of sugar by free labour.

Instances of attachment to some directors, and dislike to others, might be found, but in the former case, at the precise moment of the alteration of our system, rarely subduing the objection to the wages tendered, and the disinclination to field-labour exhibited; and in the latter case, scarcely influencing farther than the rejection of the same terms, or the abandonment of dwellings, when measures too hasty for the period alluded to were injudiciously, although legally pursued.

The aversion to agricultural labour, and the erroneous ideas cherished on the subject of wages, formed with the bulk of the population the first difficulty to be overcome; and when it is remembered, that during the reaping of the last crop, many individuals deemed it advantageous to the interest of plantations to give the field-labourer two shillings for his Saturday, besides a ration of food and rum, much allowance must be made for the stand taken by the working classes in August, bitterly disappointed as they were on learning the first class labourer could only expect to earn one-half the above amount per day, and the second class labourer but 9*d*.

Your committee would not be understood from this statement of facts, to infer they believe the wages to be other than liberal, in connexion with attendant advantages universally offered, namely, medical care, house-rent and provision-grounds, nor to imply the rate quoted was the substance of a positive preconcerted agreement entered into by directors of plantations; although, undoubtedly at the meetings of the agricultural society, which were held before the 1st of August, the amount of wages was fully canvassed, and the rate mentioned laid down in argument by practical planters, as the maximum that could be afforded on careful calculation; the understanding was, that it would be generally acted upon, and with some exceptions, according to particular interests, it may be said to have prevailed.

Under such circumstances it was not to be wondered at then, that few labourers appeared in the fields until the middle of August, that dissatisfaction should be loudly expressed, or that those who never meant to return to agricultural toil should avail themselves of the grounds of dissent. Nevertheless, as towards the close of the above month, the number of labourers at work had very much increased, it might have been supposed the sums specified (objected against as too little) would have furnished sufficient stimulus to industry; but unfortunately it soon appeared that the wages of three days, enabling the labourers to spend the rest of the week in idleness, with their improvident habits and utter disregard of the future, they could not be depended on for continued industry, and the secret outbidding of various persons in absolute want of labourers from the peculiar position of estates under their superintendence, reckless of the consequences to the community, or the disasters they brought down upon the heads of those they enticed from their proper homes, without being prepared to furnish them with dwellings, occasioned a desultory irregular attendance at field-work, and evictions consequent on such proceedings—legal, but mischievous in the extreme.

An exercise of newly acquired rights was to be expected, and may account for the preference at first given by the labourers on such plantations to work away from the surveillance of their former directors; and provided the strength generally in the fields had not been below the wants of plantations, no great injury might have been sustained, and the caprice left to its own termination. But your committee lament to say, on examining the Returns of 80 estates made up to the 1st of October, it appears that more than one-third of the labouring population of Antigua (particularly the males and young persons of both sexes,) have absolutely withdrawn altogether from agriculture; and it is notorious the adult women are now and have been, since the 1st of August, the persons chiefly concerned in carrying on the cultivation of the Colony; the children having been sent off the plantations to schools in the various towns, or placed elsewhere with the view of following hereafter other occupations than those of agriculture, thereby destroying the germ of the future prosperity of the Island as a sugar colony.

It is evident that a great portion of the males have become fishermen, fish-pot makers, waterside-men, porters and house-servants; living in want and idleness, rather than return to field-labour. The decline in the cultivation of the Island, especially in ground provisions and the preparation of cane land for 1835, in so short a space of time as three months is distinctly marked, and can thus easily be traced to the combined operation of indolence and aversion to agricultural labour, on the part of the newly enfranchised; for it is observable that two days out of six are, in a certain extent, lost to labour on the part of those who now work; few persons hiring themselves on Saturdays, and a great deficiency of labourers appearing also on Mondays.

Unhappily, a sense of degradation has hitherto attached to field-labour, in addition to its laborious details. The instructions of His Majesty's Government, on no account to allow African apprentices to be brought up to agricultural pursuits, and the practice of removing from it coloured children, have strengthened the impression naturally to that degree; it is clear nothing but necessity or distress is likely to induce the population to follow it as a means of livelihood.

It is in vain to attempt to carry on the cultivation of sugar by the temptation of high wages, because this article, which alone from its value and capacity of withstanding frequent seasons of drought, can maintain this Colony in its former condition, will not bear the cost of such production in the market of the world, and because the very obtaining the same by the labourer, with his present feelings and disregard of the future, incapacitates him him from continued industry, without which a sugar plantation cannot be carried on. In proof of this observation, has already been mentioned the irregular attendance of the working classes under the rate of wages universally given, namely, the shilling, and the bit, or ninepence; the gain of three days enabling the labourer to spend the week in idleness, or other occupation than husbandry.

The labour of freemen, it is taken for granted throughout the Western world, must be more expensive than that of slaves. In corroboration of this opinion may be instanced, the amount of weekly wages paid on each plantation since the 1st of August, nearly equal to the former expenditure as issued in provisions, but distributed among a far less number of persons, and by no means in proportion to the work performed, which has been negligently executed, no remedy existing; the demand for labour being so great that dismissal has been no punishment, and the most worthless labourer could find fresh employment at any hour of the day, wherever he chose to go. The consequence of this extraordinary position of things must be general distress at no great distance of time, and it is only from the re-action, occasioned by distress, your committee can see a removal to those impediments to cultivation which threaten to ruin this Colony. If it were possible to remove from field-labour the sense of degradation, or by holding out public encouragement to turn a portion of the tide of emigration of the peasantry of Europe into this quarter, and hardy agriculturists from Great Britain, or elsewhere, could be induced to locate themselves and families, in sufficient numbers, to undertake a portion of the manual labour required in the performance of the various duties of the manufacturing of sugar, or the tilling of the soil, an impetus might be given to the black population, productive of benefit to the community, inasmuch as they would entertain a higher idea of occupations, up to this time held in contempt by the free negro; and if the experiment failed of success, as far as the negroes were concerned, this Island might not become a desert.

Your committee impute the advancement in ploughing, and other operations in husbandry in this Island, entirely to the introduction of indentured ploughmen from Scotland some years ago, whom the negro was then accustomed to see holding the stilts in the field. This class of persons have risen to superior situations, and are at present nowhere to be seen; but the influence of their example still renders an employment with the plough to be esteemed by the negro very differently from any other operation in husbandry. The expense of the plan suggested, however, presents serious obstacles to its entertainment, only to be removed by aid from His Majesty's Government.

Copy of a DESPATCH from the Earl of Aberdeen to Governor Sir Evan J. Murray M'Gregor, Bart.

Sir, Downing-street, 28 February 1835.

With reference to your Despatch of the 2d December 1834, and the accompanying copy of a report from a committee of His Majesty's Privy Council, I beg to assure you, that the subjects therein recommended to me have been under serious consideration.

The statements of the Privy Council relative to the prospects of the Island during the then approaching crop are certainly serious, but several reasons may be assigned which appear to render it unadvisable for me at present to deliver a definite opinion upon the remedies proposed. In the first place, I do not find that you have given them your sanction. You have, it is true, assented to an Act of the Legislature intended to provide additional guarantees for the industry of the labourers during the present harvest; and as your Despatch of 30th December 1834 acquaints me that their conduct since their emancipation has been "in the highest degree creditable," and expresses no apprehension for the ultimate safety of the crop, I must of course assume, that whereas in case of necessity you would have added to the weight of the opinions of the committee that of your own unequivocal concurrence, your refraining from that course implies that in your view no such necessity exists.

That Act has, of course, been tried on its own merits; but it is clear that I am not yet in a condition to recognize as substitutes for such of its provisions as have been deemed objectionable, and have caused its disallowance, others which have come to me under an inferior though respectable recommendation, and which embrace a much wider field, with many more modifications of principle, both political and commercial.

Nor do those indirect and inferior sources of information to which, in the absence of more full immediate communications from yourself, I may advert, at all impress me with the belief that the labouring population of Antigua are in a state of general reluctance to conduct the accustomed agricultural and manufacturing operations.

ANTIGUA.

I observe further, that in the report of Mr. Holberton on the religious instruction of the Island, he states it as a fact, apparently unquestioned, that the labourers were earning sixpence a day. If this be the case then, since the date of your Despatch of November 1st, and the accompanying Report, in which the wages are stated at one shilling, and at nine-pence, for two several classes, there must have been a very material increase in the supply of labour, more especially when it is considered that the season of the year at which this latter account is dated would cause an ample demand.

And, on the other hand, the serious nature and the large number of the remedial measures proposed, together with the doubts which have arisen in my mind whether some of them may not justly be deemed to trench too much upon the newly-acquired privileges of the negroes, and the uncertainty which, or whether any of the long list may still appear to be required by the condition of the Island, make me hesitate in pronouncing a decided opinion upon them in detail.

With reference, however, to the general principle which is to be regarded in all enactments affecting the labouring population, I beg to call your attention to the circular Despatch of 19th October 1833, in which my predecessor, Lord Stanley, declares, that His Majesty will not consent to the establishment of an intermediate state between the apprenticeship and freedom, other than a modification of the apprenticeship itself. It will follow, that whatever Bills may be passed to secure the industry and good conduct of the population, must not affect the emancipated negroes as such, but deal with them impartially as with others, according to the ordinary circumstances of their social condition.

As regards, however, one of the topics to which the Report adverts, namely, the discredit which is brought upon agricultural pursuits by the prohibition of the Government to apprentice the liberated Africans to field labour, I can have no hesitation in expressing my desire to co-operate with the Legislature of Antigua in any measures otherwise unobjectionable, which may tend to establish in repute the cultivation of the soil.

No documents in which such prohibition is conveyed can be discovered in this office; but I may safely say, that the circumstances to which it was adapted being changed, the prohibition itself need no longer be maintained. However necessary it may have been, when slavery existed, to preclude any risk of confounding the freeman with the slave to the detriment of the former, it is as clearly unwise in my judgment, in the present condition of the Colonies, to inflict upon the due and natural occupation of freemen the stigma which attached to servile employment. It will be well (whether this observation may or may not have immediate reference to any regulations at present exising in the Island of Antigua) that no orders established in conformity with the prohibition of which the Report complains, should be suffered any longer to exist; but then the utmost care must be taken (and I am confident I may intrust the subject to your integrity and solicitude), that in no case which has arisen or may arise shall any apprenticeship be legalized, under conditions which interfere with the necessary rights of a free population, or which would tend, in a state of society I trust more healthy and advanced, to reintroduce the institutions or to revive the remembrance of slavery. The subject of procuring labourers for the West Indies from other parts of the world is under the anxious consideration of Government; and I shall receive with satisfaction the proposal of any specific plan which you or the subordinate authorities of the Island may deem calculated to operate beneficially in that view for the Colony over which you preside.

You will not, I am sure, be led to infer, from any thing I have stated, an indifference on my part to the prosperity of Antigua. I recognize on the largest sense those claims to the sympathy and support of His Majesty's Government which must be possessed by a community placed by its own courageous act in the van of an enterprize as novel as it is interesting and important.

Sir, Government House, Antigua, 30 December 1834.

By the present packet, I do myself the honour of forwarding transcript of an Act passed by the Legislature of this island; viz.

"An Act for regulating Special Contracts between Labourers and their Employers, and enforcing a strict observance of such Contracts."

Act printed in the Appendix (B.) No. 21.

The object of this Act is to regulate special hirings for service in husbandry, as distinguished from general hirings in the mother country, and enforce a strict observance of them by both parties, through the medium of summary convictions. These contracts have been limited in their duration to a twelvemonth, and required to be entered into in the presence of two or more witnesses, in order to protect the labourers against being overreached by designing persons.

In the absence of such special hirings, the labourers and their employers would be left to the ordinary legal remedy for breaches of implied contracts.

With a view as well to obviate the difficulty that might otherwise arise in the breast of the magistrate as to the particular offences which ought to be held to involve a virtual breach of the relative obligations imposed on the labourers by these special hirings, and the measure of punishment which should be assigned to them respectively, as to distinctly apprise and warn the latter of the penalties to which such offences should subject them, the 2d, 3d, 4th, 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th, 9th and 10th clauses of this Act are taken, almost word for word, from the draft of the Order in Council for British Guiana, which was proposed by the Earl of Ripon in his communication with the West India body, as a model for the adoption of the Colonial Legislatures, in the event of a general emancipation.

The 11th clause enables a magistrate to order arrears of wages to be paid, with costs, and inflict a penalty for the breach of contract on the part of the employer, as also to discharge the labourer from his contract, on proof of ill usage.

The 12th clause is calculated to remedy the evil of drawing off labourers from the estates on which they are located, and generally employed to work for a short time upon increased wages, and leaving them to a precarious subsistence, after having thus induced them to forfeit their previous claim on their former masters; and the enactment is considered consistent in its principle with the common law of the mother country, under which it has been ruled, that a person who contracts with another to do certain work for him is the servant of that other till the work is finished, and no other person can employ such servant to the prejudice of the first master, the very act of giving him the means of keeping out of his former service.—Blake & Lanyon, 6 Term Rep. 221.

The 13th clause provides for the recovery of wages, costs and penalties, and application of the latter.

The 14th clause obviates any idea of its being in the contemplation of the Legislature to prevent persons from employing labourers, under less formal agreement, by the day or piece, on any particular scale of wages that might be more generally adopted by the planters, it being understood that the labourers so employed would not be subject to the penal provisions of this Act; that, in short, if they faithfully perform their stipulated work, they will be able to obtain their wages by the adjudication of a magistrate, under another recent Act of this Island, for enabling labourers, artificers and servants to recover, by summary process, their wages from employers, and that, in the event of their failing in their engagements, their employers will, of course, have the right of withholding their wages, without possessing the means of otherwise punishing them more effectually for their defaults or delinquencies in service.

The 15th clause explains who shall be considered as labourers within the meaning of the Act.

The 16th clause limits the duration of the Act to a twelvemonth.

No. 170. EXTRACT of a DESPATCH from Governor Sir Evan J. Murray M'Gregor, Bart. to Mr. Secretary Spring Rice, dated Government House, Antigua, 30 December 1834.

IN my Letter of this date, the transcript of an Act is forwarded, with its summary, intituled, " An Act for regulating Special Contracts between Labourers and their Employers, and enforcing a strict observance of those Contracts."

Ever since the abolition of slavery, the demeanor of the labouring population in this Island has been in the highest degree creditable; and it is not to be wondered at, on so unusual an occasion, that experiments should be resorted to by them with the view of bettering their condition, and that of these, in consequence of their inexperience in their new element of freedom, many should turn out to be injudicious and ill-selected.

Love of novelty, indolence, caprice, repugnance to agriculture, from having been formerly constrained to engage in it, dissatisfaction with their employers, desire of gain unwisely excited by planters bidding against each other with offers of superior wages, have conspired to generate mutual want of confidence and mistrust between them, and in too many instances to encourage the former in unsettled habits, which it is highly desirable, by every legitimate means, to obliterate and remove.

In such a state of things, it is not perhaps very easy to legislate correctly; and I have been under the necessity of rejecting a Bill, recently presented by the Council and Assembly, " to ascertain more clearly the obligations of labourers in husbandry," &c., certain of its clauses, however well-intended, appearing to militate against the rightful privileges of the latter.

The duration of that now substituted, being limited to a year, and the absence of some legislative provision during crop time, threatening injury to the agriculturists generally, I am disposed to hope you will not see reason to object to it, as a temporary arrangement, until your sentiments can be conveniently communicated, so as best to reconcile the present diversity of opinion amongst the members of the local Legislature, and to indicate such remedial measures, for the common advantage of the landowners and peasantry, as to you may seem most fitting and appropriate.

COPY of a DESPATCH from the Earl of Aberdeen, to Governor Sir Evan J. Murray M'Gregor, Bart.

Sir, Downing-street, 28 February 1835.

I HAVE received your Despatches, dated the 30th of December, enclosing an Act passed by yourself, and the Council and Assembly of Antigua, for regulating special contracts between labourers and their employers, and enforcing a strict observance of such contracts.

This Act has been transmitted to His Majesty in Council, for His Majesty's decision. But adverting to the importance of the subject to which it relates, and to the necessity of the attention of the local Legislature being promptly recalled to it, I will not postpone until the completion of the requisite official forms, the communication which it becomes my duty to make to you on the various provisions of this law. I have thought this Act worthy of more than common attention, when regarded as a precedent which may not improperly be quoted and pursued in the other British West India Colonies, when the state of apprenticeship shall have reached its close. By the anticipation of that period, the Island of Antigua has earned for itself this, amongst other distinctions, that the enactments which may be framed there for the government of a society in which slavery has given place to unqualified freedom, will probably pass into a rural code for the rest of the Colonies embraced in the Slavery Abolition Act. They, therefore, possess a still higher interest than if they were destined to influence the condition of the emancipated population of Antigua alone.

First, then, I observe that the legal consequences are carefully defined of the special contracts which may be entered into between labourers in husbandry and their employers. Considering how much of the force of all the subsequent enactments depends upon the sense in which the term special contract shall be understood, it appears to me that it ought to have received some precise legislative definition. I presume the intention to be to point to the usual distinctions between those those express agreements which men make with each other by words written or spoken, and those which, from the nature of their conduct or mutual dealings, they are, by a legal fiction, supposed to enter into. If this conjecture be well founded, the question might and ought to have been placed beyond the reach of doubt. If by a special contract be meant, as the words thus interpreted would require, any direct engagement, though not reduced into writing, then, I think, the use of terms so comprehensive was plainly objectionable. Adverting to the relative condition of the contracting parties, the prevailing ignorance and want of foresight, and general poverty of the one, contrasted with the advantages of the other, I cannot think that compacts between them, to which so many legal consequences of the highest importance are attached, ought to be left in the uncertainty which will always exist, after a short lapse of time, as to the real effect of unrecorded words. Every "Special Contract," obligatory on a labourer in husbandry under this Act, ought to be drawn up and signed by the parties, and recorded in the office of the justice of the peace, whose presence is already required on such occasions; and in cases where either of the contracting parties may be unable to read, the justice should be required to add to his attestation of their signatures a declaration, subscribed by himself, to the effect that he had read over and explained to the labourer the contents and the effect of the agreement into which he was about to enter. It is superfluous to enlarge upon the importance of precautions of this nature, against abuses which might otherwise prove the fertile source of discontent.

Secondly: Adverting to the various provisions, of which it is the object to prevent or to punish a negligent performance by the labourers of the contracts for hiring and service into which they may enter, I make no objection to the general principle of visiting such defaults by a forfeiture of wages, for a greater length of time than that of the absence itself, or even by punishments involving some bodily suffering. However desirable it may be that society should be held together by sanctions of a more liberal character, yet in an employment of such vital importance to the general welfare, as is that of the growth and manufacture of the great staple commodities of the Island, it is necessary that workmen should give some better pledge than the mere liability to dismission, or to actions at law, for the faithful performance of the duties they have assumed towards their employers. There would otherwise arise a want of mutual confidence, destructive to any scheme of extensive improvement and expenditure, and a decline of agricultural and commercial industry, by which no class of persons would in reality suffer so much as those whose daily subsistence depends on their daily manual labour.

But while thus assenting to the general principle, I cannot concur in some of the details of these enactments. A whole day's wages of a labourer in husbandry are to be forfeited if he shall absent himself for "half or any smaller proportion of a day." Thus, according to plain and inevitable construction of the words, the offence of loitering for a minute might deprive a man of the maintenance of himself and his family for twenty-four hours, a punishment which in so extreme a case would be obviously unjust and prejudicial to the real interests of the employer as well as to that of his servant. Further: To the question, what cause of absence is, and what is not, reasonable, the law gives no specific answer; but if I correctly understand it, refers the decision in each successive case to the unfettered discretion of the justice of the peace before whom the complaint of an unreasonable absence may be preferred. It is in a spirit of the most entire respect for the gentlemen in the commission of the peace in Antigua, that I hesitate to acknowledge the propriety of committing so large a trust to them. Being generally selected from the principal proprietors or resident managers of estates in the Island, they have, or at least will be supposed to have, an indirect interest in the rigid enforcement of this law. The magistrate before whom penalties are to be recovered for an unreasonable absence to-day, may himself have to sue for similar penalties in the justice room of the present complainant to-morrow: suspicions of partiality, with however little foundation, must be expected to take root in the minds of those who are the objects of the alternate jurisdiction and complaint of the same persons. Indeed I do not find any direct prohibition against the exercise by an employer of his magisterial authority, for the conviction and punishment of his own servants, although such an abuse can scarcely be considered as impossible in a society in which the combinations of the characters of party and judge were so recently sanctioned by the law, the usages, and the public opinion of the entire community.

I fully admit that it is indispensable to confide to the judge an ample discretion to distinguish, as occasions arise, between reasonable and unreasonable apologies for absence from work. The attempt to draw out such distinctions beforehand with precise legislative definitions would be manifestly futile. But to obviate the rea lor suspected injustice incident to the possession and use of such a power, the best practicable security should be taken for the impartial exercise of it. Such a security I apprehend would be found, first in requiring that these forfeitures should be imposed, not by a single justice, but at a petty sessions; and secondly, by requiring that at every such sessions there should be present at least one magistrate, not being himself the employer of labourers under special contract in the same species of service.

Thirdly: I acquiesce in the necessity and propriety of denouncing against labourers in husbandry and manufactures, penalties affecting that class of persons only, in so far as such penalties are exigible in respect of actions, of which the criminality or danger wholly or chiefly result from the circumstance of such being the employment and mode of life of the offender. The law has therefore properly devised for the punishment of negligent and improper performance of work, endangering the employer's property by wilful negligence, or by the careless use of fire, the ill using of cattle, and the wantonly destroying or injuring an employer's property committed to the labourer's charge.

But under the same head, the crime of drunkenness is classed as an offence, the extreme punishment of which may be imprisonment with hard labour for three months. This, indeed, is the maximum. But not only is such a penalty quite out of proportion to any mischief which society at large can sustain from a single act of intoxication, and at variance with the prevailing tone of moral sentiment on the subject, but it is also a punishment which, if justly due in the case of labourers under special contracts, cannot be unmerited in other cases. The circumstance that a man has engaged himself to perform agricultural or manufacturing labour, does not render his drunkenness more injurious to society at large, than if he were devoted to any other species of industry, manual or intellectual.

The failure to provide according to his ability for his infant children is another crime for which the rural labourer under special contracts is to be liable to three months' imprisonment and hard labour on a summary conviction before a single magistrate. Without pausing to inquire whether this is a proper mode of legislation in reference to parents generally, it is enough for my present purpose to say that the neglect of infant children is not one of those offences of which the mischief consists in, or arises from, the circumstance, that the parent is a labourer in husbandry. The apology for subjecting that class of society to a peculiar penal code, from which all other classes are exempt, fails when applied to such a case as this. The immediate injury to this class may indeed be so slight as to be scarcely perceptible. But I must regard, as of no light moment, the general principle which enactments of this character involve. There is no danger connected with the transition from slavery to freedom demanding a more vigilant circumspection than that of the silent growth of a new code, depressing below the common level of society, in respect of civil rights and penal liabilities, persons who have been so long accustomed to regard themselves, and to be regarded by others as in a state of social inferiority and domestic and personal degradation. The moral influence of such distinctions, if revived and perpetuated in this new form, will be felt to a much greater extent, and more injuriously, than the direct operation of the law itself.

Fourthly: The Act contains some clauses, very properly framed, for the protection of the labourer against ill usage, or breach of contract on the part of his employer. Yet I am constrained to remark that there is in these provisions some want of equal justice. The forfeitures incurred by the labourer are invariably to accrue to his employer's benefit; but the forfeitures which may be recovered against the employer himself, are as invariably to be paid into the public Treasury. The rule should be the same in both cases. The labourer also is in every case to pay a larger sum for absenting himself, than the amount of the wages which he would have earned by attending. The employer, on the other hand can never be amerced in a greater sum than ten pounds currency, whatever may be the extent of the injury which his breach of contract may have inflicted upon the labourer. Either each party should be liable to make a precise indemnification for the injury inflicted on the other, or each party should, over and above that indemnity, be subject to some penal payment. The rule as it stands is inconsistent with itself, and is founded on no definite principle whatever.

I further observe that the Act contains no express declaration that those rules of the common law are neither revoked nor superseded, by which the servant might have have recovered the amount of the wages due to him, or might have enforced the performance of the contract by which the employer might have been punished for the ill usage of his servant. It must therefore remain at least doubtful whether the ancient remedies could be taken, and consequently whether more is not lost than gained by these enactments in the way of security for the employer's good conduct.

Fifthly: On account of its peculiar importance, I will here transcribe verbatim, from the 12th section of this law, the following enactment: "If any person shall knowingly employ any servant in husbandry who shall either be under contract to another person, OR retain the occupation of a house upon the estate of such other person, or if any person shall continue to employ a servant in husbandry so under contract to another person, OR so retaining the occupation of a house upon the estate of such other person, after receiving due notice of the relation in which such servant in husbandry stands towards such other person," the offender is to forfeit ten pounds. To so much of this enactment as forbids the hiring or employing a servant under contract to another employer, I have no objection. But the penalty against hiring or employing the occupant of a house on another man's estate, unless the occupation of such house should form the subject of a special contract, is a formidable abridgment of the new freedom and of the legal equality of the emancipated slaves. In your Despatch already quoted, I find a summary and a defence of this clause; but by some oversight you appear to have passed over in silence so much of it as relates to the restrictions imposed on tenantry. The omission is, however, supplied by an argumentative preamble to the enactments itself, which also it will be convenient to copy. It is as follows:—

"Whereas it is highly desirable that servants in husbandry should, as far as may be practicable, be associated in labour and located on the same estates; and it is also both impolitic and unjust towards their present employers, as well as injurious to themselves, that they should be allowed to be seduced by a temporary increase of wages, held out to them by any other proprietor, with a particular object to desert the estates to which they are attached, and where they enjoy the more solid advantage of permanent employment with a comfortable place of abode; be it therefore enacted," &c.

However important it may be, that the emancipated slaves of Antigua should continue to work as formerly, in compact bodies, and should continue to regard as their future homes, the estates on which they have hitherto been settled, it is of still higher moment that the rights so unreservedly granted to them should be maintained, and that no attempt should be made to re-establish any of the essential principles of the ancient slave code. But the effect of this law is to revive the authority of one of those maxims, which is in its operation the most directly opposed to personal freedom. In substance and in effect it requires the tenantry on every estate to labour in the service of the landlord, at a rate of wages to be fixed by himself, however high may be the offers which they may receive from other candidates for their services. The householder may indeed refuse to enter into a special contract with his landlord; but if so, he can serve no one else: he is also at liberty to change his place of abode. But by that measure he merely passes from one landholder to another, each of whom will in turn be entitled to prevent the labourer working for a stranger, and each of whom will place his own value upon the services which he himself may demand. The imposition of such a restraint upon the free exchange of a man's labour for the best wages which that labour can command, is alike at variance with justice to individuals, and with the real interests of society at large. But further, if such an obligation is to exist at all, it should at least be mutual. If a labourer may not work for any one except his landlord, the duty of finding for the labourer a constant maintenance, adequate in amount and kind, must be imposed on the landlord in turn. Effective securities must be taken, on the one hand, for the punctual delivery of these supplies; while on the other hand, securities not less stringent must be devised against the indolence of the labourer. In other words, the scheme of apprenticeship in force in the other Colonies under the Act of Parliament for a few years, must be incorporated, in principle at least, into the permanent law of Antigua; and the Legislature of that Island will thus be compelled to revert, for an indefinite time, to the very system which they repudiated when the establishment of it was proposed to them for a period of five years only. His Majesty cannot be advised to sanction so speedy an abandonment of the ground advisedly taken by the Legislature of Antigua in two successive enactments, in each of which the inutility of the apprenticeship and the substitution of a total and immediate Abolition of Slavery were so distinctly proclaimed, not only within the limits of that Island, but throughout all the British West Indies, and to the people of this kingdom. It was on account of the grant to the labourers in husbandry of that unrestricted freedom, to dispose of their labour to the best advantage, that His Majesty declared that adequate and satisfactory provision had been made for carrying into effect the views of Parliament, and that the Colonists of Antigua were entitled to their proportionate share in the Compensation Fund. For these reasons I can hold out no prospect that this Act will be allowed.

Sixthly: The enactment prescribing the means of recovering penalties is expressed in terms of great ambiguity. They are such as rather to raise a new question in each successive case, than to establish a fixed rule for the decision of any.

Seventhly: The definition of the word labourer is such as to embrace every free man in the Island, who earns his subsistence by the labour of his hands; for, under the terms mechanics and artisans, will be included such craftsmen as tailors, shoemakers, carpenters and wheelwrights. I apprehend that the reason of the law does not extend to cases of this nature, and that the free people of colour who were never in bondage will regard the novel disabilities imposed upon them by this statute with great and reasonable dissatisfaction.

Your own assent to this law appears to have been obtained the more readily, from the circumstance that it was passed only for a year. I cannot regard that fact as of much importance. The recognition of the principles of this statute, for however short a period, may be as binding hereafter, as though the operation of it were to continue for an indefinite length of time.

You also appear to have been much impressed by the necessity of preventing the loss of the present crop; but as that is a consideration which will resume its force with each successive harvest, the value of it must be estimated, not upon occasional, but on permanent grounds.

You will further remark, that ever since the Abolition of Slavery, the demeanor of the labouring population has been in the highest degree creditable; but you were induced to accept the Bill tendered to you from various reasons, amongst which you enumerate the injudicious experiments resorted to by the emancipated population, with a view of bettering their condition, and the desire of gain unwisely excited by planters bidding against each other, with offers of superior wages. Not doubting the existence of the evils which you have described as having directly followed upon a change, so complete and immediate as that which occurred in the Island of Antigua, and fully prepared as I am to expect that some time must elapse and some trouble be incurred, before society can quietly settle down into a system so new and untried, I yet must think that no better elements of social prosperity could be desired or supposed, than the anxious wish on the part of the labourers, on the one hand, to better their condition, and the eager competition on the part of employers, on the other hand, for their services. To interfere with the natural and beneficial working of these incentives to industry would be evidently imprudent. It would be to recur to a system to which, as often as the experiment has been repeated, the concurrent testimony and the mature experience of all countries has been opposed.

The remarks which I have made will prepare you to receive an Order from His Majesty in Council, disallowing this Act. To many of its provisions, as has already been shown, no objection is entertained by His Majesty's official advisers. If they shall be incorporated in a new law, from which the objectionable enactments shall be excluded, and in which the omissions I have pointed out shall be satisfactorily supplied, you will give your assent to any Bill of that nature which may be tendered to you.

In the belief that certain springs of human action, however conducive in the ordinary course of events to social prosperity, might yet beneficially admit of temporary regulation, when thrown by an unprecedented occurrence into sudden operation, and that the admission under peculiar circumstances of an imperfect statute of short continuance, would not render its principles indefinitely binding; the executive assented to an enactment designed to protect, during one year, the engagements of voluntarily contracting parties, and intituled, "An Act for regulating special Contracts between Labourers and their Employers, and enforcing a strict observance of such Contracts."

But the inaccuracy of this impression being exhibited in the Despatch, of which a transcript is enclosed, the Governor will now participate with pleasure in the adoption of such measures, founded upon the observations of the Earl of Aberdeen, as the two Houses of Legislature, whom it has appeared desirable to convene on the occasion, may deem appropriate in consequence of the approaching disallowance of the Contract Act.

Extract from an ORDER in COUNCIL, dated the 16th March 1808.

1st. IN regard to such male negroes as from infirmity or age are not fit for military or naval service, or such as shall be required or taken for the same as aforesaid, and also in regard to female negroes, the collector or chief officer of the customs for the time being is to use the earliest and utmost endeavour to bind them as apprentices or indented servants to prudent and humane masters or mistresses, either in the same or other Colonies, to learn such trades, handicrafts or employments as they seem from their bodily or other qualities most likely to be fit for, and to gain their livelihood most comfortably by, after their terms of apprenticeship or servitude shall expire.

2d. In respect to female negroes for whom there is in general no employment in the West Indies but in domestic services or the labours of agriculture, the collector or chief officer of the customs for the time being is to take especial care that they are not to be employed in the latter upon any account, and he is hereby further directed to bind them apprentices only to such masters and mistresses as are of good repute for humanity to their domestic slaves, and for such terms or periods only as may be sufficient for their acquiring the knowledge of their business as servants in whatever domestic capacity the master or mistress may assign them to, with such addition thereto as may reasonably suffice to recompense him or her for the care of their instruction and the charge of their support in the meantime; relation being herein had to the age and strength of every such female apprentice.

Enclosure in No. 173.

EXTRACT of a LETTER from Henry Loving, Esq., Superintendent of Police, to Sir E. J. Murray M'Gregor, dated Police Office, Head Quarters, St. John's, 31 January 1835.

I HAVE the honour to lay before your Excellency the information which I have derived by personal inquiry and observation regarding the internal state of affairs in the Island during the month ending this day.

In my last Report for December, I stated that the approaching sugar crop would form a new connexion between master and servant, and give an opportunity to both of establishing such pecuniary arrangements as might probably raise a superstructure of fixed wages for every succeeding crop.

Your Excellency will recollect that I adverted, in former monthly Reports, to the want of unanimity among the proprietary body, as one of the evils which kept alive a spirit of jealousy and discontent among the labouring population. The same complaint exists at this moment, and though I am far from advocating the necessity or propriety of any law to establish a general rate of wages, yet I am convinced that there ought to be a private rule rule for the mutual benefit of all. It may be objected that some estates are large, some small, some labouring under mortgages, some partially or altogether free from debt. But this does not alter the case one jot or tittle. In a comparative ratio, they are all equally interested in taking off the present and establishing the next crop with celerity; and neither logic nor experience can controvert the fact, that both large and small, incumbered and unincumbered, stand upon the same footing in this respect.

Many planters are now preparing to begin crop, but those who have begun are as various in their plans as may possibly be conceived. Some are for allowing the people 9*d.* per day for the adults and 6*d.* for the younger folks for every hogshead of sugar manufactured in one day. Some for allowing 1*s.* 6*d.* to the mill-gang, and 1*s.* 1½*d.* to the cane cutters per day, without reference to the rate per hogshead. Some for allowing 1*s.* 4½*d.* to the large and 1*s.* to the small gangs per day, and 3*d.* more if they manufacture two and a half hogsheads per day. Some for allowing the former wages of 1*s.* to the great gang and 9*d.* to the weeders, and a gratuity of one pint of meal, two herrings and beverage. Some for allowing the wages last stated, with the addition of 1½*d.* for working at breakfast-time, and 3*d.* for dinner-time during the crop; and in fact it would take me more time than I could devote to the collection of the various plans that are in existence.

This leads to inquiry on the part of the labourers, and being a keen calculating class of people, they naturally feel an appetite for that plan which is most advantageous to themselves. Upon this diversity of system then it is that the crop is progressing both with uncommon sluggishness, and much disagreement and halting between two opinions on several plantations. I have no doubt that matters will assume a more favourable turn, though I am constrained to give it as my opinion, that should this be otherwise, it will require three or four weeks more than usual to take in the harvest. Those estates which formerly made in good weather three and four hogsheads per day are now unable to make more than two, and I apprehend that they will seldom exceed two and a half on an average.

Where the rate of 9*d.* per hogshead has been accepted, the labour has been increased in proportion, so as to keep pace with the expectation of a large reward. But the mind of the negro has been so considerably altered since his elevation to freedom, that this degree of exertion, it is quite probable, will last but for a season, for after a month of fortunate gains in studious toil, relaxation will be sighed for, a desire for occasional rest will triumph over money, and the work will fall off. This has been the case since the 1st of August, when labour was not so great as at this moment, and I am persuaded that nothing can prevent a recurrence of the same circumstance to a certain extent. A plea of sickness will occur—whether real or feigned it must be allowed, and these periodical drawbacks will amount to much in the end.

The estates that are more remote from the towns will suffer less than others in this respect, because the population are less vicious and more stationary. To sum up the whole, I am to remark, that free labour differs from slave labour in this essential point, that the emancipated will migrate where and when they please, as often as their interest or a desire for recreation leads them. It was to check this abuse of time in the present crop that the Act for establishing contracts between master and servant was passed on the 29th of last month. It was both necessary and opportune, because there could be no doubt, from the experience of past months, that the planters would continue to entice away each other's labourers by increased bounties.

The idea of importing English labourers into this Island has been a favourite topic with some persons; but it is absolute delusion to suppose that any man from the United Kingdom can be put alongside of one of our field people for 12 hours under a burning sun with any hope of his prolonged existence. The most experienced planters must know that the training for plantation work requires to be gradual; the grass gang in childhood, the weeding gang in riper years, and the great gang at maturity, ere the constitutional powers can withstand the effects of climate. It is not many years since that the experiment of purchasing townspeople to dig cane-holes was tried by an Irish landholder in this Island; and notwithstanding they were native blacks, disease speedily crept in among them. Some that I had known in robust health, became enervated and decrepid. Death completed the work, and but few of the original number were effective on the 1st of August last. I should not think that the importation of white ploughmen is intended, because that scheme was carried into effect some years ago by several planters; and the measure not being followed up is a proof that their services could be dispensed with after the slaves had acquired the art and saved this extraordinary expense to the master.

The progress of events has not been marked by any unusual disrespect of the laws on the part of the labouring classes: petty thefts on the full grown canes and potatoes are frequent; but this may be ascribed to a rule among those people during their servitude, "that the taking of their masters' crop was no theft, so long as they planted it." Summary punishments will awaken their feelings to the dissimilarity of connexion between their former and present condition, and operate for the future as a check to this principle.

The whole Island is in a state of ordinary tranquillity. The trifling ebullition of discontent on some plantations on the score of wages may be considered as purely domestic, and will blow over in a week or two. The police force, small as it is, continues to be efficient, and the prevalence of vice in our streets has been effectually put down by their firmness and activity.

Sir, Colonial Office, 16 March 1835.

I HAVE to acknowledge the receipt of your Despatch of the 3d February, enclosing report of the superintendent of police upon the state of the liberated classes in the Island of Antigua on the 31st January last.

Although differences are reported in that report as interfering with the harvest, and likely to delay its completion, yet the rights of the negro to carry his labour to the best market cannot be denied, and, on the other hand, the proprietors as a body are neither so large nor so incompact as to be unable to protect their own interests without resorting to compulsory enactments at variance with the freedom of commerce.

It affords me much satisfaction to observe that the police force is reported to be in a state of efficiency.

Police Office, Head Quarters, St. John's,

Sir, 28th February 1835.

I HAVE the honour to lay before your Excellency a short Report connected with passing events in this Island during the present month.

The sugar crop has been generally commenced, but the average quantum of labour has not been such as to afford the planters satisfaction under all the circumstances of the country, and with due allowance for the altered condition of society. There has been no fixed standard of wages by private agreement among the planters, but still they have severally offered to the labourers such terms as were consistent with the pecuniary means at their command, and such also as, in my opinion, ought to have been cheerfully acceded to, in a great majority of cases, but in others the people were less to blame, on account of the scale of wages being so intricate as to be beyond the comprehension of persons not acquainted with arithmetical calculation. Alterations I am informed have been made from time to time to bring the weaker party into terms that were more acceptable and better understood.

I am certain that the taking off this crop will give the contracting parties the advantage of more amicable feelings on future similar occasions. It is impossible that the planter can spend less hereafter than they do at present in the manufacture of sugar, with any hope of benefit to themselves; and the labourer will be satisfied, at the end of the bargain, that they have had no reasonable or just cause of complaint.

The character of slavery had impressed on the minds of its victims a certain degree of low cunning, and a large share of distrust on the score of undue advantage being taken of their weakness and comparative ignorance, which it will take many years to overcome, and even then it will never be altogether extracted from the present generation of adults, who have grown up with the old colonial system.

Hence their fluctuating opinion and breaches of contract during the last and present month. On many estates they have hardly made a contract before they attempted to abrogate it, while on others they have lingered at the work for a short time, till an open rupture has been the result. In several instances under my own knowledge (and I am told they are common) they flatly deny before the magistrates the existence of any contract. But the truth has invariably come out, that certain propositions being made to them in the manner prescribed by law, they silently (though perhaps reluctantly) retire, perform the work allotted them, and receive the proffered wages. The fact being thus established upon the evidence of two persons, the magistrate's course is clear and unequivocal. Much, however, has been done by the magistracy of St. John's to reconcile these conflicting parties, and they have been successful in some instances.

The crop, I am of opinion, would never have been proceeded with so far as it has but for the enactment of the Labourer's Contract Act; and though the whole of the plantations have not succeeded in getting their people to agree to contracts, yet the possession of houses by the dissenting labourers has had the salutary effect of preventing by law their services from being accepted elsewhere; and they are thus reduced to the necessity of remaining where they are, and faring no better than those who have become contractors.

The minds of the labouring people were staggered at the provisions of this new law, but they are now mostly convinced of its tendency, either by magisterial decisions or by due explanations abroad, and it may reasonably be inferred that all collision will cease as they become familiarised to the present regulations. The sugar crop has fallen far short of the expectations which were entertained three months ago, and certainly much behind that of last year; but I am of opinion, as I hinted in my last Report, that the time which will be occupied in reaping the present, will not be less than was taken to complete the former; and this must be ascribed to the difference between slave and free labour per diem.

Whether the same quantity of plant canes will be put in this year as there was last year, is another question; but, from all that I can learn, it does not appear that there will be any diminution in the aggregate, in consequence of the job-work and increased pay given to the labourers at the critical moment when the planters discovered that there was no hope of opening the land for the next crop but by an additional pecuniary stimulus.

The calendar for the session of next month is considerably heavier than it has been at both the former sessions since the first of August last. The capital cases in this Court would appear at the first view as largely increased, compared with their extent before the abolition of slavery in this Island; but a moment's reflection will discover that cases which were formerly dealt with in the slave court are all crowded into the jurisdiction of our tribunal for the trial of free men; and larcenies upon plantations, which under the old system would have been dealt with by domestic chatisement, are likewise thrown into this new channel.

Time, patience, judicious laws, and able, unbiassed magistrates, are the points to which the country must look for happiness under Divine Providence, and I feel persuaded that she will yet have to congratulate herself upon her great liberality in the cause of feedom.

The police force under my command have an arduous duty to perform, and my personal exertions are unceasing to supply the lack of numbers by zealous activity on the part of every member thereof.

I have the honour to be, Sir,
Your Excellency's most obedient, humble servant,

Sir, 1st June 1835.

THE progressively healthful state of affairs in this Island leaves me but little to remark upon in this Report for the month of May; and I am happy to have learnt, from the best authority, that some gentlemen of rank possessing estates in this country, who, from a want of due patience, had recently predicted the ruin of the landed interest, are now of a different opinion. Opinions, however, ought to be received with some caution where they are not general, general, and especially when they relate to any subject which affects the well-being of a whole community. That such opinions were never general, and, in fact, rather limited, at any period since the first of August 1834, I can aver, from the conversations which I have had with planters of every rank, and at all events it would have been better to have withheld any sentiments of despondency till the period should have arrived when a fair estimate could be made of the operations of free labour. Hasty promulgations of impending evil are, moreover, calculated to wound the credit of the Island abroad, and to forfeit that confidence which is so necessary to be maintained between the people of England and the planters of the West Indies.

Capital offences against the laws have decreased considerably since the last quarterly sessions, there being but four persons to be arraigned in the present month. Petit larcenies have been more numerous since that period, and this I attribute, as it regards the rural population, to the circumstance of there being several disaffected characters about the country who have done little or no work since their emancipation; and on the part of the town's people by reason of their prevailing and unhappy fondness for dress.

The force under my command are in the active and zealous performance of every duty which may tend to the public good, and in this I am happy to say they are powerfully aided by the magistracy and other functionaries.

Enclosure in No. 179. Enclosure in No. 179.

Sir, Montserrat, 24 December 1833.

IT affords me much satisfaction to be enabled to inform your Excellency that I had an opportunity on Thursday last of submitting to the serious consideration of both Houses of the Legislature (by message) the important circular Despatch from the Right honourable the Secretary of State for the Colonies, with a printed form, intended in some measure as a model for their guidance in the formation of the Colonial Bills to be passed, in accordance with the spirit of the Act of Parliament for the Abolition of Slavery.

I am pleased to inform your Excellency that that Act has been received by them with that respectful attention due to His Majesty and the Imperial Parliament, on a Bill of such vital importance not only to the Colonies, but to the Empire at large. They have also duly appreciated the very conciliatory Letter of Mr. Secretary Stanley, as also that of your Excellency for your kind good wishes in the transmission of it.

I do most sincerely hope and trust that, through their wisdom, their patriotism, and their love of their country, they may be enabled, difficult as the task is, to surmount them all, and make such wholesome enactments as may (with the aid of His Majesty's Government) ensure to the inhabitants of this ancient and loyal Island that happiness and prosperity they formerly enjoyed.

I have, &c.

Sir, Downing-street, 6 June 1834.

I HAVE to acknowledge the receipt of your Despatch of the 6th of April last, transmitting the Bill passed by the Legislature of Montserrat, for the Abolition of Slavery; and I have to inform you, that, in consequence of this Bill not having received your assent, or that of the President of Montserrat, His Majesty is precluded from pronouncing any opinion upon it. It is a subject of considerable regret to me that this Bill should have been sent home in such a form; but in order to obviate this serious inconvenience which would result to the Island by the Bill not coming into operation on the 1st August next, I have received The King's command to inform you, that if the House of Assembly of Montserrat be still in Session, and the usages of the Colony permit it, the requisite assent should be given by the officer administering the government. If, on the other hand, the Session shall have been closed, I am to desire that immediate steps may be taken to convene the Legislature, who must be invited to re-enact the Bill, to which, when so re-enacted, the President Hamilton will give his assent.

EXTRACT of a DESPATCH from Governor Sir E. J. Murray M'Gregor, Bart., to Mr. Secretary Spring Rice, dated Nevis, 1 August 1834.

30th July 1834.

HIS Majesty's ship Belvedera quitted Tortola on the morning of the 25th, and I reached Montserrat on the 29th ultimo. My communications from the Council, the Assembly, and the Executive, will be found detailed in the Enclosures, Nos. 1, 2 and 3, relating to the latter Island, where no design had been indicated by the negroes of opposing the system of apprenticeship, and they were, on the contrary, said to comport themselves with perfect propriety and decorum.

The absence of the special magistrate, intended to officiate in that Colony, is adverted to in the address from the Assembly.

MONTSERRAT.

Mr. President and Gentlemen of the Council,
Mr. Speaker and Gentlemen of the Assembly,

ON repairing to Montserrat it is in the highest degree acceptable to me to be assured of the observance of that orderly conduct which has happily prevailed amongst the working population since the formation of the Leeward Island Government.

As their sincere friend I cherish a heartfelt hope that by a faithful and punctual discharge of the duties about to devolve on them for four or six crops, according to their respective classes, during the prescribed period of apprenticeship, the negroes of this Colony will prove themselves justly sensible of the solid advantages of food, medical care and lodging to be provided for them while in this state of gradual preparation for eventual independence by their several employers, and by thus meriting the great boon of freedom, so soon to be bestowed upon them, under the immediate auspices of the King, prudently to insure a continuance of His Majesty's most gracious protection.

Mr. Speaker, and Gentlemen of the Assembly,

When the Colony of Montserrat shall have recovered from the injurious consequences inseparably connected with the long agitation of a question of such vital importance as that now to be set at rest, I confidently trust the expenditure attendant on the approaching change in the relations of society will be fully repaid by the increasing prosperity of all orders of the community.

Mr. President and Gentlemen of the Council,
Mr. Speaker and Gentlemen of the Assembly,

In His Majesty's proclamation of the 4th of September last, ordaining the abolition of slavery, and the substitution for a limited term, under certain conditions of apprenticeship, our Sovereign Lord The King was pleased to declare "his settled purpose and resolve, by all the powers vested in him, to enforce due obedience to the laws, and to prevent, and if necessary, to repress and punish all contraventions of the said laws."

It is incumbent on me, therefore, in addressing your Honourable Board and House, publicly to state, that while all well-behaved and peaceable inhabitants may depend on the constant support of the executive, the civil authorities and the commanding officers of the King's naval and military forces, in pursuance of the royal commands, are amply prepared to suppress every indication of a lawless or rebellious spirit, proceeding from evil-disposed persons, and effectually to maintain the internal order and tranquillity of these valuable islands.

To His Excellency Sir E. J. Murray M'Gregor, Bart. &c. &c. &c.

May it please your Excellency,

WE, His Majesty's dutiful and loyal subjects, the Members of His Majesty's Council for the Island of Montserrat, beg leave to return your Excellency our thanks for the speech that you have this day been pleased to address to both Houses of the Legislature.

We

We rejoice to find your Excellency approves of the conduct of the labouring classes in this Island; and we hope that the same class of people will evince themselves justly sensible of the solid advantages so benignantly bestowed upon them by His gracious Majesty under the Imperial Act of Parliament.

We feel grateful to our most gracious Sovereign for his proclamation of the 4th of September, in which he declares his settled purpose and determination, by all the powers vested in him, to enforce due obedience to the laws, and to prevent, and, if necessary, to repress and punish all contraventions of the said laws.

We are also thankful to your Excellency for your communication that by His Majesty's command the civil, military and naval forces are amply prepared to suppress every indication of a lawless or rebellious spirit, proceeding from evil-disposed persons, and to support the well-behaved and peaceable inhabitants of this Island.

In conclusion, permit us, Sir, to express our sincere regret that your Excellency has lately been suffering from ill health, and that the very arduous and important duties which your Excellency has to attend to in the sister Colonies at this momentous period, will unavoidably deprive us of a longer visit from you, as it would at all times afford us, both individually and collectively, the greatest gratification to show your Excellency every possible attention in our power.

To His Excellency Sir Evan J. Murray M'Gregor, Bart., &c. &c. &c.

May it please your Excellency,

We, His Majesty's dutiful and loyal subjects, the Speaker and Assembly of this Island, in replying to your Excellency's address, avail ourselves of the opportunity of expressing how highly we appreciate your very opportune visit to this part of your Excellency's government; and whilst we return our best thanks to your Excellency for your address of this day, we beg leave to express a hope that the state of tranquillity and order which you are pleased to declare so happily exists, may continue to prevail. But we deeply lament the absence of the stipendiary magistrate appointed by His Majesty's Government, to fulfil the important functions attached to that office by the existing law. We therefore confidently rely upon your Excellency's wisdom to adopt such measures as shall appear most appropriate to obviate the evils that this unfortunate circumstance may occasion.

We no less cherish a heartfelt hope than your Excellency, that the respective classes of apprentices, by meriting the great boon of freedom so soon to be bestowed upon them under the immediate auspices of His Majesty, will ensure a continuance of His Majesty's most gracious protection; and we feel no hesitation in assuring your Excellency that our united exertions will be exercised in making their state comfortable and happy.

We unfeignedly thank your Excellency for your public declaration of protection, that while all well-behaved and peaceable inhabitants may depend on the constant support of the executive, the civil authorities, and the commanding officers of the King's naval and military forces, in pursuance of the royal commands, are amply prepared to suppress every indication of a lawless or rebellious spirit, we heartily deprecate the necessity of such interposition, but rely with confidence on its timely exertion if called for.

ALTHOUGH my Despatch of the 15th instant contains a Letter from the President, under date the 13th August, announcing the existence of tranquillity in Montserrat, I deem it right to convey to you the extract of a previous Report from his Honour, received on my arrival here, explanatory of the means which it had been found requisite to adopt in order to enforce it in that Colony.

EXTRACT of a LETTER from the President of Montserrat, to Sir Evan J. Murray M'Gregor, Bart. dated 7 August 1834.

THE day before Captain Grame's arrival I ordered out a detachment of the 36th regiment, with a party of militia, under the command of Captain De Lacy, who marched at three o'clock in the morning, and surrounded the negro houses on one of the disaffected estates, and apprehended several prisoners; this had the desired effect of creating a considerable sensation on the minds of the labouring classes generally.

As Captain De Lacy was in orders to advance with a considerable force under his command, I thought it highly advisable and a compliment due to such a distinguished officer, to promote him to the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel in the militia; as also Francis Polhill, esq. late major in His Majesty's service, to be an acting aide-de-camp to myself, which I trust will meet with your approbation; the latter gentleman also officiated as town-major.

I had, at the instance of Captain Grame, all the prisoners brought up, who on being addressed and admonished by him, expressed their deep contrition for their conduct; and at his intercession on their behalf, I granted them a general pardon, proclaiming at same time an amnesty to apprentices who returned to their duty.

I am highly gratified in reporting to your Excellency the steady and meritorious good conduct of the militia, throughout the period they were on service, which called forth my thanks in general orders to the staff, the officers, non-commissioned officers and privates of the Montserrat regiment.

Under the foregoing circumstances I thought myself, with the advice of the Privy Council, justified in discharging the alarm, and enable Captain Grame to enter upon the duties of his office.

COPY of a DESPATCH from the Earl of Aberdeen to Governor Sir E. J. Murray M'Gregor, Bart.

Sir, Downing-street, 15 January 1835.

I HAVE to acquaint you that, in the first Council which may be holden by His Majesty, an order will be made, leaving to its operation an Act passed by the President, Council and Assembly of Montserrat, in the month of July last, for the Abolition of Slavery in that Island.

The Act is a mere transcript of the first twenty-two clauses of the British Statute, 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 73; of course, therefore, the law is left precisely where it stood before, and in that sense the Act may be said to be without any practical effect whatever; yet, considering this Statute as a deliberate acceptance of the measures adopted by Parliament, and adverting to the beneficial effect which it may possibly have on the negroes, by exhibiting to them the local Legislature as the immediate authors of their freedom, I cannot regard this law as unimportant.

It is to be observed, however, that the transfer of these clauses from the Imperial to the Colonial Statute Book has not been very skilfully made. There are several clerical errors, which perhaps do not ingeniously affect the sense, and the words taken from the 4th section of the Act of Parliament have changed their meaning with their change of position. The copy becomes substantially inaccurate by being accurate to the letter. Under the Act of Parliament, no person of the age of 12 years, or upwards, could be included in the class of prædial labourers, unless he had been habitually employed in agriculture, or in the manufacture of colonial produce, for at least twelve months preceding the date of this Act, that is, unless he had been habitually so employed as early as the 28th of August 1832. The identical words occurring in the Colonial Statute carry back only to the 30th of July 1833, the period from which the habit of prædial labour must have had its commencement. Now, this is a material distinction. In July 1833, the proceedings of the British Parliament, and their then inevitable issue, were perfectly known throughout the Colonies, and persons anticipating from the approaching change a formidable reduction in the amount of agricultural labour, may at that time have yielded to the temptation of sending domestics into the field, in order to recruit their their gangs; but at the time fixed by Parliament, namely, the 28th of August 1832, there was no definite reason to expect the Abolition of Slavery, and consequently the temptation to which I have referred cannot at that time be supposed to have been felt. MONTSERRAT.

It will, therefore, be convenient that the Legislature of Montserrat should revise this Act, for the correction of the errors to which I have adverted.

I do not find that any Act has hitherto been received from Montserrat at this department, fulfilling the conditions which Parliament has required, to entitle the proprietors in the Colony to a share in the Compensation Fund. The law for the government of apprentices, which was received here, not having been assented to, on His Majesty's behalf, either by yourself or by the President of the Island, could not be submitted to His Majesty in Council for His Majesty's confirmation. The early approach, as I trust, of the period for the distribution of that fund, renders it peculiarly important that the attention of the local Legislature should be called to this oversight.

My Lord, Government House, Antigua, 18 March 1835.

The accompanying documents contain the observations of Mr. President Hamilton, assisted by the members of His Majesty's Council in Montserrat, on the subject of the circular Despatch from the Right honourable Thomas Spring Rice, of the 30th September 1834, relative to the alterations in the system of cultivating lands, &c. likely to be effected in the Colonies, in consequence of the Abolition of Slavery.

Enclosure in No. 186.

Sir, Montserrat, 5 January 1835.

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your circular Letter of the 30th September, and in compliance with the directions therein contained, I beg leave to submit the following answers to the queries submitted.

To the 1st, the present state of productive industry in this Island is, at this moment, applied to the manufacture of sugar, rum and molasses, our staple exports; our articles of consumption consist of potatoes, yams and cassada; added to this, the rising of live stock is carried on to the same extent. The negro population owning a large number of goats, sheep and hogs.

To the 2d, the ill effects of the change which the abolition of slavery may produce, is already severely felt by the proprietors of estates, and proves incontestably, that the deterioration of the crops, and consequent embarrassment of many proprietors, who, it is greatly feared, must, under the present system, be obliged to abandon their properties, will be mainly attributable to this extraordinary change.

3d. It is well known that laziness and indolence are the prominent characteristics of the negro. As long as he has wherewith to satisfy his appetite, he will not willingly work, he must be driven to it; and this, coupled with the want of pecuniary means, will be the great obstacle which may in future impede the powers of production.

4th. The only remedy, therefore, under those circumstances, as it appears to me, will be in placing under cultivation, by free labour, those large tracts of arable and wood lands now lying waste at the north and south divisions of this Island, and which are well calculated for the growth of coffee, cotton, indigo, tobacco, corn and ginger, and pulse of all kind. To accomplish this great good, pecuniary means are of course required, and without the generous and liberal assistance of His Majesty's Government for that purpose, this very desirable object cannot be accomplished.

The southern parts of this Colony, having also a western aspect, with a soil similar to that of Madeira, is well calculated for the cultivation of the grape vine. There are also many situations in the interior, where potteries may be established, and bricks and tiles manufactured with success.

The northern parts of this Island will also answer well, and afford an ample field for grazing farms, in raising cattle, sheep, hogs, &c.

I have, &c.

The Right hon. the Secretary of State for the Colonial Department.

(signed) H. Hamilton, President, administering the government.

MONTSERRAT.

Sir, Government House, Antigua, 16 February 1835.

In your honour's answer to the Right honourable the Colonial Secretary of State's circular of the 30th of September, a copy of which is forwarded with your Letter to my address of the 10th instant, it is stated, that the ill effects of the change which the abolition may produce, is already severely felt by the proprietors of estates, and proves incontestably that the deterioration of the crops, and consequent embarrassment of many proprietors, who, it is greatly feared, must, under the present system, be obliged to abandon their properties, will be mainly attributable to this extraordinary change.

I request to be informed whether these observations are intended to apply to the effects of the abolition, in its general result of substituting freedom in the room of slavery, or to be confined to its operation in the intermediate stage of apprenticeship as now existing in Montserrat, an inquiry, which I am induced to make in consequence of the favourable prospect presented in this Island, under the opposite plan of at once emancipating the negro population.

I have, &c.

To his Honour the President of Montserrat, &c. &c. &c.

(signed) E. J. Murray M'Gregor, Governor.

Sir, Montserrat, 7March 1835.

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Excellency's Letter of the 16th ultimo, relative to my answer to the Colonial Secretary of State's circular Despatch of the 30th September last, in which your Excellency requires an explanation of the following paragraph in that Despatch:—"The ill effects of the change which the abolition may produce, is already severely felt by the proprietors of estates, and proves incontestably that the deterioration of the crops, and consequent embarrassment of many proprietors, who, it is generally feared, must, under the present system, be obliged to abandon their properties, will be mainly attributable to this extraordinary change."

I beg to inform your Excellency that these observations are intended to apply to the effects of the abolition, in its general result, by the substitution of apprenticeship, as far as they had been manifested, to the date of my Despatch.

The excitement which prevailed in this Island on the introduction of the present system, and the passive resistance of the negro population to it, are well known to your Excellency.

To this cause (combined with subsequent indolence and dissatisfaction), may be attributed, in a great degree, the reduction of the present crop. The limited time allowed by the Imperial Act for the culture of estates, the additional taxation requisite to insure its future success, and the diminished resources of the proprietors, have further tended to their embarrassment. These remarks are of general application.

The class, however, more especially alluded to in that Despatch, comprises,—First, Those proprietors possessed of small unproductive and encumbered estates, who will derive no benefit from the compensation money; and, secondly, Those who hire negroes as task gangs to the proprietors of large estates, to assist in their cultivation. Persons of this class could not, without a large expenditure of capital, be able to clear and plant their estates, and erect the necessary buildings for the manufacture of sugar, or any other staple commodity of export.

I deem it requisite to state to your Excellency, that the Despatch in question was framed with the advice and assistance of the members of His Majesty's Council, who have more experience on the subject of its inquiry than my official duties have allowed me to acquire.

As the period approaches for carrying into effect the intentions of Parliament, in regard to the distribution of the compensation money awarded to the Colonies under the Slavery Abolition Act, I am induced, with a view to guard against any inconvenience which might arise from delay, to advert to the Despatch which was addressed to you by my predecessor on the 15th January last, relative to the revision of the Act passed by the Legislature of Montserrat for the Abolition of Slavery in that Island, and pointing out that no Act had been received from Montserrat, fulfilling the conditions which Parliament has required to entitle the proprietors in a Colony to a share in the Compensation Fund.

Should no steps have been taken for remedying this omission before the receipt of this Despatch, you will lose no time in calling the attention of the Legislature of Montserrat to the subject, acquainting them that until they shall comply with the requisitions contained in Lord Aberdeen's Despatch, they will not be entitled to a participation in the fund.

COPY of a DESPATCH from Lieutenant-governor Nixon to Mr. Secretary Stanley.

Sir, Government House, St. Christopher, 2 August 1833.

ST. CHRISTOPHER.
No. 188.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 13th June, enclosing me the copy of your circular Despatch to all the Governors in the West Indies, also the Resolutions of the House of Commons of the 12th of June, on the subject of the measures proposed to be adopted for the immediate abolition of slavery.

I lost no time in laying the same before the Legislatures of this Island, Nevis and Tortola, and I herewith enclose you the replies from the Board of Council and House of Assembly of St. Christopher. Nos. 1 & 2.

On the 29th ult. I received your letter of the 26th June and the Resolutions of the House of Lords, which I likewise submitted to the Legislatures of the before-named Islands. The answers from the President and Speaker of St. Kitt's are herewith transmitted to you. Nos. 3 & 4.

As you express your anxiety to receive my report of the disposition with which those Resolutions are received in this Colony, I have the honour in this early stage of the business to lay before you all that I can as yet learn on the subject.

As relates to carrying into execution the plan for the extinction of negro slavery, I am of opinion that few proprietors of slaves in this Colony will violently oppose that measure, though few appear to approve of it. They are in general more reconciled to emancipation as compensation is to be given to them for their slaves; but I do not hear of any proprietor being satisfied with the probabled portion of that compensation.

Within the last few days I made a tour of this Island, visited several estates, and conversed with many of the slaves: they are almost unanimously very averse to the idea of being apprenticed, generally disappointed and discontented at not getting unconditional and immediate emancipation, though others object to being freed at all.

Upon the whole, they are orderly and submissive, and seem to be very happy, are well treated throughout the Island; and though on some estates there has been a disposition manifested by the gangs to decline working, by reason of their disappointment in not getting their freedom, which they fully expected by the packet, at that time just arrived, yet by good management they were brought back to their duty without coercion. It is impossible to foresee what mischief they may attempt when they are to be apprenticed, as they have so decided an abhorrence to that expedient; but I have made every arrangement within the limits of my means to counteract any insubordinate act they might by possibility endeavour to commit.

I have no reason to anticipate any opposition from the Council; on the contrary, I have hopes that they will assist the views of His Majesty's Government when the question is brought before them in a more matured stage. As yet they have not discussed the question at the Board, being unable to predict what may be the ulterior measures and decision of the British Parliament. I have not such confidence in the Assembly. They have been employed in discussing, both in and out of doors, the merits of the address and petition of the Members of the Council and General Assembly of Barbadoes to the Houses of Lords and Commons, dated the 6th July 1833, which I understand has been sent to all the Colonies having Legislatures, with a view to be adopted by them; and I am led to believe that they are resolved here to follow the example of the Barbadians.

I beg to enclose you a copy of a letter which I received from the Speaker of the House of Assembly. It is not in accordance with the resolution of a meeting of the inhabitants of this Colony that took place here on the 22d No. 5.

ST. CHRISTOPHER.

April last, of which he was chairman. A newspaper containing their proceedings I had the honour of enclosing to Lord Goderich on the 24th of the same month.

It may not be out of place here to report to you, that the Assembly of this Island suffered the Police Act to expire on the 10th December 1831, and that from that period to the present there has been no description of police whatever in the Island. The militia are so badly provided, that in the event of their being called out, they have not a set of accoutrements for service, or any means of carrying ammunition, nor have I the means of providing them; so that the protection of the Island is entirely dependent on the troops of the line. I have called the attention of the Legislature to this circumstance, but the Assembly have taken no steps to remedy the evil.

I have submitted to the Attorney-general of this Colony for his consideration the points mentioned in your circular Despatch of the 13th June, with injunctions to him immediately to make the inquiries directed by you, and to report accordingly for your information.

I forward this Despatch direct, to save delay in sending it through the Governor, being the reason you assign for transmitting your note and circular dated the 13th June direct to me, but my duplicate will be forwarded through the Governor.

Enclosure 5, in No. 188.

Mr. Secretary Stanley having expressed a desire to know what reception would be given to the Parliamentary Resolutions respecting the measures in progress for the abolition of Colonial slavery, I regret that no opportunity has been afforded to the House of Assembly of this Island, whereby their opinion upon that subject can be with any certainty ascertained. But if any inference may be drawn from the events of to-day, I should augur that such reception would be favourable to the views of His Majesty's Government. The subject, as your Excellency knows, was, in the first instance, referred to a joint committee, and I did not expect that any debate or discussion would ensue until we had their report. Upon the casual introduction of the petition of the Legislature of Barbadoes, which, by the way, was not a very auspicious promise for a tranquil consideration of the subject, the House went to-day into a committee for the purpose, as I was afterwards informed, of ascertaining my sentiments. I took the opportunity of saying that I felt assured when the discussion should be legitimately brought on, that the House would see the expediency of adopting the Parliamentary Resolutions; and it was with great satisfaction that I heard the sentiment very loudly cheered. No other member offered a single observation upon the subject.

The cheer and the silence are to me indications that the principle of the measures will be adopted. As to its details, they are necessarily of a character so intricate and formidable as to make difference of opinion inevitable.

I know not how far your Excellency may think it expedient, in the absence of a better assurance, to convey these crude and unauthorized sentiments to Mr. Secretary Stanley. At all events, your Excellency will have the goodness to bear in mind that I am merely individually, and not officially, responsible for their accuracy.

Copy of a DESPATCH from Governor Sir E. J. Murray MacGregor, Bart. to Mr. Secretary Stanley.

Sir, Government House, Antigua, 23 October 1833.

No. 191.

No. 1, 5 October 1833. 4 October 1833, with 3 Enclosures.

Herein I do myself the honour of transmitting a letter to my address, from Lieut.-governor Nixon, together with duplicates, therewith received, of a Despatch from that officer, forwarded to you direct, together with Resolutions of the Board of Council and House of Assembly of St. Christopher's, on the subject of your circular Despatch of the 13th June last.

No. 2, 19 October 1833.

Had the original documents been submitted to me in the first instance, I should have considered it my duty to return that from the House of Assembly, for the reasons stated in my reply to the Lieutenant-governor, of which a copy is subjoined.

Enclosure 1, in No. 191. 3 October 1833.

I have the honour to transmit to you copies of the Resolutions of the Board of Council and House of Assembly of St. Christopher's on the subject of Mr. Secretary Stanley's circular Despatch of the 13th June last, enclosing the Resolutions of the House of Commons on the subject of the Slave Emancipation Bill, which I laid before them on the 22d July last, and which they referred to a committee of both Houses.

No steps having been taken on the subject by the committee, I called the attention of both Houses of the Colonial Legislature to this important question on the 27th of September, at which time I laid before them the Bill as amended by the House of Commons in Committee, and received by me here on the 21st September.

I have enclosed the originals of these Resolutions to Mr. Secretary Stanley by the packet direct this day, and I have to request you will be pleased to forward these duplicates.

Resolved unanimously,

THAT the members of His Majesty's Council of the Island of St. Christopher, having given their best attention to Mr. Stanley's Despatch of the 13th June last, and being fully aware of the importance of the views contained in that Despatch, and of the magnitude of the interests to be affected by those views both in this Colony and elsewhere; and though fully sensible of the danger of carrying the proposed measures into effect in an unskilful and unadvised manner, yet confidently relying on the liberal and generous feelings of the British nation, in case of future necessity, and that the wisdom and justice of His Majesty's Government will support and encourage the well-intended efforts of those who are engaged in the same cause with themselves, will afford their cordial co-operation towards carrying into effect the measures proposed, in the safest and most desirable manner, consistently with the present and future welfare of all His Majesty's subjects in this Colony.

(signed) Thos. Harper, Clerk of Council.

RESOLUTIONS adopted by the House of Assembly of St. Christopher upon the subject of Mr. Secretary Stanley's Despatch of 13th June 1833.

1. Resolved, That this House cordially concurs in the opinion expressed by Mr. Stanley and his colleagues, and recognised by the House of Commons, that the success of all efforts for a peaceful extermination of colonial slavery must depend upon the cordial co-operation of the colonists, and especially of the Colonial Legislatures, which co-operation this House is ready to afford.

2. Resolved, That the labour and sacrifices which the Parliament and parent State are willing to endure for the abolition of slavery bear no proportion to the labour and sacrifices required of the unfortunate colonists for that object.

3. Resolved, That this House will not disappoint the earnest and confident hope of our most gracious King, that his faithful subjects, the House of Assembly, will approach this question with the dispassionate seriousness due to the immense interests at stake; and if, in a season of great danger and of reasonable alarm, there has been any departure from that profitable virtue, which Mr. Secretary Stanley so earnestly recommends, whereby the best feelings of the colonists have been outraged, and this Island pronounced, by his high authority, guilty of atrocities unknown in the treatment of its slaves, and identified with crimes which, if perpetrated, are a disgrace to human nature, this House will regard such departure as a warning whereby it may avoid the evils of misrepresentation and calumny.

4. Resolved, That this House duly estimates the progress of the present state of public opinion as bearing upon this question; and this House repeats its desire to unite with Parliament in the zealous prosecution of this great design by adopting any safe, equitable and practicable plan for bringing it to a successful issue.

 5. Resolved,

ST. CHRISTOPHER.

5. Resolved, That the abolition of slavery, under any form, will involve most extensive changes in many parts of our colonial code of laws. That the plan proposed by His Majesty's Government seems to threaten the abrogation of every existing contract, whether of mortgage, settlement, annuity or other charge contingent upon slave labour, and that it will endanger, and, as this House fears, annihilate the complicated interests that have been created by the confidence which, till this eventful period, has obtained in the sacred character of property. That the great and arduous duties thereby to be thrown upon this House shall be cheerfully approached; but this House does not think that the greatest exercise of human foresight that the wit or wisdom of man can avert or greatly mitigate the distress and ruin in which thousands will be involved thereby.

6. Resolved, That this House deems it to be a duty thus deliberately to record its opinion upon the proposed abolition of colonial slavery, not for the idle purpose of averting any rational measure that shall safely and equitably accomplish so desirable an object, but in order that the practical experience of this House may be allowed to weigh something against the theory of His Majesty's Government, and that, if the measure shall, in its present aspect of danger, be adopted by the British Parliament, those modifications in its details which this House has suggested may not be disregarded.

7. Resolved, That the Speaker be requested to send a copy of these Resolutions to the Lieutenant-governor, for the purpose of being conveyed to His Majesty's Government.

Copy of a DESPATCH from Mr. Secretary Stanley to Governor Sir E. J. Murray MacGregor, Bart.

Sir, Downing-street, 12 December 1833.

No. 192. I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Despatch of the 23d October 1833, enclosing a copy of a letter from Lieutenant-governor Nixon to yourself, together with duplicate of a Despatch from that officer, and of certain Resolutions of the Board of Council and House of Assembly of St Christopher's on the subject of my circular Despatch of the 13th June last.

I have to request you to instruct Lieutenant-governor Nixon to convey my thanks to the Council of St. Christopher's for their promise of cordial co-operation; and to express to the Assembly of that Colony my hope that by approaching the important subject which has been brought under their consideration with becoming temper and moderation, they may be able to surmount the many difficulties which unquestionably surround it.

I have, &c.

Copy of a DESPATCH from Lieutenant-governor Nixon to Mr. Secretary Stanley.

Sir, Government House, 31 October 1833.

No. 193. On the 11th instant I had the honour to receive your circular Despatch of the 5th September, together with 24 copies of the Act for the Abolition of Slavery, and a copy of His Majesty's Proclamation of the 4th September respecting the same.

I had the several copies of the Act distributed according to your orders.

Same day I caused the Proclamation to be published in the newspapers of the Colony, and had copies of it struck off, one of which I sent to every estate in the Colony, with a circular letter to the proprietors or managers, enjoining them to read and explain the Proclamation to the slaves under their management.

I also sent copies of the Proclamation and Act to every clergyman of the Established Church, the Moravian and Wesleyan missionaries, (the only sectarians in the Colony), with a particular request that they would explain to the slaves in their respective districts all the provisions of the Act in their favour, and to impress on their minds the necessity and policy of their conducting themselves peaceably, quietly and industriously during the short period of their probation, by which demeanour alone they will ensure to themselves the certainty of obtaining employment when they are thrown on their own resources at the expiration of their apprenticeship. ST. CHRISTOPHER.

I am happy to say that I have heard of very few instances of discontent on the part of the slaves, but of late several robberies have been commited, hitherto almost unheard of. The church and the secretary's office have been broken into; but, strange to say, even these occurrences will not induce the Legislature to incur the expense of a police, frequently recommended by me, and which recommendation I will still endeavour to have attended to.

I have the honour to report to you that several persons, who, when in a state of slavery, were taken by their possessors to Great Britain, have availed themselves of the 3d clause of the Abolition Act, and have claimed their freedom, which of course they have obtained; but their former owners are much discontented at being deprived of their services, and claim compensation; some of them claim the services of those people as apprentices in like manner as those slaves who are to be set free on the 1st of August next.

I have taken the opinion of the Attorney-general of this Colony, and I herewith enclose a copy of it, with a request to be instructed if his view of the question is correct. Perhaps I am premature in intruding this request, as possibly instructions may arrive to set aside the necessity of doing so; but being most anxious on every circumstance connected with this great and important change about to take place in these Colonies, I trust I may be excused.

I have, &c.

Enclosure in No. 193.

Sir, Basseterre, 24 October 1833.

I have had the honour of receiving your letter of yesterday's date, containing an enclosure from Mr. Henry, and requesting my opinion upon certain points arising out of the new Act for the Abolition of Slavery. Enclosure in No. 193.

1. Supposing the slave in question to have been taken to England with the consent of his possessor, I am of opinion that he is now, by virtue of the 3d clause of this Act, absolutely and entirely free to all intents and purposes whatsoever, and,

2. That he is consequently not liable to serve as an apprentice under this Act. The words in italics are the very words of the Statute, and words less susceptible of misconstruction it would be difficult to have found. Apprenticed labourers are nowhere throughout this Act spoken of in any such terms.

3. I proceed to the question, "Whether owners of slaves coming within the operation of the 3d clause are entitled to compensation? In the clause (24) which empowers the Treasury to raise the twenty millions, mention is made of compensation for the services of the slaves to be manumitted and set free by virtue of this Act; and undoubtedly the slave in question would not have been made free but by virtue of this Act. In clause 47, mention is made of apportioning the compensation among the proprietors of the slaves to be manumitted by virtue of this Act, and this expression also appears to include the slave in question. This is all I can find in favour of a right to compensation in those persons whose slaves come within the operation of the 3d clause. On the other side, the 1st clause of the Act points out, as the main object of this Act, a class of persons who are to become apprenticed labourers on 1st of August 1834, and the slave in question cannot be brought within that class. The clause (45) which directs the apportioning the compensation fund into certain shares requires the Commissioners to have regard to the number of registered slaves; and how is the slave in question to be legally a registered slave at the time when the Commissioners are to perform this duty, he being already free to all intents and purposes?

The clause (47) which prescribes the duties of the Commissioners more in detail requires them to have regard to the relative value of prædial slaves and of unattached slaves; to distinguish such slaves into classes; to ascertain and fix the average value of slaves; in short, every object of their inquiry has reference in some way or other to slaves, i. e. to persons who at the time of their inquiry shall be held in a state of slavery. I would also observe, that it is difficult to suppose, considering the various revisions which this Act has undergone, and the great attention which it has received, that the Parliament should not have been aware of the effect of the third clause; and if they had intended to give compensation to the persons whose slaves were made free by this clause, they would have declared such intention, either by specific words to that effect, or in the course of their instructions to the Commissioners.

The principle of this Act is a reciprocity of services and support between the manumitted slaves slaves and the persons entitled to their services, and I think compensation is only to be given where this reciprocity can prevail; but in the case of slaves made free by the 3d clause, the owner is entitled to no services, nor is he bound to support his manumitted slave. The preamble of the Act also throws light on this question, "An Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies, for promoting the Industry of the Manumitted Slaves, and for compensating the Persons hitherto entitled to the Services of such Slaves;" from which words I infer that compensation is to be given for those manumitted slaves whose industry may be promoted by this Act; but the persons manumitted by the 3d clause being now become absolutely free, will be no more affected by the provisions of this Act than any other free persons in the community.

Upon the whole, after a careful perusal and consideration of the whole Act, I am of opinion, that persons whose slaves may have become free by the 3d clause of this Act will not be able to establish a claim to compensation for the loss of such slaves.

Your Excellency will observe that, to avoid circumlocution, I have several times used the word "slave" when I meant to express a person formerly a slave, now become free.

I have, &c.

His Excellency the Lieut.-governor, &c. &c. &.

Sir, Government House, Antigua, 18 Nov. 1833.

No. 194.

Observing from his Despatch of the 31st October, that the Lieut.-governor of St. Christopher's requests your instructions, in reference to Mr. Attorney-general Thomson's sentiments, relative to persons claiming freedom, under the 3d clause of the Abolition Act, I consider it proper to submit to your consideration transcripts of a letter to my address from the Lieut.-governor upon the same subject, and of my reply, accompanied by the opinion of the Attorney-general of Antigua.

Enclosure, 1, in No. 194.

Questions have been submitted to me that have arisen out of the 3d clause of the Act for the Abolition of Slavery, which I laid before the Attorney-general for his opinion. I have received that opinion, and I have the honour to enclose you a copy of it herewith.

24 October 1833.

The opinion does not satisfy some of the possessors of slaves who have been taken to the United Kingdom, as they imagined they are entitled to have the services of those people as apprenticed labourers, and that they will be entitled to compensation in like manner as the possessors of slaves who are to be emancipated on the 1st of August next.

I consider the best course for me to pursue on this occasion is to show all concerned the Attorney-general's opinion, and if they are not satisfied with it, to refer them to their legal advisers.

I shall feel obliged to you to acquaint me, at your convenience, whether you approve of the mode I have adopted of settling this point.

COPY of a DESPATCH from Lieutenant-governor Nixon to Mr. Secretary Stanley.

Sir, St. Christopher's, Government House, 20 Nov. 1833.

I HAVE the honour to acquaint you that the Legislature of this Colony assembled for the despatch of business on the 5th day of this month, and that the members of the new annual Assembly were that day sworn in. No. 195.

I thought it necessary to lay your circular Despatch of the 5th of September before both Houses of the Legislature, and to address them on the subject of it. A copy of my address, together with copies of the replies of both Houses, with my answers thereto, are herewith enclosed.

I am happy to report, that as far as I am able to form a judgment, I consider that both the Council and Assembly are determined to act agreeably to the promises made by them in their answers to my address, both with temper and promptitude to carry into effect the views of His Majesty's Government in the great work of emancipation by their local enactments and subordinate details.

Several bills are in preparation, to be laid before the Legislature at their next meeting, for altering, repealing and amending Acts now in force, so as to adapt them to the change about to take place, and to regulate the various relations of the apprenticed labourers both to their employers and to the State.

The Legislature look forward with no small degree of anxiety for the promised model for their guidance in the general principles on which to frame their supplementary enactments; and they anticipate that the promulgation of the proposed Orders in Council will obviate every seeming obstacle that may at present appear formidable.

I have, &c.
(signed) J. Lyons Nixon,
Lieutenant-governor.

(Enclosure in No. 195.)

Mr. President and Gentlemen of the Council,
Mr. Speaker and Gentlemen of the Assembly,

THE late session of the Assembly having so nearly approached its legal termination, I deemed it expedient, with the advice of the Privy Council, to dissolve the House by proclamation, that no interruption might take place in the consideration of the important measures which must immediately occupy your attention in consequence of the passing of the Act for the Abolition of Slavery in the British Colonies. Enclosure in No. 195.

With a due regard to the constitutional privileges of the Colonial Legislatures, and relying upon their experience and practical knowledge, the Imperial Parliament has left the details necessary for carrying this great undertaking into full effect to be framed by them.

His Majesty's Government has intimated an intention of supplying you with a model for your guidance; "not," as Mr. Secretary Stanley observes, "for servile imitation, but sufficiently developing the general principles on which it is expected the supplementary enactments will be framed."

As the measure is now part of the law of the land, and can only be brought into safe and beneficial operation in this Island by your cordial and willing exertions, I indulge the hope that you will enter upon the consideration of this question (certainly the most momentous that ever engaged your attention) with that calmness which is due to the great interests at stake; that you will bear in mind the great influence of rank, character and intelligence against which His Majesty's Government have had to contend in the progress of this measure through Parliament, supported as it has been by the all-powerful force of public opinion; that you will consider the liberal spirit by which their counsels have been guided; and that you will zealously co-operate with them in bringing the measure to an issue that shall conduce to the safety and welfare of all classes of the inhabitants of this ancient colony.

This Act will render necessary very extensive changes in our social system; and independently of the relations in which the labourers and their employers will at a future period stand towards each other, many parts of our colonial code not directly connected with slavery will be affected by the change, and must be considered with a view to adapt them to the altered state of our society.

It is reasonably to be expected that in the consideration of questions involving such important consequences great apparent difficulties will present themselves, but I feel assured that all obstacles will be overcome by your steady perseverance and true patriotism.

Mr. Speaker and Gentlemen of the Assembly,

It is consistent with the strictest economy to be prepared, in a financial point of view, for any emergency that may occur.

I therefore recommend you to adopt such measures as may be necessary for preserving the public treasury in good credit.

I also recommend to your consideration the necessity of having that highly constitutional force, the Island militia, placed in the most efficient state with respect to arms and equipments. As the Militia Law will shortly expire, you will no doubt make that Act one of your earliest considerations.

I beg strongly to suggest the propriety of enacting a law for establishing a police in the several towns of the Island, and providing for the due support thereof. This measure was at all times desirable: it has now become indispensable.

Mr. President and Gentlemen of the Council,
Mr. Speaker and Gentlemen of the Assembly,

I cannot take my leave without impressing upon you the importance of the position which you at present occupy. The commercial and agricultural interests of your constituents are in your hands. The welfare and prosperity, or the misery and destitution, of the inhabitants of this colony, will in a great degree depend upon the steps you are now about to take.

May your deliberations tend to advance the interests and promote the happiness of all classes of the community in the way most conducive to their permanent welfare.

(signed) J. Lyons Nixon,
Lieutenant-governor.

REPLY of the Council to His Excellency Lieutenant-Governor J. Lyons Nixon, &c. &c. &c.

Sir,

We, the Members of His Majesty's Council, beg your Excellency to accept our sincere thanks for your speech at the opening of the new session.

We venture to hope that our earnest exertions safely and satisfactorily to carry into full effect the provisions of the Act of the Imperial Parliament for the Abolition of Slavery in the British Colonies will completely justify the reliance which has been placed on us as a branch of one of the Colonial Legislatures to whom the details of this important measure have wisely and considerately been left.

We await with deep anxiety the arrival of the "model" which His Majesty's Government designs to supply for our guidance; and we are prepared, in the spirit of liberal dependance on the wisdom and integrity by which we trust it will be framed, to adopt, as far as may be practicable, its general principles, and thus release ourselves from a part of the painful labour which otherwise we should have had to encounter, and secure the approbation of the authority to which we must finally submit.

We trust your Excellency's expectation, that we shall enter upon the consideration of the question with that calmness which is due to the great interests it involves, will be most amply realized; and in sincerity we assure you, that as the measure is now a part of the law of the land, our willing and cordial exertions shall be used to bring it, as far as may be possible, into safe and beneficial operation in this Island.

We rely for the due appreciation of our efforts, and the just construction of those supplementary enactments we are called upon to make, on a necessary accordance of opinion and feeling among all parties; and that the imitation by other nations of the example of Great Britain and the perpetuation of the blessing of freedom must depend on the successful issue of this great measure.

We are aware that very extensive alterations in our colonial code will now be rendered imperatively necessary; and though in apprehension of the many obstacles by which we shall be surrounded, notwithstanding the assistance we may derive from the promised "model," and in the conviction of the difficulty of grappling at once with so large a measure, sure, we are ready and willing to afford our best assistance in adapting all our local laws to those great alterations in the condition of our social and civil system which will be consequent on the recent enactment.

We cannot conclude without thanking your Excellency for the expressions of your sense of the critical importance of the situation in which we are placed; but with your Excellency we indulge in the hope that our deliberations may tend to advance the interests, promote the prosperity, and conduce to the permanent welfare of all classes of the community.

and Seven other Members of the Council.

Council Chamber, 4 Nov. 1833.

Mr. President and Gentlemen of the Council,

I HAVE much pleasure in receiving the address which you have been pleased to present in answer to the speech which I had the honour to make at the last meeting of the Legislature.

I am highly gratified that you so fully concur with me as to the great importance of the measures now about to form the subject of your deliberations; and I receive with perfect confidence, and fully rely on the assurance of your readiness to co-operate with the other branches of the Legislature in framing such enactments as shall be conducive to the prosperity and general welfare of the Colony.

Government House, St. Christopher's,

REPLY of the Assembly.

To His Excellency J. Lyons Nixon, Lieutenant-governor, &c. &c. &c.

May it please your Excellency,

WE, the Members of the Commons House of Assembly of St. Christopher, beg to return our thanks to your Excellency for the address which you have been pleased to deliver to us at the opening of the present session; and we duly appreciate your Excellency's motive for dissolving the late House.

This House will take the earliest opportunity of considering the important Act which has passed the Imperial Parliament for the Abolition of Slavery; and we will enter upon our deliberations with that calmness which is due to the great interests at stake.

At so unexampled a crisis, when the all-powerful force of public opinion has rendered necessary an Act which to a fearful extent involves the great interests confided to our care, and which will render necessary very extensive changes in our social system, we may reasonably expect great difficulties will present themselves; but we are willing to hope that the temperate and liberal spirit which we are determined shall guide our counsels, will contribute in no trifling degree to remove any obstacle which may present itself in the great work of emancipation.

We shall endeavour to be prepared in a financial point of view for any emergency that may occur.

The consideration of the militia force of this Island with respect to its efficiency, and the militia law, which will shortly expire, together with the propriety of establishing a police in the several towns of this Island, shall in due course occupy our deliberations.

We cannot take leave of your Excellency without expressing our warmest acknowledgments for the ready acquiescence which has been shown on all occasions by your Excellency in every measure calculated to be beneficial to this Colony, and the temperate and impartial discharge of the duties attached to your command towards all classes of His Majesty's subjects in this community.

Accept, Sir, the assurances of our highest consideration, and of our earnest desire for the prosperity of yourself and family.

Assembly Room, 14 Nov. 1833.

Mr. Speaker and Gentlemen of the House of Assembly,

I RECEIVE with very great satisfaction your reply to the address which I had the honour to make to you on the opening of the new House of Assembly on the 5th instant.

I have to express my perfect confidence in the assurances made to me of your determination to meet the arduous task committed to your counsels with that liberality, willingness and temperate spirit so essentially necessary in your present deliberations. I feel no doubt but by your ability and perseverance you will speedily overcome any obstacles that may at present appear formidable.

ST. CHRISTOPHER.

I beg to offer you my warmest thanks for the tribute of your approbation of my conduct since my arrival in the Colony, and for your kind wishes for the prosperity and welfare of myself and family. It will be my study and earnest desire to deserve, by a conscientious discharge of my duty, a continuance of your good opinion.

A joint committee has been appointed to meet on Monday the 2d of December, "to consider the Statute 3 & 4 W. 4. c. 73, Mr. Stanley's Despatches, and all things connected with the abolition of slavery, and to report thereon as soon as may be; and also to report on the expediency of adopting the resolutions connected therewith."

Enclosure in No. 196.

Mr. President, and Gentlemen of the Council,
Mr. Speaker, and Gentlemen of the Assembly,

Enclosure in No. 196.

I HAVE the honour to lay before your Honourable Board and House a draft of the Order in Council which it is proposed to issue for the purpose of carrying into effect, in the Crown Colonies, the Act of the British Parliament for the Abolition of Slavery. This is the "model" which has been referred to as "developing the general principles upon which it is expected the supplementary enactments will be framed." It is, however, stated in the prefatory observations which are prefixed to the draft, that "there are various minor and subordinate provisions which are purposely omitted, with a view to brevity, but which would be supplied if this draft were assumed as the basis of actual legislation."

This draft has been accompanied by a Despatch from Mr. Secretary Stanley, in which he states, "that Parliament will be disposed to place the most candid and liberal construction upon the Acts which may be passed, provided that they bear upon the face of them a real and sincere desire to act up to the spirit and intention of the British Parliament and people."

The whole of this Despatch is so important, as conveying the sentiments of His Majesty's Government as connected with this question, and breathes such a spirit of candour and liberal feeling throughout, that I feel I shall be acting in perfect accordance with Mr. Secretary Stanley's views by communicating its contents to you; I have therefore directed a copy of it to be laid before you.

I trust that you will now lose no time in perfecting the details, by which this great and important measure may be beneficially and permanently settled.

It is highly gratifying to reflect upon the orderly and peaceable conduct of the labouring classes, the natural consequence of the care and attention which they experience from those under whose authority and protection they are placed; and I fervently hope that the final arrangement of this very delicate question may be such as will maintain and strengthen the harmony which now so happily subsists between the labourer and his employer.

Sir, Downing-street, 7 Jan. 1834.

I request that you will have the goodness to intimate to the Lieut.-governor of St. Christopher's that I have received his Despatch of the 30th November, enclosing a copy of his Message to the Legislature upon the subject of my circular Despatch of the 19th October. No. 197.

Sir, Government House, 10 July 1834.

The packet left this Island on the 4th instant, since which time the negroes throughout the whole Colony have evinced the most rebellious conduct: they are determined to resist the apprenticeship system, and have declared with one voice to myself that they will strike on the 1st August, and only work for wages, and that they will dictate terms, being convinced from the King's Proclamation that they are to have unrestricted freedom on the 1st August next. No. 198.

The inhabitants of this Colony finding that the negroes had imbibed such erroneous ideas on this subject, solicited me to undeceive them, and to explain to them the actual position in which they would stand on the 1st day of August next. I summoned a Privy Council, and it was determined on, that I should assemble five per cent. of the negroes from each estate in a central spot in each of the nine parishes in the Colony, and read to them the address I now enclose you. In some places I succeeded in getting through the address; but the generality of parishes would not listen to it, and showed the greatest disposition to riot, and actually committed violence before my face upon the overseer of one of the estates.

I have the honour to enclose you a resolution of the Legislature passed this day; and, having the opportunity of a schooner bound for Cork, to give you the foregoing information I embrace it, and have only a moment to do so.

I have, &c.

Enclosure 1, in No. 198.

To the Labouring Population.

The near approach of the 1st of August, when your condition will be so much changed, makes it necessary that the new law should be made known to you all; and I take the trouble to speak to you myself, that no ignorance may longer continue on this subject. It has been represented to me that there are many persons among you who know nothing about the new law; or if they do know something about it, that their knowledge is so imperfect generally as to mislead rather than direct them in the performance of their duties after the 1st of August. There are many sensible persons in the Island who might give you all the information on this subject that I shall endeavour to do to-day; but that no person may think to escape punishment for disobeying the law because he was not properly made acquainted with it, I take upon myself to explain your new duties. The execution of the law is placed in my hands, and I should betray the trust the King has reposed in me if I permitted any disobedience to the law, which, in other words, is the King's commands. Now listen to what I am going to tell you. When the 1st of August comes, you will be no longer slaves, but will have to labour for your present masters a certain number of hours in every week, that is, for 45 hours. How your present employers will have this number of Enclosure 1, in No. 198.

ST. CHRISTOPHER.

hours, the law leaves them to tell you. One way of working may suit one estate, and another way another estate; but you will remember that this is all the time you can be compelled to labour, (except on emergencies, in tending cattle, and watching and preserving your masters' properties), and whatever more your masters may require of you must in some way be paid for by them. If you work seven hours and a half every day in the week, your masters will have from you all the law gives them. If you work nine hours for five days, there will be one whole day which will belong to you, because nine hours for five days will make the 45 hours I have mentioned. This is what the law calls apprenticeship, but you are not to be led away by a name, and to suppose that this apprenticeship is like that which some of you may have seen in this Island; and you will soon see that there is this difference: your masters, in your apprenticeship, have not the power of punishing except by complaining to the magistrates particularly appointed by the King to hear all complaints your masters may have against you, and your complaints against your masters. This is the especial business of the new magistrates. You that are field servants, tradesmen, and all concerned in estates' duties are, under the new law, to serve your present masters for six years. You that are domestic or house servants, for four years. The reason of the difference in the time that some of you have to serve is this: field servants are compelled to work for little more than half the day; but house servants are liable at all times, both night and day, to obey their present masters. During the six years in the case of field servants, and four years' service of domestic servants, the law gives you all the same allowance of food, clothing and medical attendance that you are now entitled to. No person need fear punishment who performs his duty. The new magistrates are sworn to do you justice. Those who were good servants under the old law will certainly be good servants when they are free. Those persons whom it has been found necessary under the old law sometimes to punish, have now an opportunity of assuming a new character. All old offences will be forgotten, and every one treated as good and obedient people deserve to be treated, till they show their ingratitude for the consideration the King has had for them, and then they will most certainly bring down upon themselves the punishment the law orders for all offenders. You ought to be told some other provisions in the new law. Some of you may have saved a little money even in a state of slavery, and those who have done so may purchase their discharge from their present master, and employ themselves in any honest occupation they can find. How those who have money are to set about buying their discharge the new magistrates will inform you, and the new laws will be soon printed, when those who can read will learn this themselves. All your children not six years of age on the 1st of August next will then become free, and your present masters will not be bound to maintain them; they will be entirely dependent on their parents. It will be the duty of parents to bring up their children in the paths of honesty and industry: according to the teaching these children receive from their father and mother, will be the benefits all parents will a few years hence receive from them. Many of you in your old age must be fed and taken care of by your children. Early lessons, such as I recommend, can alone ensure you any comfort from having a family. I shall only add, that while the advantages of the new law are made for all of you, the punishment it contains are only intended for those who deserve them. In England idle people, and those who will not work, are taken up as vagabonds and punished, and the same laws will be in force here. Let no one deceive you, and say that the good can be deprived of their advantages, or the bad escape punishment. No one of you now can say that he did not understand the law. Let me warn you all to be obedient to it. I promise protection to the good, as I will assuredly punish the conduct of the bad.

1 July 1834. John Lyons Nixon, Lieutenant-governor.

I have omitted to tell you that the law says that every master or employer has authority to release you from that part of the law which calls you apprentices whenever he thinks proper; and it is very likely that some masters may choose to do so at different periods. I have heard that some masters do not wish to take you as apprentices. But you must not deceive yourselves. If any master chooses to say he will not have apprentices, you must not think that will release you from labour; there are other laws that will then compel you to work.

St. Christopher's.

AT a Meeting of the Council and Assembly, held at the Court House, on Thursday the 10th day of July 1834,

It was Resolved,

Enclosure 2, in No. 198.

THAT his Excellency the Lieutenant-governor be requested to appoint a guard in each parish in the Island, sufficient to ensure a communication throughout the whole of the Colony at the least possible notice, and that his Excellency be requested to provide flagstaffs, with colours, lanterns and rockets, for the purpose of facilitating such communication.

That three dozen copies of the Riot Act be printed and distributed to the magistracy.

That

That it is with extreme concern that the Board and House are now obliged to notice the state of insubordination of the slaves in this Island, who openly and generally declare their intention to resist the laws of this Island, framed for the purpose of carrying into effect the Act of the Imperial Parliament, 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 73. ST. CHRISTOPHER.

That this House and Board cannot sufficiently express their indignation at the insult and indignities which the slaves offered to his Excellency the Lieutenant-governor within the last few days, when his Excellency visited them to explain the said Act of Parliament.

That this House and Board view with great alarm the unprotected state of this Colony at this important crisis, knowing that the militia force is very small, and that the number of His Majesty's troops stationed here is inadequate to preserve the safety of this Colony.

That his Excellency the Lieutenant-governor be requested to communicate forthwith with his Excellency Sir E. MacGregor, praying him to procure an increase of the military force in this Island without delay, and to forward to Sir E. MacGregor a copy of these resolutions.

That this House and Board cannot enumerate the many instances of insubordination, riot and insult which have lately been evinced by the slaves of this Island; but they request his Excellency the Lieutenant-governor to mention in his Despatch such as he is personally aware of.

That a committee be appointed to procure a vessel, at the public expense, to take his Excellency the Lieutenant-governor's Despatches founded hereon to Antigua and Barbadoes.

COPY of a DESPATCH from Lieutenant-governor Nixon to Mr. Secretary Spring Rice.

Sir, St. Christopher's, Government House, 17 July 1834.

I HAVE the honour to forward to you a duplicate of my hurried Despatch of the 10th July, addressed to Mr. Stanley, and I now take the opportunity of a remaining vessel to acquaint you that this Colony has been tolerably quiet since the 10th, at least no open act of violence has taken place, though the negroes openly declare their determination not to work after 1st of August, except for wages, which determination I am of opinion they will adhere to. I very much regret to say that there is not a sufficient force in the Colony to enforce the law if resisted, there being only 239 rank and file of regular troops, and not more than about 500 of the militia, extremely badly equipped and armed, and also in a wretched state of discipline. There is not one entire set of accoutrements in the whole militia force. No. 199.

I regret to add that there is no police in the Colony, and the Bill which was passed by the Legislature to form a police has not been assented to, and consequently a police cannot be raised until the Bill arrives assented to.

I have represented all those circumstances to the Governor, Sir E. J. Murray MacGregor, and have applied for more troops, which I trust I shall get, as the Legislature have sent an advice-boat up to Barbadoes praying for a reinforcement.

It is impossible to say how the negroes will act after the 1st of August. My own opinion is that there will be a passive resistance to work under the apprenticeship system, and it will be impossible to coerce them unless we have a sufficient force to do so.

I have, &c.

COPY of a DESPATCH from Governor Sir E. J. Murray MacGregor to Mr. Secretary Spring Rice.

Sir, Government House, St. Christopher's, 21 July 1834.

FROM the accompanying documents it will be collected that, on the 12th inst., advices reached me, from the Lieut.-governor of St. Christopher's, that opposition was threatened, on the part of the negroes of this Island, to the approaching No. 200.

ST. CHRISTOPHER.

approaching system of apprenticeship; that, after consulting the Antigua Privy Council, I directed the sloop Blossom to proceed that evening on her voyage with my despatches for his Excellency Sir Lionel Smith at Barbadoes; that His Majesty's ship Wasp was employed to carry thence a supply of arms and ammunition for the militia to St. Christopher's direct; that on the 19th inst. His Majesty's ship Belvidera arrived at English Harbour, where a company of His Majesty's 36th regiment embarked that evening; that I repaired on board next morning, and before night reached this place, and that I have to-day issued a Proclamation to the inhabitants, and have personally conferred with the local Legislature.

The detachment of the 36th regiment will land to-morrow, when the Belvidera, in which it is my intention to re-embark, is to sail for the Virgin Islands, the Wasp continuing here. I am desirous, if possible, of touching at Montserrat and Nevis also, and still to return hither on or before the 1st proximo, in order to pursue such measures as may then be required by the circumstances of this Colony.

The prompt attention of the Major-general commanding the forces to my application has proved highly beneficial and well timed; and I cannot too forcibly express my sense of obligation to Captain Strong of the Belvidera, commanding His Majesty's Barbadoes squadron, for the cordial and considerate co-operation most opportunely obtained from this experienced officer.

Sir, St. Christopher's, Government House, 10 July 1834.

Enclosure 1, in No. 200.

I AM extremely sorry to report to your Excellency that the negroes of this Island have manifested a very great spirit of insubordination and resistance to the authority of their owners for some time past, in consequence of which I was solicited by the inhabitants to visit the estates, and explained to the negroes the exact position in which they would stand on the 1st of August next, and the Privy Council very much approved of the measure, and framed an address for me to deliver to those people, one of which I have the honour to enclose herewith.

For Lieut.-governor Nixon's Address to the labouring population, dated 1 July 1834, vide Enclosure in his Despatch, 10 July, page 63.

I appointed a place of meeting in each of the nine parishes, and had five per cent. of the negroes of each estate in the parishes assembled to hear the explanation of the law read to them; and on Saturday last, the 5th inst., I addressed the people of two parishes in the vicinity of town, and I regret to say that their conduct was highly insubordinate and disgraceful. They unâ voce protested against the apprenticeship system, declaring their resolution to resist it, and not to work after the 1st of August without wages, saying that on that day they were to be free, as announced by the King's proclamation, and that their masters could not take their houses or provision-grounds from them, having so long occupied them; many of them observing that they had as good a right to be free as the negroes of Antigua, and that the Governor of Antigua, who was the Governor of St. Kitt's also, had made them free, and that I was only Lieut.-governor, and was brought by the white men to deceive them, but when Mr. Cleghorn returned from England he would bring out these free papers, for which purpose he had gone to the King, as I was bought by their owners to cheat them. They hooted, and in some instances threw banana husks at or towards me, and walked off shouting, and could not be brought back by their owners or overseers.

On the last place of meeting that day I could not get them to listen to a word, and when I was returning home, I was followed a considerable way by crowds making a most hideous noise.

I proceeded on Tuesday and Wednesday to the other seven parishes, and met with no better success. At one place it was contemplated to cut my horses' throats and break my carriage, but no mischief happened except at the last place, when the overlooker of an estate was most roughly handled in my presence, and probably would have been murdered had not two of the most active of the rioters been seized and sent to gaol.

The Legislature is sitting this day, and, though late, I believe they will do all in their power for the security of the Colony; as yet we have no police. Our police stations are not fixed upon; no auxiliary constables sworn in; the militia worse than can be expressed, for want of arms and accoutrements. Having now explained to your Excellency the state of the Colony, I have to intreat you will give it your favourable consideration, and move the commander of the forces to send at least three more companies for the protection of the lives and properties of the inhabitants which are in such immediate danger.

The Legislature have acquainted me that they will request me to send a communication from from them to-morrow by an express-boat to your Excellency, praying for an immediate reinforcement of troops, I shall therefore not detain the mail-boat any longer, having kept her near two hours already. ST. CHRISTOPHER.

Enclosure 2, in No. 200.

Sir, St. Christopher's, Government House, 11 July 1834.

SINCE my Despatch of yesterday to your Excellency by the mail-boat, I received the enclosed resolutions of the Legislature; I lose no time in forwarding them to Antigua by the sloop Blossom, with the hope that your Excellency will be pleased to send her on to Barbadoes, with a request to the Commander of the Forces to send immediately a reinforcement of three companies to this Island. Enclosure 2, in No. 200.

The alarm created by this open combination, and the determination of the negroes, have driven some families who resided in the country to seek refuge in Basseterre, and, as far as I can learn, many more are coming in this morning.

Of course more alarm exists than perhaps there is any ground for, though I must confess I am not surprised at such feelings.

I have requested the officers commanding the troops on Brimstone Hill to send in, in the most quiet way, barrack accommodation for a reinforcement of 30 men for Basseterre, but I am extremely reluctant to comply with the urgent request of the inhabitants to bring in the troops, which I will not do as long as I can avoid it.

I have taken every precaution that I can think of to prevent any surprise on the militia arms by having them deposited near to their alarm posts under a militia guard of picked men; and at the same time I have ordered the arms to be repaired and put in order ready for service, and have issued ammunition.

I should hope that by the vessel which carries this Despatch his Excellency the Commander of the Forces will be pleased to send us the arms and accoutrements intended for St. Christopher's, and so very much wanted here, a requisition for which I forwarded to your Excellency yesterday in my Despatch of the 3d inst.

Informations have been laid against some persons accused of exciting the negroes to resist the law, and the investigations are to take place this morning.

The Assembly seem now to open their eyes to their situation, and I trust that their exertions may produce some good.

Should your Excellency think proper to employ the Blossom sloop, which carries this letter up to you, to proceed to Barbadoes with the requisition for troops, she is chartered for that purpose, to be paid for from this treasury, and it will be a very good opportunity for her to take in the arms and accoutrements at Barbadoes intended for St. Christopher's.

EXTRACTS of a LETTER from Sir E. J. Murray MacGregor, Bart., to his Excellency Sir Lionel Smith, K.C.B., dated Antigua, 12 July 1834, and marked confidential.

Enclosure 4, in No. 200.

IT is with extreme regret that I find myself under the necessity of apprising your Excellency that I have this day received the enclosed communications from the Lieut.-governor of St. Christopher's.

Having considered it advisable to obtain the opinion of the Privy Council of this Island upon the subject of the application from St. Christopher's for military aid, their opinion has been expressed in the following terms.

"The Board is of opinion, that as it appears by the official returns before the Board that there is already a sufficient military force at St. Christopher's for the purpose of protecting the inhabitants, although perhaps insufficient to put down opposition to the law, it would be advisable to wait the result of a communication to the Commander of the Forces at Barbadoes before any immediate measures be adopted from hence; particularly as the existing force of this garrison is not greater than is necessary for its own purposes at the present crisis."

However disagreeable may be the task of conveying the foregoing intelligence to your Excellency, I am happy in being enabled to mention that, according to every indication afforded by the past conduct of the negroes of Antigua, as well as to the information generally obtained from the proprietors and clergy, there is every reasonable prospect of the maintenance of tranquillity in this colony, notwithstanding the approaching important change in the condition of the labouring classes.

I consider it essential to put your Excellency in possession of my impression upon this subject, and consequent anxiety to render every assistance, reconcilable with the safety of Antigua, to the Island of St. Christopher's, the more especially as our former correspondence leads me to apprehend that the disposable force at your Excellency's command may not admit of numerous detachments.

It is my intention to suggest to the Lieut.-governor of St. Christopher's the expediency of remaining, if possible, passive, until the arrival there of the arms and accoutrements required for the militia, and of such reinforcements as it may be found practicable to send to his Excellency's assistance.

Your Excellency is aware of the requisitions for troops from the Virgin Islands, Montserrat and Anguilla, as well as from Nevis, (from which latter Colony I have this day received a repetition of one) for an augmentation to its garrison.

Under all circumstances, it would therefore seem imprudent to risk a further diminution of the force in Antigua, than by the employment of a company on any temporary detached service; but, should the labourers of St. Christopher's, after the 1st of August, absolutely refuse to work in the character of apprentices, it is obviously of the first importance that the difficulty should be instantly grappled with and overcome; not only with a view of restoring public order in that colony, but of obviating the still more serious evils likely to arise, should the resistance to lawful authority be successful, for such a period as to admit of the contagion spreading to the neighbouring possessions of the Crown.

A company of the 36th regiment will be held in readiness, at the Ridge, for embarkation, should your Excellency think proper to require their services; but I must rely entirely upon your Excellency and the officer commanding His Majesty's naval squadron at Barbadoes for the means of transport.

Unless any unforeseen circumstance shall previously occur in this quarter, it is my intention to proceed to St. Christopher's with whatever arms and reinforcements your Excellency may be pleased to spare on this occasion.

Should your Excellency think fit to detach a force from Barbadoes, independently of any aid from this garrison, I should hope therefore that, in that case also, the officer commanding the vessel to be employed will still be directed to touch at Antigua, and not to proceed to St. Christopher's without communicating with me.

From the similarity in our situations as Governors of several Colonies, your Excellency must be fully aware of the embarrassment of my position at the present crisis, with reference to this demand from St. Christopher's, and liability to similar appeals from the other Leeward Islands, or Dominica; a consideration only serving to confirm and strengthen my solicitude for the prompt prevention, or suppression, of the threatened disturbances in the Island of St. Christopher's.

Having thus hastily endeavoured to bring the situation of these Colonies under your Excellency's Excellency's cognizance, I beg leave to add the assurance of my disposition to profit by such advice as your Excellency's experience may suggest, and, in my military capacity, to yield the most prompt and implicit obedience to your Excellency's commands." ST. CHRISTOPHER.

Enclosure 5, in No. 200.

Sir, Government House, Antigua, 14 July 1834.

YOUR Excellency's Despatches of the 3d, 10th and 11th instant arrived on the 12th, and on the evening of that day the sloop Blossom proceeded towards Barbadoes, pursuant to your Excellency's desire and that of the Council and Assembly, with an application addressed to his Excellency Sir Lionel Smith, commanding the forces, for a reinforcement of His Majesty's troops, as well as for a supply of arms and accoutrements to the militia of St. Christopher's. Enclosure 5, in No. 200.

The accounts of the disaffection of the negroes, and in particular of the personal indignities offered by them in several instances to your Excellency, have not failed to inspire me with the most lively regret.

I observe, however, with satisfaction, that two of the most active rioters have been secured, and sincerely hope the intended investigation may have led to the detection and exposure of any traitorous persons engaged in the criminal task of luring the labouring classes, through the medium of resistance to the laws, to their own eventual ruin.

I have, &c.

To his Excellency, (signed) E. J. Murray MacGregor, Governor.
The Lieut.-governor of St. Christopher's,

Enclosure 6, in No. 200.

EXTRACT of a DESPATCH from Sir Lionel Smith to His Excellency Sir E. J. Murray MacGregor, dated Barbadoes, 17 July 1834.

I HAD the honour to receive your Excellency's Despatch of the 12th instant at half-past seven this morning, in which you detail the demonstration of very rebellious feelings among the negroes of St. Christopher's, and solicit further military aid for that Island. Enclosure 6, in No. 200.

Captain Strong of His Majesty's ship Belvidera being in harbour, I immediately advised with him, and he has most kindly agreed to proceed in the course of this day to English Harbour, and from thence (if your Excellency sees fit) he will receive on board a company of the 36th for St. Kitt's.

He has further granted the aid of the "Wasp" brig-of-war to proceed to Basseterre, with 200 stand of arms and accoutrements, 5,000 rounds of ball-cartridge and 1,000 flints; and I anxiously promise myself the appearance of these men-of-war and the aid they contain will restore tranquillity and industry among the slave population of St. Christopher's.

Enclosure 7, in No. 200.

St. Christopher.

A PROCLAMATION,

By his Excellency Sir Evan John Murray MacGregor, Baronet, &c. &c. &c.
(L. S.)

WHEREAS, by a Royal Proclamation, under date the 4th day of September last, which has been published in St. Christopher's, His Majesty was pleased to direct that, "subject to apprenticeship, all persons who on the 1st day of August 1834 shall be holden in slavery," within any of the British Colonies, "will upon and from that day be absolutely and for ever manumitted and set free; and that all persons who shall then be duly registered as slaves in such respective Colonies, and actually within the same, and of the full age of six years and upwards, will by force and virtue of an Act of the Imperial Parliament become apprenticed labourers in the service of the persons previously entitled to their services as slaves; and that the apprenticeship of such labourers will terminate on the 1st day of August 1840, or on the 1st day of August 1838, according to the nature and description of the employment in which such labourers shall be severally engaged, as in the said Act set forth; and that such apprenticed labourers will during such their apprenticeships be bound by law to labour in the service of their respective employers, on such terms and conditions, and for such limited period of time, as by the said Act of Parliament, or as by Acts hereafter to be made and passed in such Colonies respectively, are or shall be prescribed on that behalf." Enclosure 7, in No. 200.

ST. CHRISTOPHER.

And whereas the said Act of the Imperial Parliament for the Abolition of Slavery, distinctly leaving it to the free choice of the Legislatures of the respective Colonies, either to adopt the particular system of apprenticeship contemplated by the Act, to shorten its duration, or to dispense with it entirely, the Legislature of St. Christopher's thence derives a title as undoubted to subject the labouring orders in this Island to the intermediate stage of apprenticeship, as the Legislature of Antigua to confer unrestricted emancipation upon the labourers there: And whereas it has been communicated to me that many negroes in St. Christopher's are strongly impressed with the erroneous belief that the liberty imparted to them by the King's Proclamation is not only unconditional, but that they are invested with a prescriptive right of property in the places of abode now occupied by them, on the plantations to which they are attached, and moreover, that they cannot be required to work without wages:

Now, therefore, it becomes my bounden duty to declare that apprentices are not only rendered liable by the Act of the Imperial Parliament to work without wages, but to make good besides such time as they may improperly abstract from the service of their lawful employers, even to the extent of seven additional years of apprenticeship, the freedom conceded to them by the King being qualified by this express reservation; and likewise to announce that long occupancy affords them no legal claim whatever to the houses in which when slaves they were permitted to reside, as is exemplified in Antigua, where well-conducted negroes, "by way of a temporary and gratuitous accommodation," are suffered by their former owners "to enjoy respectively the personal occupation of the said habitations or tenements until the 1st day of August 1835, and no longer," that is for one year only after slavery shall have expired.

And whereas it has been further represented to me that some of the negroes in different parts of this Colony have recently betrayed a lawless and rebellious spirit, and have even dared wantonly and audaciously to insult his Excellency the Lieutenant-governor while administering the Government on His Majesty's behalf: And whereas the King doth in the Royal Proclamation aforesaid set forth, "his settled purpose and resolve, by all the powers vested in him to enforce due obedience to the laws, and to prevent, and, if necessary, to repress and punish, all contraventions of the said laws;" I do accordingly invite all loyal persons zealously to aid and assist the constituted authorities in bringing to deserved and exemplary punishment the offenders concerned in the violent outrages above mentioned.

And I solemnly and explicitly warn the working population, that any future acts of tumult or insubordination on their part must inevitably tend to deter the Legislature of this Colony from curtailing the period of apprenticeship, and earnestly exhort all good negroes to recollect with gratitude, that while in this state of gradual preparation for eventual independence, they continue to be provided by their employers with food, medical care and lodging; solid advantages, which, notwithstanding any former usage, they must be prepared, on becoming absolutely free, altogether to relinquish and forego.

Having thus dispelled the baneful illusion, unfortunately cherished by certain misguided negroes in St. Christopher's, and assuring those who persevere in orderly and peaceable demeanour of the constant protection of the Executive, I do now, in the name of our Sovereign Lord the King, enjoin upon all persons amenable to the law of apprenticeship to be submissive and obedient to the same, as they shall answer to the contrary at their peril; and I furthermore summon His Majesty's officers, civil and military, and liege subjects, effectually to contribute towards promptly suppressing every show of resistance to the royal authority, in order that the King's most gracious pleasure in the premises may be carried within this His Majesty's Colony on and after the 1st day of August next into full and perfect execution.

Given under my hand and seal, at St. Christopher's, this 20th day of July 1834, and in the fifth year of His Majesty's reign.

God Save the King!

By his Excellency's command,
Felix Bedingfeld, Acting Private Secretary.

Enclosure 8, in No. 200.

Mr. President and Gentlemen of the Council,
Mr. Speaker and Gentlemen of the Assembly,

Enclosure 8, in No. 200.

THE proclamation, which I have caused to be published to the inhabitants, explains in detail the object of my present visit to this Island.

In return for the signal marks of royal favour about to be extended to them on the approaching abolition of slavery, certain evil-disposed negroes have recently displayed the deepest ingratitude towards the King, in presuming to treat with disrespect and contumely the veteran officer intrusted by His Majesty with the immediate administration of this government; and further, to avow an intention of resisting the new system of laws destined to operate the most beneficial changes in their social condition.

Misconduct such as this is calculated to rouse the indignation of every loyal and honourable mind, and unless speedily and effectually disclaimed by the mass of the labouring classes, classes, cannot fail irretrievably to injure them in the public estimation, and to involve them eventually in the most disastrous consequences. ST. CHRISTOPHER.

Mr. Speaker and Gentlemen of the Assembly,

Whatever auxiliary measures suitable to the occasion may fall within the peculiar province of your Honourable House for adoption in support of the Executive, I am persuaded will not be withheld, either during my stay, or from his Excellency the Lieut.-governor in my absence.

Mr. President and Gentlemen of the Council,

Mr. Speaker and Gentlemen of the Assembly,

The civil authorities and the commander of the King's naval and military forces, uniting their efforts in the service of the Crown, are resolved to maintain the internal tranquillity of these Colonies, to protect His Majesty's orderly and peaceable subjects, and to repress by the strong arm of power, if requisite, all opposition to the laws.

St. Christopher's, 21 July 1834.

Enclosure 9, in No. 200.

To his Excellency Sir E. J. Murray MacGregor, Bart., &c.

Sir,

We, the members of His Majesty's Council, beg leave to express to your Excellency our due appreciation of the promptitude with which your Excellency has repaired to this Island, for the purpose of dispelling the illusion which has lately existed in the minds of our labouring population. We feel assured that this measure, combined with the judicious explanation contained in your Excellency's proclamation, must have the effect of restoring to their accustomed obedience any portion of the inhabitants of this Colony who have hitherto been deceived as to the favourable results to themselves which the law for the abolition of slavery, by an intermediate state of apprenticeship, is so well calculated to produce. Enclosure 9, in No. 200.

We trust that the great mass of this class of our community will now so readily disclaim the misconduct to which your Excellency alludes, as to avert from themselves the just indignation and punishment in which any disobedience of the law must necessarily involve them.

We feel assured that under any circumstances the efforts of the civil authorities, supported as they will be by His Majesty's military and naval forces, must ensure the internal tranquillity and consequent happiness of all classes of the inhabitants of this ancient Colony.

Enclosure 10, in No. 200.

To his Excellency Sir E. J. Murray MacGregor, Bart., &c.

May it please your Excellency,

We, the members of the Commons House of Assembly of St. Christopher, lament exceedingly that your Excellency's visit to this part of your government has been rendered necessary by the disrespectful and contumelious conduct of evil-disposed negroes in this Colony to the veteran and respected officer entrusted by His Majesty with the immediate administration of this government, and by their avowed intention to resist the new system of laws, destined, if duly appreciated, to co-operate most beneficially upon their social condition. Enclosure 10, in No. 200.

We beg to thank your Excellency for your prompt exertions in behalf of this Colony, and gratified for the assurance that the civil authorities, and the commanders of the King's naval and military forces, uniting their efforts in the service of the Crown, resolve to maintain the internal tranquillity of these Colonies, to protect His Majesty's orderly and peaceable subjects, and to repress, by the strong arm of power, if necessary, all opposition to the laws. We beg to assure your Excellency of our hearty and individual determination to assist to the utmost of our power in supporting the laws of our country, and that your Excellency during your stay in this Island, and his Excellency the Lieut.-governor in your absence, shall be assisted by us in measures suitable to the occasion, which may fall within our peculiar province as the Commons Assembly of St. Christopher.

Sir, St. Christopher's, 22 July 1834.

No. 201. IT was reported in my Despatch of the 3d instant, that the 1st of August had been directed to be set apart in Antigua as a day of solemn thanksgiving to God for the abolition of slavery.

Mr. President Hamilton soon afterwards informed me that he meant to follow the like form in Montserrat; and at a hurried Privy Council, held after addressing the Legislature here yesterday, I was given to understand the House of Assembly had petitioned the Lieut.-governor against its adoption in St. Christopher's, on account of the late unruly conduct of the labourers.

I explained to the Privy Council, that however reluctant to contravene the wishes of the Assembly, it appeared to me exceedingly impolitic thus to confound the innocent with the guilty, or to assume that the whole working population fell under the latter denomination, and a very harsh proceeding not to permit the negroes to rest from labour on the day of their emancipation; that the Executive, if constrained to enforce compliance in such an instance, would be placed in a most painful predicament; and that I was the more particularly solicitous that every fair concession should be granted to the apprentices at the outset, in order to deprive them of all just grounds of complaint, should they think proper at last to place themselves in the wrong.

On this principle, of which I trust you will not see reason to disapprove, the Proclamation for a public thanksgiving, of which a copy is enclosed, has been published in this Island; and it is my present intention to cause the 1st of August to be observed in a similar manner in Nevis and the Virgin Islands.

A PROCLAMATION,

By His Excellency Sir Evan John Murray MacGregor, Bart. Governor.

Enclosure in No. 201. WHEREAS the working classes within this Island from and after the 1st day of August next, in consequence of the abolition of slavery, will be placed in a new state, which will confer upon them greater benefits than they have hitherto enjoyed, and it is considered expedient and proper that an opportunity should be afforded them of offering up thanks to Almighty God for his past mercies, and humble intercession for a continuance of His gracious care and favour.

Now, therefore, by and with the advice of His Majesty's Privy Council, I do hereby ordain and enjoin that Friday, the 1st day of August next, shall be kept and observed as a day of solemn thanksgiving to the Almighty, and that all the churches and chapels within this Island be opened at the usual times of morning service, and I confidently expect that the demeanour of the labouring classes will be distinguished by the temperance, moderation and decorum that should on so important and memorable an occasion mark the rejoicings of a Christian people, whilst the fear of offending the Almighty Being, whose power we are taught at all times to acknowledge, will deter them from any excess displeasing to him, and dangerous to their own peace and safety.

Sir, St. Christopher's, 5 August 1834.

No. 203.

I REGRET to be under the necessity of reporting that the resistance, on the part of the labouring population in this Island, to the laws is nearly general.

No. 1, 3 August 1834.

Mr. Solicitor-general Claxton's statement, of which a copy is enclosed, may serve to throw some light upon the situation in which the apprenticed labourers unfortunately have been induced to place themselves; and it will be observed from the accompanying Proclamations, that a reward has been offered for the detection of the persons who may have instigated them to the commission of this offence, while the painful alternative of resorting to martial law is seriously contemplated, unless the working classes shall speedily desist from their injurious opposition to legitimate authority.

Nos. 2 & 3, 4 August 1834.

It is of the utmost consequence that this rebellious spirit should be promptly subdued, which, according to advices this day received from the President of Montserrat, threatens, I regret to add, likewise to pervade that Colony; and it will afford me the highest satisfaction to be enabled to transmit by the succeeding opportunity more agreeable intelligence.

Enclosure 1, in No. 203.

Sir, St. Christopher's, 3 August 1834.

Enclosure 1, in No. 203.

IN compliance with your Excellency's desire, I shall endeavour to afford you all the information in my power respecting the state of the labouring population in this Island, and the cause of their present excitement. Until about six weeks ago, the peaceable demeanour of the slaves, and the cheerful and willing manner in which they performed their work, justified the belief that they would readily embrace the advantages which the intermediate system of apprenticeship was calculated to afford them, and be thereby gradually prepared for the enjoyment of unrestricted freedom. As however the time for this great change drew near, some of the planters considered it necessary to explain to their people more particularly the several points connected with it, and it was then discovered that there was a general feeling against the system of apprenticeship, and a determination to strike work on the 1st of August unless wages were given them. The Wesleyan and other missionaries, who have for a long time exercised a great and salutary influence over the minds of the great mass of our population, thought it their duty to explain to them the law, and to enforce the necessity of obedience to it. They were however treated in many instances with incivility, and they were disregarded in all. The impression on the minds of the slaves appeared to be that the Imperial Parliament had made them free, and that the system of apprenticeship originated in the Colonial Legislatures. The circumstance of the Legislature of Antigua, over which your Excellency personally presides, having determined on unrestricted emancipation, may have contributed to strengthen this delusion, and they fully expected that on your arrival here, their rights would no longer be withheld from them. The circumstance of Lord Romney having emancipated his slaves, nearly 300 in number, may have contributed to unsettle their minds. They also expressed an aversion against being bound as apprentices in consequence of a fear that they would thereby subject themselves to the continued labour and frequent punishments which they daily observe as the consequence of young persons becoming bound as apprentices to various trades, and they would not believe that the hours of their weekly labour were to be confined to 45, and that they were no longer subject to any punishment from their employer. His Excellency the Lieut.-governor then undertook to dispel their illusions by personally explaining to them the nature of the contemplated change in their condition; but he was received invariably with distrust, and in most instances with disrespect. There is little doubt that emissaries have been sent from the leading gangs to the others, for the purpose of confirming them in their

their determination to strike work after the 1st of August, and that the well-disposed and irresolute have been threatened with violence to their persons and destruction to their property if they pursued a different conduct. And it is to be lamented that the occasions and manner in which their missions have been conducted have hitherto remained undetected. In several instances these threats have been carried into execution, and persons expressing their satisfaction at the advantages afforded them, and endeavouring to explain them to others, have been severely beaten. The head people upon many estates, who have hitherto been considered confidential and trustworthy, have betrayed a reluctance to converse with their masters on this subject; and others have admitted the fact of the general combination to strike work. They continued to discharge their duties with their accustomed regularity even to the last day of July, and in the evening and night of that day, upon 12 or 14 estates, they deposited their hoes and bills near the dwelling-houses of their respective managers, thereby expressing their determination not again to use them; and on a great many estates, on Saturday the 2d of August, they refused to throw meat for the cattle and other stock, and the stock-minders to attend to their duties. The general impression is that no violence to persons or property is in the first instance contemplated, and that they will be guilty of no other infraction of the law than the settled refusal to return to their work. It is however to be feared that the necessary efforts to enforce their duties as apprenticed labourers will lead to a contrary conduct. There are however some estates on which the people have promised obedience to the laws; and although they are comparatively few, yet their example, supported by the civil and military authority, may have a salutary effect.

Sir E. J. Murray MacGregor, Bart.

Enclosure 2, in No. 203.

WHEREAS it has been represented to me, and I have the strongest reason to believe, that some persons have been wickedly employed in misleading the labouring classes of this Island, and inducing them to offer a combined resistance to the operation of the provisions of the Act passed for the Abolition of Slavery; and it is considered advisable to offer a reward for the discovery of such persons, with a view of bringing them to justice: Now, therefore, by and with the advice of His Majesty's Privy Council, I do hereby offer a reward of five hundred dollars, to be paid to any person who shall give such information as shall lead to the conviction of the person or persons who have originally and secretly instigated the labouring classes to resist and oppose the operation of the Act for the Abolition of Slavery, by misleading them as to its true intent and meaning, or otherwise: And I do hereby offer a further reward of fifty dollars, to be paid to any person who shall give such information as shall lead to the conviction of any person or persons who may be engaged in inducing the labouring classes to continue their opposition and resistance to the laws, whether by advice, intimidation or otherwise, provided that such information be given within one week from this date.

Enclosure 3, in No. 203.

WHEREAS it has been represented to me that the labouring classes upon very many of the estates in this Island are in a state of insubordination and resistance to the provisions of the Act of the Imperial Parliament for the Abolition of Slavery, and to the laws of this Island which have been passed for carrying the said Act into effect; and that it is the belief of the labouring classes that a mere absence from work, unaccompanied by any acts of violence, does not entail upon them any of the penalties of the law; whereas in fact, though no violence may be committed by any parties whose duty it is to render service to their employers in consideration of food, medical care, lodging and clothing, to refuse such service does subject all parties to the most severe penalties, and, in the event of martial law being proclaimed, possibly even to the punishment of death: And whereas it is considered expedient and advisable, for the purpose of reducing the said labouring classes to a proper state of obedience to the law, that martial law should be proclaimed: Now, therefore, fore, by and with the advice of His Majesty's Privy Council, I do hereby proclaim and make known, that unless the working classes within this Island do, on or before Wednesday next, the 6th day of August instant, conform to the laws so passed for their governance, by working obediently for their employers, as it is their duty to do, that martial law will be proclaimed, and that it will continue in force until they shall be reduced to obedience; and all persons are hereby warned at their peril not to be found offending herein, as they will then have only themselves to blame for the serious consequences that will inevitably ensue. EXTRACT of a DESPATCH from Mr. Secretary Spring Rice to Sir E. J. M. MacGregor, dated Downing-street, 6 Sept. 1834.

I LEARN with pleasure from Mr. Claxton's letter to you of the 3d August, that the Wesleyan and other missionaries had exerted themselves in St. Christopher's to explain the law to the negroes, and to enjoin obedience to it; and I cannot but entertain sanguine hopes that the continued efforts of the missionaries of all denominations will have been of effectual service in enabling you to arrest the struggle with which the Colony was threatened. No. 204.

The alternative which you suggest of martial law would be most painful, and would not be resorted to by you, I feel convinced, or even contemplated, without the most urgent and undeniable necessity. From the extent of resources now at your disposal, and the prudent firmness and resolution you have displayed, and which has met the unqualified approval of His Majesty's Government, I trust that tranquillity may have been restored at St. Christopher's before this Despatch reaches you.

HAVING acted, during the prevalence of martial law, as will appear from the Enclosures, on the suggestion of Captain Stewart, special magistrate, with respect to the commencement and close of the legal hours of labour in this Colony, the Governor is compelled to propose to your Honourable Board the adoption of a similar regulation, which, by surrendering Saturdays entirely to the working classes, may possibly present the Legislature with a convenient opening for effecting the abolition of Sunday markets, Enclosur 1, in No. 205.

I HAVE the honour to acquaint your Excellency, that in consequence of visiting "Taylor's estate," in this neighbourhood, by your desire, yesterday afternoon, the labourers have this morning gone to their work. Much dissatisfaction prevails from the circumstance that the commencement and close of the legal hours of labour are not fixed by law. The immediate attention of the Legislature to this point I humbly conceive to be most desirable; and by adopting, as nearly as possible, one uniform system throughout the Island, much good might be effected, should the same meet with the cordial support of the respective employers.

Enclosure 3, in No. 205.

WHEREAS it has been represented to me that the periods during which the apprenticed labourers in this Island are to render to their employers, 45 hours of labour in every week, are not defined by law: and whereas it is considered expedient that one uniform system upon this subject should be enforced throughout the Island during the period of martial law; Now, therefore, by virtue of the authority in me vested, I do proclaim and make known, that the said hours of labour shall be from six o'clock in the morning until eight; from nine until twelve; and from two until six o'clock, on the first five days in the week, whereby the apprenticed labourer will have finished his hours of work on the afternoon of Friday; and I do hereby enjoin obedience to this regulation on all persons having the charge of apprenticed labourers on the several estates in this Island, during the said period of martial law, as they will answer to the contrary at their peril.

Sir, Downing-street, 16 Oct. 1834.

No. 206.

I HAVE received your Despatch of the 19th August, respecting the proposed regulation to fix particular hours for the labour of the apprentices at St. Kitt's. As it was not in your power to do more than to report the suggestion you had made to the Legislature, without informing me whether such suggestion had been adopted, I am not aware that this communication calls for any particular observation on my part, beyond the expression of my opinion, that except under extraordinary circumstances, such as those which have existed at St. Kitt's, the arrangements of the hours of labour had better be left to the mutual wants and conveniences of employers and labourers, in place of being made the matter of regulation and enactment.

I am not, however, inclined to doubt but that the local information which you have had the means of obtaining has warranted the conclusion to which you have come.

Copy of a DESPATCH from Governor Sir E. J. Murray MacGregor, Bart., to Mr. Secretary Spring Rice.

Sir, St. Christopher's, 19 August 1834.

In my Despatch of the 5th August it was stated that the alternative of martial law was seriously contemplated, and from the enclosed documents it will be ascertained to have been resorted to, on the 6th inst., in compliance with the recommendation of His Majesty's Privy Council, (see Enclosures, Nos. 1, 2 and 3.) No. 207. 4 & 6 August 1834.

The proceedings which followed until the re-establishment of civil authority will be found detailed in the remainder of the accompanying papers, numbered from 4 to 18; No. 11 containing the Minutes of His Majesty's Privy Council of this day's date, wherein it is recorded that, 9 to 19 Aug. 1834.

"The members of the Board concurred in opinion that there was every reason to believe that the present state of tranquillity was likely to continue, Mr. President Crooke, alone dissenting."

It is likewise satisfactory to find that this sentiment is cherished by the Rev. D. G. Davis, Rector of St. George's; the Rev. D. Bigler, Moravian missionary, and also by the Rev. J. Cox, Wesleyan missionary, who has "just made a journey round the Island, that he may be enabled to speak more accurately on this subject." (Enclosures, Nos. 6, 7 and 8.)

My own impression respecting it is contained in the Minutes of Council, No. 11, but I have judged it advisable to leave in Basseterre the company of His Majesty's 36th regiment which proceeded with me from this garrison to that place, in the vicinity of which Captain Daniell will continue so long as it may appear to him requisite, and then repair to English Harbour, in Antigua, with His Majesty's brig Despatch, in order to refit; after which, that vessel will be disposable for eventual service in the Leeward Islands.

Previously to the termination of martial law, I directed a general movement of His Majesty's and the militia forces upon the mountains of the interior, in order to convince the negroes, said to be concealed there, that their haunts are at any time accessible by troops. Markus, the "King of the Woods," described in Enclosure No. 5, was seen, and would have been seized by a military party, had not their guide discovered himself prematurely to that fugitive.

To Major Brooke of the 67th regiment, on whom, as well as on several othe King's officers, militia brevet rank was conferred, I am highly indebted for his zealous services; and to one of my aides-de-camp of militia, Lieut.-colonel Woodcock, who acted as brigade-major, chiefly in the Cayon district, and the senior King's counsel here, it is my duty to entreat your favourable attention, should an opportunity offer of promoting in the latter capacity his professional views.

The Circular, No. 4, shows that early endeavours were exerted to bring the labourers to a returning sense of duty, and to dispense with punishment. During the active operations of the troops but one apprentice has been shot; and a letter from the Judge Advocate General is accompanied by a return, exhibiting results of general courts-martial held under my authority, Nos. 9 and 10, by which five persons were condemned to banishment for life, who embarked yesterday accordingly for Bermuda in His Majesty's schooner Pickle.

All circumstances considered, it will appear to you, I earnestly hope, that the insubordination in this Island, so fraught with peril at this crisis to the surrounding Colonies, has been checked with as little asperity as could have been well anticipated. Several of the apprenticed labourers personally assured me of their contrition; and between 80 and 90, whom my concluding proclamation released from the gaol of Basseterre, requested the Rev. Mr. Davies to convey to me the expression of their thanks and gratitude.

I am now about to re-embark for Antigua in His Majesty's ship Belvidera.

Robert Claxton, Esq.

His Excellency the Governor wished to consult the Council as to the propriety of offering a reward for the discovery of the instigators to the present opposition to the law among the labouring classes.

After some deliberation, it was resolved to advise his Excellency to offer a reward of 500 dollars to any person who shall give such information as shall lead to the conviction of the person or persons who have originally and secretly instigated the labouring classes to oppose or resist the operation of the Act for the Abolition of Slavery, by misleading them as to its true intent and meaning, or otherwise.

And that a further reward be offered of 50 dollars, to be paid to any person who shall give such information as shall lead to the conviction of any person or persons who may be engaged in inducing the labouring classes to continue their opposition to the laws, whether by advice, intimidation or otherwise, provided that such information be given within one week from this date.

His Excellency asked the opinion of the Board, whether, if the present measures fail, it would be advisable to proclaim martial law.

Resolved, that it would be advisable; whereupon his Excellency directed a proclamation to be prepared.

By his Excellency Sir Evan J. Murray MacGregor, Bart., &c. &c. &c.

Enclosure 3, in No. 207.

Whereas by a proclamation under my hand and seal, dated the 20th July last past, I did, in the name of our Sovereign Lord the King, enjoin upon all persons amenable to the law of apprenticeship to be submissive and obedient to the same, as they should answer to the contrary at their peril.

And whereas by a proclamation, dated the 4th day of August inst., I did proclaim and make known, that unless the labouring classes within this Island did, on or before Wednesday then next ensuing, conform to the laws passed for their governance, by working obediently for their employers, that martial law would be proclaimed.

And whereas it hath been represented to me that the said labouring classes, regardless of the proclamation above mentioned, and the warnings therein contained, are in a state of insubordination bordination and open resistance to the provisions of the Act of the Imperial Parliament for the Abolition of Slavery, and the laws of this Island which have been passed for carrying the said Act into effect: Now, therefore, by and with the advice of His Majesty's Privy Council, in the name of our Sovereign Lord the King, and by virtue of the power and authority in me vested, I do proclaim martial law to be in force within the Island of St. Christopher forthwith, and to continue in force until due obedience to the law shall have been effected, and until further order be made herein; and that during the continuance of martial law, all persons in the said Island are subject to the same, of which they are to take notice and govern themselves accordingly. ST. CHRISTOPHER.

Given under my hand and seal at arms, at St. Christopher, this 6th day of August 1834, and in the fifth year of His Majesty's reign.

By his Excellency's command.

Enclosure 4, in No. 207.

Sir, Basseterre, 9 August 1834.

It has been suggested by his Excellency the Governor Sir Evan MacGregor, that if confidential persons were sent to the runaways still out, informing them, that should they be at work on Monday morning, no notice will be taken of their conduct during the present week, it would produce the effect of restoring order on the estates. Enclosure 4, in No. 207.

In this case, it would be desirable to have a return from every estate sent in to his Excellency on Monday of the persons absent from work that morning, and that in the meantime no further punishments be inflicted. This amnesty will of course not extend to persons who appear to have been ringleaders, or guilty of any marked violence of the law; and any who still remain out on that day will take the consequence of their continued disobedience.

Enclosure 5, in No. 207.

Sir, Cuninghams, 11 August 1834.

In compliance with the circular of the 9th instant, I beg to inform you, that all the people on this estate are at work, except James alias Buller, who was so desperate a character, that I felt it my duty to lodge him in gaol by the civil authorities, previous to the 1st of August, and a man named Markus, an African, a most daring and dangerous character, who has been absent three years, and has always been a runaway, goes by the title of King of the Woods, has been condemned for murder, has now a charge of felony, under Lord Ellenborough's Act, hanging over his head, and, as I am credibly informed, (only by hearsay evidence, but which I believe,) that he has a gang of 30 and upwards under his command in the mountains. His usual haunts are from Stones Fort to Vembell Mountains. He has a musket in his possession, and is very skilful in the use thereof. No order may be expected in the country unless he is taken. For further particulars of his character, apply to Major John Rawlins and Colonel Harper. Enclosure 5, in No. 207.

Enclosure 6, in No. 207.

Sir, St. George's, Basseterre, 13 Aug. 1834.

In compliance with your Excellency's desire, I now state the impressions made on my mind by my general observation, and by the intercourse which, as a clergyman, I have had at different times, and under various circumstances, with the labouring classes, as to the causes of the late unfortunate disturbances among them. Enclosure 6, in No. 207.

I think that there can be little reason to doubt, that on the first promulgation in the Island of the Act of Parliament for the Abolition of Slavery, that many of the then slaves felt keenly disappointed that it provided, in the first instance, a transition stage, called apprenticeship, and consequently did not at once convey to them the full rights of free men. It was also difficult in many cases to make them fully comprehend the entire consistency of a state denominated freedom with the legal necessity of labouring for the benefit of others, without contract or consent. This feeling of disappointment, as I fear, was increased in its bitterness by the imprudent manner in which the new system, designed to displace the old, was spoken of by some persons jealous of parting with personal power, as conferring no greater advantages, and even as more rigorous in its nature. The then slaves themselves also may be considered as having conceived an unfavourable opinion of the new condition in which they were to be placed by the law, by assimilating it in their minds minds to ordinary apprenticeships, the hardships of which they may have in some unfavourable cases witnessed. All these causes, however, of dissatisfaction may have been happily and easily overcome; and in very many instances I have reason to believe that in my humble efforts I had been successful to this end. But the course which the Legislature of Antigua pursued, in conferring immediate and unrestricted freedom on its slaves, had the effect of impressing those of this Island with the conviction that that was in reality the measure of the Government, and that your Excellency's presence as the Governor-general had been the reason why full justice had been done there, while the apprenticeship was the invention of the Legislature of this Island, designed, in effect, for the continuation of slavery and of its benefits to the planter, while the name of freedom was given for the satisfaction of the mother country. The voluntary relinquishment of the apprenticeship by Earl Romney, an extensive proprietor of this Island, resident in England, whose intention became generally known some few months before the 1st of August, served in no small degree to confirm this erroneous persuasion. This impression, once strongly made, it was difficult to shake; and then it was that the efforts of persons in the highest authority and most exalted situations, even of His Excellency the Lieutenant-governor and of the ministers of religion, were unavailing, and the manifestation of it on many occasions burst forth.

Though, however, I am fully persuaded that all these causes have severally concurred in producing the unhappy results which your Excellency has witnessed, yet I was not without the suspicion that some of the most discontented among the labourers had used their efforts to induce a combined, though not violent resistance to the intermediate stage to entire liberty, called by the law, apprenticeship, in the hope of thus attaining the great object of their ardent wishes, unrestricted freedom and a regular system of wages. The trials of two or three persons under martial law have served, as your Excellency knows, to confirm this suspicion: I trust, and have no reason at present to entertain any other sentiment, that the delusion has had no higher or more guilty origin.

I cannot conclude without adding, that while the philanthropist must look back with regret to that conduct of the labouring classes in this Island, which has prevented an entirely peaceable transition from slavery, and with sorrow on the measures which were deemed necessary to suppress disorder, he may retain the stable ground of rejoicing that there has occurred no instance of violence to the persons or destruction to the property of the masters. And I would say, that it is my persuasion that even that degree of instruction and religious knowledge which has been in different ways conveyed has had this powerfully restraining influence. I have every reason then to hope, that as misconception has been now corrected and delusion dissipated by the presence and active exertions of your Excellency, and the co-operation of His Majesty's land and naval forces, and by other means, a discreet and temperate conduct on the part of those having the management of estates will soon restore quiet among the labourers and harmony between them and their employers. We may thus derive the assurance that a repetition of the evil we have witnessed is not very probable.

To His Excellency Sir Evan John Murray MacGregor, Bart., &c. &c. &c.

May it please your Excellency,

Enclosure 1, in No. 207.

THROUGH the Hon. and Rev. D. G. Davis I have been apprised that it is the desire of your Excellency to be made acquainted with the opinion of the missionaries of the United Brethren's Society in St. Kitt's as to the probable causes of the late rebellion or insurrectionary movements of the slave population.

I beg leave to say, that in the accompanying statement I am, from unavoidable circumstances, necessitated to give my single opinion, as I should not be able in time to furnish your Excellency with that of my colleagues stationed in St. Mary's, Cayon and St. John's, (near Deep Bay.)

Having within the last few days had a conversation with the Hon. and Rev. gentleman above named on the very subject on which I am now called to express my opinion, I was gratified in perceiving that we entirely concurred in ascribing to the same causes the late misconduct of the slaves. I have this day learnt from that gentleman that he has, agreeably to your Excellency's desire, furnished a statement of his opinion; so that I apprehend the present may prove but a recapitulation. I beg leave, however, briefly to say, that in my humble opinion the primary cause of the late disturbances was a disappointment of the expectations, universally entertained by the slaves, that when the Act of Abolition had passed it would confer absolute and unrestricted emancipation; for they were often heard to say, "Now we shall soon get our freedom."

As the final adjustment of the slave question seemed long at issue, their eagerness and impatience grew proportionally strong; so that on the arrival of almost every packet in our roadstead, they did not scruple to say, "That has brought our papers," meaning their emancipation. This, I believe, was the state of their minds up to the arrival of the late Royal Proclamation.

His

ST. CHRISTOPHER.

His Excellency, our esteemed Lieutenant-governor, Colonel Nixon, in transmitting to us a copy of the Act for the Abolition of Slavery and copies of the Royal Proclamation, sent also circulars, containing written instructions, earnestly requesting us to explain it to that portion of our congregation then held in slavery. In obedience to that request, the Proclamation was read and explained in a public meeting of the congregation; and, lest there might remain a single doubt on the minds of any, they were invited to call on us at any time for further explanation. A few availed themselves of the opportunity; and, after explaining again the nature of their new relations, seemed satisfied. But as we took occasion to inquire from time to time, we found, to our great grief, that the prejudice against the terms "apprenticeship" and "bound," used in the Act, was so great, that our interference to rectify their mistaken notions was deemed uncalled-for; and they obstinately persisted in their belief that His Majesty the King had given them their liberty, but that their owners or superiors here wished to bind them again as apprentices.

The proceedings of the Legislature of Antigua having become generally known among them at this time, appeared to confirm them in this opinion, and has undoubtedly very largely contributed to their disaffection.

In addition to this, the case of Earl Romney might be mentioned, giving the boon, which all expected, to a considerable number of slaves on his estates, was not without its influence.

We cannot but deeply regret the late misconduct of the slaves; but, at the same time, we feel truly grateful to the God of all mercies that we have been spared both from experiencing violence to our persons and property, and from witnessing it in that of our fellow-creatures. We rejoice, too, that by the able and indefatigable exertions of your Excellency and those under your command that peace and order seem to be restored.

Though a decided opinion as to the future conduct of the slaves may at this time be deemed premature, yet if we may judge from the cheerful countenances and manners of the many I have seen flocking to the market on Saturday, and if we may rest satisfied as to the future discretion of those holding apprenticed labourers, I think we have no reason to apprehend a recurrence of such scenes of dissatisfaction and insubordination as we have witnessed since the 1st of August.

In conclusion, I beg leave to congratulate your Excellency on your convalescence, and to assure you of my sincere wishes for your Excellency's health and happiness.

I am, &c.

(signed) David Bigler,

17 August 1834. Missionary of the United Brethren in Basseterre, St. Kitt's.

Enclosure 8, in No. 207.

To His Excellency Sir Evan J. M. MacGregor, Bart., &c. &c. &c.

Sir, Wesleyan Mission House, St. Christopher, 18 Aug. 1834.

I HAVE received a communication from your Excellency, through your Excellency's secretary, desiring me to state my opinion as to the causes of the late unhappy commotions among the apprenticed labourers in this Island, and as to the probable consequences of the measures which have been adopted to suppress them. Enclosure 8, in No. 207.

With as much brevity as possible, I proceed to comply with your Excellency's request.

1. The principal cause of the whole was unquestionably a deeply-rooted and very general conviction that "the King" had given them unrestricted freedom, and that their masters had imposed the apprenticeship system. We combatted this sentiment; but, after all our careful and particular explanations of the matter on the estates on which we preach, and in our chapels, we could not in some cases succeed in eradicating this most delusive notion.

2. My second cause may also be considered as a cause of the first. The unrestricted emancipation of the people of Antigua most naturally assisted in generating the abovementioned error. They readily concluded that had justice been done to them, they also would have been equally free. This I regard as a most prolific source of misapprehension; and greatly do I regret that the judicious measure of that Island was not imitated here.

3. My third reason is the total liberation of Lord Romney's people, and its publicity a long time before it was officially announced to them. This I deem highly impolitic. Had it been immediately promulged, I think less suspicion would have been excited; and your Excellency is aware, that in a small community like this, suspicious fears are extremely contagious, and greatly distort the truth.

4. One or two gentlemen announced their intention to dispense with the apprenticeship system, and pay their people. In this and the preceding cause your Excellency will perceive a want of uniformity, so productive of confusion at such a period, and on such a subject. This led the negroes to suppose that some of the proprietors were complying with "the King's law," and others violating it.

5. I attach some importance to the non-arrival of the other two magistrates destined for this Island. The negroes have clearly understood that three were coming from England for the special purpose of superintending the execution of the provisions of the Imperial Act, and one only has arrived. In this time of fear and suspicion, such an apparently trivial matter has some influence; and I think it highly probable, that had the special magistrates, just from England, arrived in time to have gone through the Island, and explained the law and warned the unruly, this mischief might have been prevented.

6. That a few incendiaries from among the negroes themselves have been peregrinating the land, and too successful in striving to excite disaffection among them, in persuading them obstinately to disbelieve what the ministers of religion or any others should say on the subject of the apprenticeship, and in endeavouring to effect a combination of passive resistance to the law, I can no longer doubt. This conviction arises as well from other causes as from my observations on the trials of two or three principal offenders and ring-leaders in promoting seditious feelings. These trials I attended throughout, and carefully noted the nature and value of the evidence. How far the preceding and following causes may have been effectually employed by such unprincipled men in forwarding their machinations, and how suited they were for such a nefarious purpose, will be sufficiently obvious to your Excellency's penetration.

7. That the bitter taunts and woful predictions with respect to the alteration in our social state of some persons opposed to the emancipation of the negroes have produced great disquietude in their minds, is generally admitted. Thus the new system has been arrayed in such a hideous and forbidding aspect, that many of the people have almost feared it as worse than slavery. Instead of being represented as a blessing, it has been so caricatured as really to justify or excuse a suspicion in their minds that it could never have originated with the people of England. And the indifference of too many about furnishing a kind and conciliatory, as well as a just and correct exposé of the new plan, before the 1st August, and on the morning of the 4th August also, was, I think, another source of evil, and a reason too why our expositions of it were in some cases doubted. But I may not enlarge upon this topic. Your Excellency will, I hope, give me credit for real regret in being obliged to assign such a cause as this; but I could not in justice omit it. I do not pretend to determine on the motives to such injudicious conduct: of the vexatious results I am, alas! too certain.

8. That so many were involved in it arose, I apprehend, from fear of the disaffected, by whom they were overawed, and from thoughtlessness in the young, who imitated examples, and acted without motive or consideration.

9. Your Excellency, I hope, will not consider me as impeaching the wisdom of His Majesty's Government when I assign as another cause for our late troubles the title and anomalous constitution of the apprenticeship system. Erroneous notions were engendered by the very name, which, in their minds, associated their future untried state with relationships around them of a similar title, conducted with such despotic government, as, coupled with the unjust insinuations of others, filled them with dismay. And it was difficult to make them understand how they could be "discharged of and from all manner of slavery, and absolutely and for ever manumitted," and yet to be compelled to work the greater part of their time for the same masters without adequate wages. Freedom and compulsory labour, without payment, and for no crime, appeared to them incongruous. The Act, too, assured them that the King "had appropriated a large sum of money for their freedom;" and I have been often asked how to reconcile this fact with the truth, that they must still work for their former owners in the above-mentioned manner; and all my attempts to show that the apprenticeship was a part payment for absolute unconditional freedom were in some cases unsatisfactory. I am fully persuaded, therefore, that had the term "slavery" been retained, with the modifications of the present system, it would have been productive of far less confusion.

10. But after all which may be said, I cannot exonerate many of the offenders from the charge of a proud and wilful disobedience to the law, clearly understood, with a secret hope that it would not be enforced; while the total absence of any violent resistance, and of any attempt to fire, or destruction of property, showed they only wanted perfect personal liberty and wages, and preposterously hoped they may be obtained by passive disobedience and clamour.

These, Sir, are the reasons which have occurred to my mind in pondering the origin of our late excitement; and while I sincerely regret it, I at the same time greatly rejoice that so many remained firm at the post of duty, and used their efforts (and in many cases successfully too) to prevent the defection of others. I regard it as a signal triumph of moral and religious principle.

I do not by any means attach equal importance to all the preceding reasons. The 1st, 2d, 3d, 6th, 7th, 9th and 10th, appear to me primary causes; the others accessory.

I proceed to consider the second part of your Excellency's inquiry, "What will be the probable consequences of the measures which have been adopted to suppress these disturbances?" I have every reason to believe they have been, and will be, in general, salutary. But this greatly depends on a just, and mild, and judicious use of that authority which our labouring population have been compelled to believe their masters do still possess. I have just made a journey round the Island, that I may be enabled to speak more accurately on this subject; and it is with unspeakable pleasure I report to your Excellency, that so far as I have ascertained, deep regret and self-condemnation, and a desire to please, are the prevailing emotions among the misguided offenders, generally unmixed with sullenness or irritation. I have everywhere heard from all classes, with scarcely an exception, the most encouraging statements of the promptitude and alacrity with which the apprenticed labourers attend to their duties. Convinced beyond a doubt that the system is the law, and the "King's law" too, they seem resolved to submit, and expressions of deep contrition at their folly abound among the guilty, and of gratulation and thanksgiving among among the innocent at their escape from trouble. And it is worthy of notice, that there are now more people at work on the several properties than have been known for many years. I cherish the hope, that by a careful and mutual attention to the provisions of the law, our tranquillity will be permanent. ST. CHRISTOPHER.

I cannot conclude without taking leave to express to your Excellency the abundant satisfaction which I, in common with very many in this community, have felt in your Excellency's presence and government at this important juncture, and in the wisdom and promptitude and success of the measures which your Excellency has adopted to effect the restoration of our tranquillity, and my gratitude to Almighty God for the accomplishment of that object without the effusion of blood, except in one solitary instance; and most sincerely do I pray, from a conviction of its importance, founded on an attentive observation of your Excellency's measures, that these Islands may long be favoured with the benefit of your Excellency's liberal and enlightened administration.

May the Lord of heaven and earth have your Excellency in his most holy keeping.

I have, &c.

Enclosure 9, in No. 207.

Sir, Basseterre, 19 Aug. 1834.

I HAVE the honour to enclose a return of the number of trials for offences committed during the existence of martial law in this Island, from the 6th to the 18th of this present month of August, and the sentence passed in each case. Enclosure 9, in No. 207.

In answer to your Excellency's inquiry, "To what cause I attribute the late conduct of the labouring classes?" I have to state, that the evidence which has been adduced before me leads me to think that the apprenticeship system was not, in the first instance, liked by the negroes; and I very much suspect that some designing persons, taking advantage of that feeling, instilled into their minds the false idea that a determined resistance to the laws would secure to them a state of entire freedom and exemption from all work; and I think that the instigators must have been most active and watchful in their endeavours, as, notwithstanding the various threats of burning and poisoning which were, long antecedently to the 1st of August, held out by the negroes, yet when your Excellency arrived here, and timely assisted us with a strong force, their threats ceased, and passive resistance was resorted to, in opposition to the repeated warnings and proclamations of your Excellency.

It is to be hoped that the late examples, which have been so necessarily made, and the prompt assistance afforded by your Excellency, will have the desired effect; but so uncertain is the negro character, that I cannot form any opinion whether they will or will not venture on a repetition of their late resistance.

AT a Meeting of the Privy Council, held in Basseterre, on Tuesday the 19th day of August 1834;

Present,

His Excellency Sir E. J. M. MacGregor, Bart., Governor, &c. &c. &c.
His Excellency J. L. Nixon, Esq., Lieut.-governor, &c. &c. &c.

R. Claxton, Esq.
J. T. Caines, Esq. M. D.

18 August 1834. WITH reference to the proceedings of the Board of the 4th and 6th instant, recommending recourse to martial law, the Governor communicates to the Board his Proclamation for the discontinuance of martial law, and in taking leave of the Privy Council, trusts it will not again become his duty to repair to St. Christopher's on account of any internal disturbance, but should such an unlooked-for event recur as the necessity of proclaiming martial law, he will endeavour to regain his post without delay.

The Governor has not discharged the alarm existing at his arrival, considering it inadvisable that the militia should be immediately relieved from duty, and more prudent that the strength at each post should be gradually diminished according to circumstances, so as to be at last almost imperceptibly dissipated.

On the same principle, that the appearance of naval force may be kept up, his Excellency the Vice-admiral commanding having had the kindness to attach a ship of war to the seat of the Leeward Island Government, Captain Strong, at the Governor's request, will direct His Majesty's brig Despatch, Captain Daniell, to remain off Basseterre for the present.

From what had fallen under his personal observation, and adverting to accounts from Trinidad, the Governor deems it proper to record his strong impression that the influence of the public authorities should be considerately exerted in conciliating the negro population, and in endeavouring to divest the lower order of Europeans employed in their management of prejudices contracted under the previous condition of the labouring classes, as well as of the feelings of resentment recently created by the dissension that has prevailed since the abolition of slavery in the commencement of the present month.

It may also be proper to mention at this Board, what cannot so conveniently form matter of communication to the Houses of the Legislature, that application for courts-martial from various quarters have been exceedingly numerous, but that, however natural the desire of bringing their refractory dependents to trial might be on the part of the proprietors, the Executive was bound to be guided by considerations of a higher nature.

It has been urged by some persons that sentences inflicted by order of the courts-martial were in some parts of the country perhaps too harsh. It is certainly possible that this may have been the case; but it is a difficulty against which, under similar circumstances, there are at the outset no means of protection. From a state of profound peace the militia were suddenly thrown into active service, and many persons, who in all likelihood never opened a law book, found themselves members of courts-martial. They were engaged against rebels, who are liable to be acted on by the punishments awarded by such courts, and they were ignorant of the force, designs and arrangements of their opponents, and unable to anticipate what the morrow might produce. Thus situated, although it is to be regretted if a few individuals have been chastised with undue severity, still it is to be recollected that the prompt application of flogging may have saved the very persons so flogged from being shot.

Had martial law endured for a longer term, the irregularities adverted to would have been prevented by suitable arrangements, and as it was, they were checked as soon as they were suspected.

These observations relate to the out-stations; but in reverting to the first part of this statement, it is to be remarked that martial law must have been kept up for a month in order to meet the wishes of the candidates for prosecution; that, in the Governor's opinion, an increase in the quantity of punishments would have tended to diminish their effect; that of secondary sentences, enough seems to him to have been passed; and that by pardoning numbers, he hopes to have secured the gratitude of some, while the transportation of certain notorious offenders answers the double purpose of serious example, and of ridding the country in its present state of dangerous inmates.

At all hazards, it appeared imperative on the Executive to use every effort for the expulsion of the mass of the population from the woods. Their continuance therein for any length of time must have served to place them more immediately than ever under the influence of the mischievous ringleaders by whom they have been deceived; excesses must have followed, which would necessarily have produced collision with the troops, and consequently the probable extensive destruction of life and property. Nor were the interests of St. Christopher's alone at stake; those of the other Colonies under the system of apprenticeship were exposed to the influence of her example. Every inducement therefore conspired to prompt the Governor in crushing the threatened evil in the bud; nor has he shunned any responsibility responsibility promising to prove conducive to that end. According to the best of his information and belief, order will be preserved in this Island, unless the discontented negroes in Trinidad should unfortunately have it in their power to oppose powerful and lengthened resistance to the new order of things, which may keep up an unsettled spirit amongst the apprenticed labourers in other places. ST. CHRISTOPHER.

His Excellency the Governor asked the opinion of the Board as to the probable continuance of tranquillity. The members of the Board concurred in opinion that there was every reason to believe that the present state of tranquillity was likely to continue, Mr. President Crooke alone dissenting.

St. Christopher's.

A PROCLAMATION,

By his Excellency Sir E. J. M. Macgregor, Baronet, &c. &c. &c.

Enclosure 12, in No. 207.

WHEREAS the labouring class of the population of this Island having betrayed an insensibility to the advantages, and an inclination to elude the duties assigned to them under the Statute of the Imperial Parliament for the Abolition of Slavery, by the substitution of an intermediate system of apprenticeship, every effort was made by the public authorities to disabuse their minds of those impressions, which had been instilled into them by wicked and designing persons: And whereas, on the 4th day of August instant, the labourers attached to the various estates, with few exceptions, having refused to perform their tasks, and having withdrawn themselves from the service of their employers, it was, by my Proclamation of that date, made known that unless they did on or before Wednesday next ensuing, conform to the laws passed for their governance, pursuant to the provisions of the aforesaid Statute of the Imperial Parliament, the law martial must be resorted to: And whereas, notwithstanding such public warning, their continued contumacious conduct did at length cause martial law to be proclaimed, in consequence whereof many of them have incurred severe but necessary punishments, and some even that of banishment for the remainder of their lives: And whereas the said offenders having been reduced to obey the laws, now proceed, as in duty bound, to labour as apprentices; I do therefore, by virtue of the authority in me vested, proclaim and announce that from and after this 18th day of August instant, martial law within this Island shall cease and be at an end: And whereas it is hereby enjoined on all transgressing apprenticed labourers, as the readiest and most effectual mode of manifesting contrition for their late misconduct, and of endeavouring to regain that confidence which they must be conscious of having deservedly forfeited, to yield in future a willing and becoming submission to their employers during the working hours prescribed by law; it is likewise earnestly recommended to the said employers and directors of estates to draw the veil of oblivion, as far as may be practicable, over the misguided proceedings of their dependents: And whereas, although recent experience must have convinced the labouring classes that His Majesty's officers will never hesitate to enforce the Royal authority upon the refractory and disobedient, however numerous, yet at the same time, our most Gracious Sovereign being always benignantly disposed to exercise clemency and mercy, I do, therefore, in the King's name, hereby further grant and proclaim a general amnesty to all persons offending in the premises, not actually under sentence; and I fully expect that the apprentices will show themselves worthy of this lenity by hereafter rendering due obedience to his Excellency the Lieut.-governor and the constituted authorities of the Colony, and that proprietors and the higher orders of society, by a strict and careful adherence to the several legislative enactments destined for the general benefit, will afford the laudable example of that exact observance of the laws which it is imperative on all His Majesty's subjects, as well as their true interests, implicitly to follow, as the sole means, under existing circumstances, of obviating a recurrence to the alternative of military rule.

Given under my hand and seal, at St. Christopher's, this 18th day of August, in the year of our Lord 1834, and in the fifth year of His Majesty's reign.

By his Excellency's command.

General Orders.

Basseterre, St. Christopher's, 18 August 1834.

By His Excellency the Governor.

Enclosure 13, in No. 207.

THE circumstances requiring the presence in the field of His Majesty's forces having happily ceased, the Governor with pleasure publicly recognises the excellent discipline, good conduct, energy, and proper moderation they have invariably evinced throughout the course of the late service.

To Major Brooke, commanding, the Governor's approbation and best acknowledgments are expressed, with the request that they may be likewise intimated to Captain Elton and ST. CHRISTOPHER. Lieutenant Reeves, in command of detachments of His Majesty's 67th and 36th regiments, as well as to the other officers and to the troops employed.

The Governor's thanks are tendered at the same time to Lieutenant Taylor, the fort adjutant, with whose able and diligent discharge of his duties his Excellency has every reason to be pleased.

By order of His Excellency the Governor,

Militia General Orders.

Basseterre, St. Christopher's, 18 August 1834.

Enclosure 14, in No. 207.

MARTIAL law being fortunately about to terminate, the Governor, in taking leave of the St. Christopher's militia, is persuaded that a more acceptable compliment cannot be paid to that force than the publication in general orders of the following report respecting them, addressed on the 16th instant to his Excellency by Brigadier-general Brooke.

(Extract.)

I have now the honour of performing a most pleasing and imperative duty towards the officers, non-commissioned officers and privates whom I had the good fortune to command in the carrying into effect the arrangements and plans submitted by your Excellency for the restoration of peace and good order in the Colony. However incompetent I am to do justice to their services and my feelings on the occasion, I will rest satisfied that my endeavours and wish to do so will be justly appreciated by all. In conveying to your Excellency the lasting impressions made upon my mind of the obligations I am under to the troops of the line, the artillery, militia and cavalry, for their co-operation, the zeal, spirit, and determination evinced by them in carrying into immediate effect my commands for the different movements, it would be invidious in me to select from the several corps any individual for your Excellency's particular notice and consideration; for to the officers, non-commissioned officers and privates of the 67th regiment, under the command of Major Elton; to the officers, non-commissioned officers and privates of the 36th regiment, under the command of Captain Reeve; to the officers, non-commissioned officers and privates of the two companies of colonial artillery, under the commands of Captains Hardsman and Richards (particularly to the former officer); to the officers, non-commissioned officers and privates of the Windward and Leeward battalions of militia, under the commands of Lieut.-colonels Harper and Rawlins; to the officers, non-commissioned officers and privates of the two troops of cavalry, under the commands of Captains Wattlez and Fahie, and to the officers of the staff, my warmest thanks and acknowledgments are due.

By a few of my personal staff my particular and marked acknowledgments are demanded for the valuable and ready assistance in their different situations, to which I beg to call your Excellency's attention. To my brigade-major, the Hon. Mr. Speaker Burt, who acted in his situation on the leeward side of the Island, I feel myself deeply indebted for the success of my operations at the commencement of my command. The talent and ability evinced by the honourable gentleman in military tactics would be creditable to any of the profession. His valuable assistance was not alone confined to his military knowledge; for without taking into consideration the loss that might accrue to himself by the adoption of the plans laid down for bringing the apprenticed labourers of his estate to a sense of their duty and usual occupations, he at once entered into them, and considering with me the necessity of destroying the negro huts of those that were absent, a plan which had previously been adopted with success on another property, he cordially co-operated in the execution of it on his own, which having the desired effect of showing the gangs of the several estates the consequence resulting to them by their absence, they at once returned to their duty in obedience to the laws; and the honourable gentleman now declares that he enjoys the advantages and benefits arising out of his prompt and decisive co-operation with me in effecting your Excellency's wishes. To Lieut.-colonel Woodcock, A. D. C. to your Excellency, who acted as brigade-major on the windward side of the Island, I am also deeply indebted for the valuable information and assistance he afforded me. By his talent and knowledge in military correspondence, I was saved much time and trouble. I cannot speak too highly of his activity and manner of carrying into effect my commands and arrangements for the different movements; and his having, in the capacity of captain of the grenadier company of the Windward battalion, subdued the spirit of insubordination in the whole of the Cayon district, greatly accelerated the completion of your Excellency's commands. To Major Rawlins of the Leeward battalion of militia, I am much indebted; and it is a gratification to my feelings, and justice to that officer, to express to your Excellency the high sense I entertain of his persevering and active exertions throughout the period of insurrection, whose knowledge of the country and the individuals of the different estates tended much to the beneficial results of the measures adopted.

To my A. D. C., Captain Burt, of the cavalry, and my secretary, Mr. James Caines, I feel much indebted, and to whom I wish to call your Excellency's particular attention for their uniform zeal, activity and assistance.

In conclusion, I take leave to notice the kind, hospitable and liberal conduct evinced by the inhabitants of the Island to myself, my staff, and the troops under my command during our our progress through the Island in the discharge of a duty which your Excellency was pleased to entrust to my execution. ST. CHRISTOPHER.

Acting on the above Report, as well as on what partially fell under his own immediate observation, the Governor solicits the acceptance, by the officers particularized by the Brigadier-general, especially by the Hon. G. H. Burt and Lieut.-colonel Woodcock, in the capacity of majors of brigade, as well as by the officers and troops at large, of his Excellency's acknowledgments and commendation.

The Governor derives infinite satisfaction from the opportunity of thanking the Brigadier-general himself, and of recording the high sense entertained by his Excellency of the professional ability and animated zeal displayed by that officer in carrying into effect the military arrangements essential to the restoration of the public peace.

To Judge-advocate General Piguenet, for the impartial, able and attentive discharge of the functions of his important office, to the staff officers in personal attendance on the Governor, Lieut.-colonels Wigley and Berkeley, aides-de-camp, and to the Fort-adjutant, Lieutenant Taylor, his Excellency's obligations are likewise acknowledged; and in the Governor's opinion the St. Christopher's militia in general have faithfully performed their duty.

By command of His Excellency the Governor,

(signed) M. G. Taylor, Lieut. and Fort Adjutant.

Enclosure 15, in No. 207.

His Excellency the Governor to His Honour the President and Council.

ON the 4th inst. it was formally intimated, by proclamation, that unless the apprenticed labourers forthwith conformed to the ordinances passed for their government, martial law would be employed, which, most of them disregarding every salutary warning, was therefore on the 6th instant proclaimed to be in force, until public order should be re-established. This desirable object having been subsequently attained, and the original pledge of the civil authorities and commanders of His Majesty's naval and land forces, that all opposition to the laws should be repressed, being thereby effectually redeemed, the governor is happy in now congratulating your Honourable Board on the cessation of military rule. Enclosure 15, in No. 207. 18 August 1831.

However much the late delusion of the working orders is to be deplored, it is consolatory to reflect that their resistance has been so generally passive, as to have led but in one instance to the loss of life; and as in many cases individually, and on certain estates collectively, the regulations of the new system have been diligently observed, the Governor, on whom the task of bringing the guilty to punishment has unavoidably devolved, trusts that this consideration may serve the more readily to justify him in venturing to recommend that the apprentices, who have proved pre-eminently loyal, should receive some legislatorial distinction, calculated at once to reward those persons, and to encourage others in emulating their praiseworthy fidelity. Vide Proclamation, Enclosure, No 12.

Your Honourable Board doubtless appreciates justly the valuable countenance and aid, most opportunely afforded to the Colony, by Captain Strong of the Royal Navy, for whose assiduous and unremitting co-operation at this critical season of the year, with the squadron under his command, the obligations of the Executive cannot be too conspicuously expressed.

The exertions of Brigadier-general Brooke have been indefatigable and judiciously applied; and it is gratifying to advert, not only to the spirited and efficient services rendered by His Majesty's officers and troops of the line, and of the Royal Marines, but likewise to the energy and zeal exhibited by the militia of all ranks and arms, suddenly and unexpectedly called upon to encounter unwonted duties, privations and fatigue.

The efforts alluded to, although of short duration, have served to show what may be done, and in particular that the mountains of the interior are accessible. But in bidding adieu, for the present, to your Honourable Board, the Governor far from contemplating a renewal of recent scenes, is anxiously disposed to entertain a more cheering prospect, and to hope that under the guidance of his Excellency the Lieut.-governor, of the Council and Assembly, and of the ministers of the Gospel, the prosperity of this Island will be preserved from further interruption; and its labourers, wisely profiting by past experience, induced so to comport themselves, as at no distant period, to become a reputable, industrious and contented peasantry. 16 August 1834.

EXTRACT of REPORT to his Excellency the Governor from Brigadier-general Brooke, dated 16 August 1834.

I HAVE the honour to report, for your Excellency's information, that the movements of yesterday have been attended with the most beneficial results. Enclosure 16, in No. 207.

The troops having assembled at their different positions along the foot of the mountains

on both sides of the Island, extended to their right and left, forming a chain of files at open order, and in this manner proceeded to ascend and dislodge the runaway apprentices secreted therein; and although many difficulties were opposed to them in their ascent, they so effectually succeeded in surmounting every obstacle, that they took prisoners, and drove from the woods negroes who had never before been seen by their present proprietors, and others who had been absent from estates three, four, five, and six years.

To show to your Excellency the impossibility of the apprenticed labourers at any time holding out in opposition to the laws and regulations of the Colony, by their considering themselves secure in a retirement to the mountains, I beg leave here to mention to your Excellency one fact, which reflects much to the credit of the officer and the men engaged in the undertaking.

Having in my power a most determined and notorious runaway, I was anxious to make use of his knowledge of the fastnesses of the mountains, and the haunts of others his companions.

I therefore directed an officer, of whom I entertained a high opinion for his intelligence, zeal, and determination, to take him as a guide into the mountains, for the purpose of his pointing out where his companions were concealed.

Lieut. Griffin, of the grenadier company of the Windward battalion, with a subdivision of his company, were selected for this duty.

They proceeded into the mountains at 5 P. M., and traversing them for some hours, the guide evidently playing them false, and making several attempts to escape, Lieut. Griffin ordered his arms to be tied behind his back, which however proved to be unavailing, his succeeding at length, from the darkness of the night, in escaping from the party.

Lieut. Griffin being resolved to repossess himself of his prisoner and guide, took every measure in his power that the almost insurmountable ravines and obstacles presenting themselves to him in the mountain would admit, and followed up his pursuit with such determination and spirit, that he actually drove the culprit, who had escaped from him, to surrender himself again into his power.

This one circumstance, as I before mentioned to your Excellency, shows the impossibility of escape, or that a retirement to the mountains at any time by the misguided apprentices for the purpose of opposing the laws can be attended with any success or advantages to them when pursued by military.

Your Excellency's plans and directions for the putting down a most determined and combined spirit of insubordination and opposition to the laws of the country on the part of the apprenticed labourers of the Colony, and for restoring peace, prosperity and good feeling to an Island never before known to suffer by the want of such blessings, have been attended with such success and benefits to the Colony, heretofore unknown, and far beyond the most sanguine hopes and expectations of the oldest proprietors and inhabitants of the Colony, and who have throughout my progress been pleased to express to me those sentiments and their unbounded gratitude for the prompt and decisive measures adopted by your Excellency in retrieving not only the unsullied character of a Colony proverbial for its happiness, but for restoring to them the good will, services and affections of their apprenticed labourers, who were led away from their duty by wicked and designing persons.

Confidence has been restored to all classes by your Excellency's proceedings. The stability of good order and obedience to the laws is insured. The apprenticed labourers have seen and declared their error; and it has been shown, but too plainly to some, that at any moment the strong arm of military power, when other measures fail, can and will bring them to a proper sense of their duty.

The contrition and sorrow evinced by the different gangs of apprenticed labourers for their past misconduct upon my last visiting them, and the sincere promises made to me by them for their future good behaviour and attention to their several duties and occupations, induce me now, in their behalf, most humbly to beg your Excellency's gracious pardon for their late acts, and that those who may be in confinement at present on the several estates be permitted to return to their occupations when they express their determination to continue subservient to the law and obedient to their masters for the time to come.

Here I should beg leave to suggest to your Excellency, that on and after your gracious pardon be granted, all proprietors, managers and overseers be cautioned against using any harsh measures towards the apprenticed labourers on their estates (or those they may have charge of) who have been in any manner implicated in the late rebellion; that the proceedings of those misguided individuals be entirely forgotten; and in any case of misconduct hereafter reference be not made to those recent acts, which they have now so sincerely repented.

We, the members of His Majesty's Council, cannot allow your Excellency to leave the Island without again expressing our sincere thanks for the promptitude with which you repaired to this part of your government, under the apprehension of disturbances among the labouring labouring classes, and for the active and judicious measures which you have so successfully adopted to suppress them since their lamented occurrence. ST. CHRISTOPHER.

EXTRACT of a DESPATCH from Governor Sir E. J. Murray MacGregor to Mr. Secretary Spring Rice.

Government House, Antigua, 30 August 1834.

BY His Majesty's brig "Despatch," the report, of which an extract is enclosed, reached me from the Deputy Provost Marshal of St. Christopher's, that officer, whose duties furnish him with opportunities of acquiring accurate information, having been called upon for an account of the late proceedings of the apprenticed labourers in that Island; and it will be observed that he does "not anticipate the slightest recurrence of their refusal to work." No. 208.

Captain Daniell of the "Despatch" arrived yesterday at English Harbour, having left St. Christopher's on the 26th inst., and having visited Nevis and Montserrat on his way hither. The apprentices at each of those Islands were quite peaceable, and the Captain states that he believes "no apprehension existed on the part of the authorities of their acting otherwise."

Enclosure in No. 208.

EXTRACT of a REPORT from Charles Berkeley, Esq., Deputy Provost Marshal of St. Christopher, to his Excellency Sir E. J. Murray MacGregor, Bart. Governor, &c. &c. &c., dated 19 August 1834.

A NATURAL desire of unrestricted liberty no doubt had its effect in inducing many of the negroes to remain absent from labour, even after they were convinced of the legality of the apprenticeship system. This is to be deplored; but your Excellency will allow that an astonishing degree of moral improvement was displayed by them, when your Excellency bears in mind that not one single act of violence was committed by them. Enclosure in No. 208.

The example which has been made by the transportation of five to Bermuda, the severe chastisement which so many have received, the destruction of their huts and little property, and the astonishing activity of the regular troops, as well as the militia, particularly in the general movement into the mountains, have so terrified and amazed the apprenticed, and they are at the same time so thoroughly convinced that the apprentice system originated in the mother country, and is sanctioned by the Crown, that I do not anticipate the slightest recurrence of their refusal to work, and I am quite certain that every part of this Island is at this moment in the utmost peace and tranquillity.

Permit me, in conclusion, to congratulate your Excellency on the speedy and happy termination of an excitement which but for your Excellency's arrival in this Colony, and the prompt and judicious measures adopted by your Excellency, might have led to much destruction of life and property.

COPY of a DESPATCH from Mr. Secretary Spring Rice to Governor Sir E. M. MacGregor.

Sir, Downing-street, 16th October 1834.

No. 209. I HAVE the honour to acknowledge your Despatches of the 19th and 30th August, and their several enclosures.

You will, I am sure, not misconstrue my motives, or for one moment consider that I undervalue the zeal and ability which you have evinced in the acts of your Government, when I wish to have before me some more full and detailed accounts of the events which appeared to you and to the Privy Council of St. Kitt's to render it necessary to proclaim martial law in that Island. You are aware that, with this single exception, all partial disturbances or acts of insubordination which have occurred in His Majesty's West-India Colonies have been met and suppressed by the civil power; and though I doubt not that the grounds on which you asked the opinion of the Board on the 4th August with respect to the necessity of proclaiming martial law will, when more fully stated, appear conclusive, it is of the highest importance that this question should be fully explained.

What I should be glad to learn from you therefore is, what acts of open violence, affecting or threatening loss of property, had occurred before the 4th of August, and whether all the efforts of the civil power had been made, and found to be ineffectual, before the proclamation of the 5th was issued.

I do not conceive that recourse can be safely had to extreme remedies except in extreme cases, and I should very much deprecate the existence of any belief in the minds of His Majesty's subjects in the West Indies that martial law would be resorted to in any ordinary case of insubordination or refusal to work. For these offences, serious as they must always be considered, the civil law provides appropriate remedies, which have been employed in the other Colonies, and have been employed effectually.

I have, &c.

COPY of a DESPATCH from Mr. Secretary Spring Rice to Governor Sir E. M. MacGregor.

Sir, Downing-street, 5 September 1834.

No. 210. I HAVE received from Sir Lionel Smith a copy of your Despatch to him of the 12th July, respecting the insubordination manifested by the negroes at St. Christopher's, and a communication has since reached me from Captain Strong to the Secretary of the Admiralty, with accounts of your arrival in that Colony, and a copy of the Proclamation which you had issued. I take the earliest opportunity of expressing my satisfaction at the promptitude and judgment with which you have acted upon this occasion, and although I trust that before you receive this Despatch all present apprehensions from the state of the population at St. Kitt's will have ceased, yet I will not omit to say, that should it be otherwise, I shall rely greatly upon your personal superintendence of the measures taken in that Island, provided the circumstances of the other Islands in your Government shall admit of your being present there.

— No. 211. —

COPY of a DESPATCH from Sir E. J. Murray MacGregor, Bart. to Mr. Secretary Spring Rice.

Sir, Government House, Antigua, 15 Sept. 1834.

I DO myself the honour of forwarding transcripts of Acts for the Island of St. Christopher's, passed by the Council and Assembly of that Island: viz.

Printed in the Appendix (B.) Nos. 24 to 34.

1. "An Act for the Abolition of Slavery in this Island, and for the establishment of a System of Apprenticeship for a limited time in lieu thereof."

1st Clause.

"All slaves duly registered, and on the Island, above six years of age, shall, on the 1st August 1834, become apprenticed labourers; slaves on the seas, or absent from the Island against the will of their owners, shall be deemed to be within the Island for the purposes of this law."

2d Clause.

"The person entitled to the slave will have a right to the services of the apprentice."

3d Clause.

"Prædial apprentices shall continue such until 1st August 1840, and during that period such labourer shall work 48 hours in the week only."

4th Clause.

"Non-prædial apprentice shall continue such until the 1st August 1838."

5th Clause.

"Subject to the before-mentioned obligations, all persons in the Colony shall, on the 1st August 1834, become absolutely free."

2. "An Act for prescribing the Powers and Duties of Special Magistrates."

"Special magistrate has exclusive jurisdiction in questions relating to employer and labourer, not interfering with jurisdiction of superior courts."

"He is to visit once a fortnight, or oftener, every plantation in his district on which there are 10 apprentices."

"He is to keep a journal of all cases brought before him. He shall furnish the person first in command, every three months, with a copy thereof. He is not to receive salary until this be done. He shall take all complaints. Process to be issued by special magistrate, to be exercised by police officers, and may be executed in any part of the Island, though beyond his district."

"The special magistrate shall, after the 1st of July, have jurisdiction to hear and decide on any complaint. Special magistrate may have a retrospective authority over offences committed before 1st August." "This Act may be altered in this present session."

3. "An Act to divide Apprenticed Labourers into several Classes."

"After the 1st day of July 1834, slaves shall be divided into three classes, prædial apprentices attached to the soil, prædial apprentices not attached, and non-prædial apprenticed labourers. No persons 12 years old or upwards to be included, unless for 12 months before the 28th of August 1833 habitually employed in agriculture or in the manufacture of colonial produce. Return of slaves to be made on the 1st July next, or within 10 days after. Form of a return in schedule (A.) Returns may be amended up to the 5th August. If registrar doubt the accuracy of any return, owner to attend him and substantiate return. Registrar shall examine on oath the owner and the slave, and any other witnesses; and shall confirm and correct any return, within 24 hours' notice to the owner or slave of his decision. Master or slave dissatisfied with such decision may, by petition, appeal to the Court of King's Bench and Common Pleas, which are required to make all necessary rules for the dispatch of such business. There shall be affixed to the entry of all slaves in the registry, P. A., P. U., or N. P. Corrected slave registry, deposited in the secretary's office, to be conclusive in any dispute. Any person taking a false oath shall be liable to the pains and penalties of perjury. Persons neglecting to make returns or to obey summons of registrar, forfeit not less than 20 s. nor more than 10 l.

4. "An Act to provide for Apprenticed Labourers during the time of their Apprenticeship."

"Certain clauses of the General Amelioration Law to be in force, for the benefit of all apprentices, on the 1st of August next. Employer, with sanction of special magistrate, may commute with any labourer for allowances and clothing. Employer shall not be required to furnish labourer with his weekly allowance who receives food as sick. Certificate of any medical practitioner, under his hand, of any matter relating thereto, good evidence before magistrate. Mode of recovering penalties."

5. "An Act for prescribing the Duties and regulating the Conduct of Apprenticed Labourers within this Island."

"Prædial apprentices to labour 45 hours in each week, and no longer. Not to be employed on Sunday, except in watching and in tending stock, or in other works of necessity. Non-prædial apprentices to labour for their employers as free hired servants do: dispute pute on this subject referred to special magistrate; and non-prædials not to work on Sundays, save in the protection of property, or in other works of necessity and in domestic services."

"All apprentices to conform to rules lawfully laid down for their governance by the person entitled to their services. Labourers offending against above clauses, punished as special magistrate may direct, according to rules in this Act prescribed. Four last clauses extended to any apprentices, who, although not bound to work, may reside on the estate of any person. To serve two extra hours or double the time of absence; such extra labour not to exceed 15 hours in one week; but if such extra labour shall extend beyond seven years, after apprenticeship shall have expired."—"Adjudged a deserter, and confined to hard labour for one week; and if a male, stripes, not exceeding 15, with a cat."—"Adjudged a vagabond, and confined to hard labour for two weeks; and if a male, stripes, not exceeding 15, with a cat."—"Adjudged a runaway, and confined to hard labour one month; and if a male, stripes, not exceeding 30, with a cat. In addition, offender shall make satisfaction for time of absence, and for time employed in hard labour, unless it be performed for benefit of employer."

"Labour in service of employer 15 hours in one week. Confinement, with hard labour, not exceeding one week: confinement, with hard labour, not exceeding one fortnight; and if a male, stripes, not exceeding 20, with a cat. Extra labour, not exceeding 15 hours in any one week, or confinement, with hard labour, for one month; or if a male, stripes, not exceeding 30, with a cat. Special magistrate may adjudge offender to receive any two or more of the last-mentioned punishments, in his discretion. On medical information that such person is able to work, solitary confinement for any period not exceeding 24 hours of the apprentice's own time; and if a male, in addition, stripes, not exceeding 30, with a cat. Confinement, with hard labour, not exceeding six months; and if a male, stripes, not exceeding 39, with a cat. Females not to be whipped, but punished in the stocks, with a badge of infamy; not to be kept in the stocks after sunset or before sunrise, nor more than eight hours in one day, or six days for one offence, or two days consecutively for any offence, or under any circumstances. All such stocks of one model, approved of by the officer administering the government. Any person attempting to seduce apprentice from performance of lawful services, or attempting to persuade him to neglect any work undertaken, or sheltering him having so absconded, shall, on conviction, pay a fine not exceeding 20 l.; and in default of payment, be committed to gaol for any period not exceeding three months. Offender being an apprenticed labourer, to undergo punishment imposed by this Act; nothing therein contained to abridge right of apprentice to engage in the service of any person during the time allotted to his own use by law. Apprentices cannot be arrested for debt, are ineligible as jurors or militia-men, or members of Assembly, churchwardens, coroners or vestrymen, or voters at election for any of the offices aforesaid, or justices. Act may be altered this session."

6. "An Act to prescribe the Duties to be performed by Employers towards their Apprenticed Labourers, and to enforce the performance of the same."

"Any employer unlawfully protracting the weekly services of prædial apprentices, forfeits 1 s. for every such hour. A sufficient signal to regulate the hours. No apprentice to undertake task-work, except with free assent. Every contract for task-work to be in writing; such contracts not binding for more than 30 days, unless justice approves thereof. Special justice to secure payment of the compensation stipulated for. Apprentice violating the terms of such contract liable to the same penalties as prescribed for violation of duties owing to employer. Married women and children above 12 years may contract. Any violence upon person of apprentice punished by fine of 5 l., with imprisonment 14 days in default of payment. One notice to be given of every complaint intended to be made."

7. "An Act to regulate the removal of Prædial Apprenticed Labourers from one Plantation to another, to establish certain Rules to govern the Sale of the Services of all Classes of Apprenticed Labourers, and the disposition thereof by Will, as well as to regulate the Descent of the same in cases of Intestacy."

"The objects of this Act are fully disclosed in the title, and appear to require no explanation."

"No apprenticed labourer shall be liable to removal. Prædial apprentices only to be employed in the business of the estate to which they are attached, or on which they shall have usually been employed previously to 1st August 1834. Interest of any employer in the services of an apprentice shall be a chattel interest of personal estate, and be transferable by bargain, sale, gift, contract, conveyance and will, and be distributed in cases of intestacy."—"Provided that husband and wife, parent and child, not to be separated, nor prædial apprentice be removed from the soil to which he or she is attached; consent of one or more special justices of the peace to be first had."

8. "An Act for dividing this Island into Districts, and for establishing a sufficient Police within the same."

"The Island is divided into three districts, each assigned to special magistrate, who shall reside within the same. Justice-room to be provided in each district, also a police establishment and place of confinement; that waste lands of the Crown be thereunto appropriated, and a committee directed to receive tenders for the purchase or rent of other lands and buildings. The special magistrate shall in certain cases commit offenders to any place of confinement. Special stipendiary magistrates shall sit in rotation every day in each week, when not engaged in visiting the estates, from 11 to 2 o'clock. A penal gang shall be established in each district. One sergeant and not more than nine policemen to be employed employed at each police establishment; and on each estate policemen from among the apprentices to be nominated by the employer, in the proportion of two for every 100. Auxiliary constables for neglect of duty shall suffer punishments herein specified for breach of the duties prescribed for apprentices. After the passing of this Act, and before the 1st August, auxiliary constables shall be sworn by the person first in command. The special magistrate shall suspend from office any policeman, subject to the decision of the officer administering the government. Penal gang may be ordered by the special magistrate to work on the provision grounds of the district. Special justice shall once in each quarter make to the officer administering the government within this Colony a report of condition of the police force, buildings, provision grounds, &c."

9. "An Act to punish Apprenticed Labourers for Offences against the Public Welfare."

"Three or more apprentices uniting together in any riot, any justice shall order them to disperse; if they refuse, a conspicuous signal to be exhibited as a warning to all persons to disperse. After 10 minutes from the exhibition of such signal, all persons continuing present shall, on conviction, be liable to imprisonment, with hard labour, for 12 months. No apprentice shall reside beyond his district, unless with authority of master; when that is refused, special magistrate may, in his discretion, give such authority, &c. &c. &c."

10. "An Act to regulate Dissolution of Apprenticeship by the voluntary Act of the Employer, and to compel such Dissolution in cases where the Labourer is able and willing to purchase his or her Discharge from Apprenticeship."

"Apprentices may be discharged by deed from apprenticeship. Any person so discharged being 50 or upwards, or incapable to earn his subsistence, to be supported and maintained by persons discharging him; such deed to be recorded in the registrar's office within one month, otherwise void. Proceedings necessary before special magistrate, when employer is unwilling or unable to execute a discharge of the apprentice, or to be settled by valuation."

EXTRACT of a DESPATCH from Lieut.-Governor Nixon to Mr. Secretary Spring Rice, dated St. Christopher's, Government House, 6 Oct. 1834.

No. 212.

CONCEIVING you would be anxious to learn the state of this Colony since the great change which has taken place in the condition of the negro population, I take the liberty of reporting to you, that the negroes are generally now very tranquil, and work well under the new system of apprenticeship, although there are several estates where the apprentices manifest a sulky disposition, and do little work; but I am in great hopes that this disposition will be changed when a better understanding takes place between the labourers and their conductors, which no doubt will be the case when their relative duties are better defined.

At present there exists a jealousy between some of the managers or overseers on estates and the workpeople, the former not recollecting that slavery no longer exists, and the latter forgetting themselves, and behaving in a very insolent and provoking manner towards their superiors, but I have very little doubt that in a short time, if the stipendiary magistrates arrive from England and pursue a straightforward course, everything will work well. The negro character is that of being very suspicious, and I am convinced that not one in 50 could be persuaded that the special magistrates appointed from amongst the resident proprietors or planters in the Island would do them justice, and perhaps in some instances they may be correct, as special magistrates appointed from amongst the planters may not take an impartial view of what they might conceive would militate against their interest.

It is a matter much to be regretted that the Legislature of this Colony has not defined the hour for work. Numerous estates prefer working their people nine hours per day for five days, giving the Saturday to the negroes; other estates insist upon the labourers working every day for 7½ hours, by which means the apprentices are deprived of the Saturday to go to market with their produce for sale, or to work for the maintenance of their children under six years of age: this system is very vexatious, and particularly inconvenient to the apprentices.

I see little or no likelihood of inducing the Assembly, who are chiefly composed of agriculturists, to correct this evil, as it takes from the planter or his

ST. CHRISTOPHER. agent the power of punishing their labourers for offences, real or imaginary, at his own discretion, by depriving him of his Saturday; a power I should think much better vested in the hands of the special magistrate.

EXTRACT of a DESPATCH from Lieut.-governor Nixon to Governor Sir E. J. Murray MacGregor, Bart., dated Government House, St. Christopher, 1 Nov. 1834.

No. 213. I AM happy to report to you that I hear of very few complaints being made against the apprenticed negroes. They are going on very quietly, and, with very few exceptions, the gangs work as well as could be expected.

The Island is healthy, and there is a great prospect of very good crops the next year.

EXTRACT of a DESPATCH from Lieut.-governor Nixon to Mr. Secretary Spring Rice, dated St. Christopher's, Government House, 18 Nov. 1834.

No. 214. IT gives me sincere pleasure in stating that the apprenticeship system goes on far better than I believe any one anticipated. The negroes are in general very quiet, and, with very few exceptions, work well; numerous planters say that they get as much work done under the new system as ever they did during the existence of slavery, and some gentlemen (a good many) go so far as to say they get more. As yet it is but a short time since the emancipation took place, and the apprentices do not yet know the advantages they may derive from industry, which no doubt will soon present themselves to them.

Sir, Government House, Antigua, 22 Nov. 1834.

No. 215. THE enclosed reply to your circular letter of the 30th September is forwarded at the request of his Excellency the Lieutenant-governor of St. Christopher's.

I have, &c.

Enclosure in No. 215.

St. Christopher.

Sir, Government House, 18 November 1834.

Enclosure in No. 215. I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your circular Despatch of the 30th September 1834, calling for my opinion in relation to the effects which free labour and the apprenticeship of the negroes is likely to produce, and to other matters therein mentioned.

As these points require due consideration, it will take some time to acquire the information called for, but I will immediately turn my thoughts to this important task, and reply fully to your questions. In the meantime it gives me sincere pleasure in stating that the apprenticeship system goes on far better than I believe any one anticipated. The negroes are in general very quiet, and, with very few exceptions, work well. Numerous planters say that they get as much work done under the new system as ever they did during the existence of slavery, and some gentlemen (a good many) go so far as to say that they get more. As yet it is but a short time since the emancipation took place, and the apprentices do not yet know the advantages they may derive from industry, which no doubt will soon present themselves to them.

Sir, Government House, Antigua, 1 January 1835.

No. 216. As you desire to obtain a more ample insight into the causes that led to the late Proclamation of martial law in St. Christopher's, it may not be irrelevant to recapitulate some of the particulars already conveyed to you, when your Despatch of the 16th of October, demanding additional information, reached me on the 26th November.

The circumstances that occasioned recourse to martial law were most copiously explained in statements, to which your recollection is now respectfully recalled, from the following gentlemen.

In a report, under date the 3d of August, Mr. Solicitor-general Claxton observed, "There is little doubt that emissaries have been sent from the leading gangs to the others, for the purpose of confirming them in their determination to strike work after the 1st of August, and that the well-disposed and irresolute have been threatened with violence to their persons and destruction to their property if they pursued a different course."

Another barrister, Mr. Piguenet, Judge-advocate of Militia, on the 19th of August, after noticing "the various threats of burning and poisoning which were, long antecedently to the 1st of August, held out by the negroes," said, "it is to be hoped that the late examples, which have been so necessarily made, and the prompt assistance afforded by your Excellency, will have the desired effect."

Mr. Berkeley, Deputy Provost-marshal, in a letter of the 19th of August, stated, "Permit me, in conclusion, to congratulate your Excellency on the speedy and happy termination of an excitement which, but for your Excellency's arrival in this Colony, and the prompt and judicious measures adopted by your Excellency, might have led to much destruction of life and property."

On the 13th of August, the Reverend D. G. Davis treated of "the causes of the late unfortunate disturbances," and expressed the hope, that "as misconception has now been corrected, and delusion dissipated by the presence and active exertions of your Excellency, and the co-operation of His Majesty's land and naval forces, and by other means, a discreet and temperate conduct on the part of those having the management of estates will soon restore quiet among the labourers, and harmony between them and their employers."

In recording, on the 17th of August, his opinion as to "the probable causes of the late rebellion, or insurrectionary movements of the slave population," the Reverend David Bigler, of the Moravian persuasion, remarked, "We rejoice too that, by the able and indefatigable exertions of your Excellency and those under your command, peace and order seem to be restored."

The representations from these reverend clergymen are corroborated in another, of the 18th of August, by the Reverend Mr. Cox, Wesleyan missionary, on the "causes of the late unhappy commotions amongst the apprenticed labourers," after detailing which at great length, he continued, "I cannot conclude without taking leave to express to your Excellency the abundant satisfaction which I, in common with very many in this community, have felt in your Excellency's presence and government at this important juncture, and in the wisdom, promptitude and success of the measures which your Excellency has adopted to effect the restoration of our tranquillity, and my gratitude to Almighty God, and to your Excellency too, for the accomplishment of that object without the effusion of blood, except in one solitary instance; and most sincerely do I pray, from a firm conviction of its importance, founded on an attentive examination of your Excellency's measures, that these Islands may long be favoured with the benefit of your Excellency's liberal and enlightened administration."

These papers embrace the period connected with the disturbances, both anterior to and pending my residence in St. Christopher's. You were also apprised of the intercourse between the Legislatures of that Colony, of the Virgin Islands, Montserrat and Nevis, and myself, and of the thanks they signified respectively for my "timely" visits to them, after quitting Antigua, on the 20th of July ; of my Proclamation of that date, in St. Christopher's, warning "all persons amenable to the law of apprenticeship to be submissive and obedient to the same, as they will answer to the contrary at their peril;" of the declaration of that Legislature ; of my resolution "to repress by the strong arm of power, if requisite, all opposition to the laws;" of my Proclamation directing the 1st of August to be held as a day of public thanksgiving ; of the proceedings of the Privy Council of the 4th of August, pronouncing that "if the present measures failed, it would be advisable to proclaim martial law;" of my Proclamations of the 5th of August, one offering rewards for the discovery of persons "employed in misleading the labouring classes of this Island, and inducing them to offer a combined resistance to the operation of the provisions of the Act passed for the Abolition of Slavery, &c.," and the other advising the working classes, unless they conform to the laws, &c. "as it is their duty to do," that "martial law will be proclaimed, and that it will continue in force until they shall be reduced to obedience;" of my Proclamation of the 6th of August, declaring martial law actually in force ; of a circular, of the 9th of August, from the Fort-adjutant, conveying my authority for sending confidential persons "to the runaways still out, informing them that, should they be at work on Monday morning, no notice will be taken of their conduct during the present week;" of my Proclamation of the 18th of August, discontinuing martial law ; of the general orders issued to His Majesty's troops and to the militia ; and of the messages between the Legislature and myself ; the Council expressing "sincere thanks for the promptitude with which you have repaired to this part of your Government, under the apprehension of disturbances amongst the labouring classes, and for the active and judicious measures which you have so successfully adopted to suppress them since their lamented occurrence," and the Assembly "the high sense they entertain of the prompt and judicious measures pursued by you, whereby the late rebellion of apprenticed labourers has been so happily quelled, and those deluded persons induced to resume their labours."

With the united testimony under your review of His Majesty's Privy Council, of the Legislative Council, of the House of Assembly, of the Crown and Colonial law officers, and of the ministers of peace, who all agree either in counselling, or in commending my measures as judicious, it certainly did not occur to me to anticipate that you might be led to regard those very measures as having served in reality improperly to substitute, in St. Christopher's, military in the room of civil law ; but as it may be desirable to revert to them hereafter, I beg leave in this place to remind you of the pressing instances made to me by the Lieut.-governor, the Council and Assembly, for "an increase of military force." The Board and House being unable to "enumerate the many instances of insubordination, riot and insults which have been lately evinced by the slaves in this Island," and the Lieut.-governor soliciting me to "move the Commander of the Forces to send at least three more companies for the protection of the lives and properties of the inhabitants, which are in such immediate danger," and likewise of my consequent application to his Excellency Sir Lionel Smith.

Having premised thus much, and in compliance with your wish to have before you "a more full and detailed account of the events which appeared to me and the Privy Council of St. Kitt's to render it necessary that martial law should be proclaimed in that Island," I have written (pursuant to the design notified in my Despatch of the 29th November) to the authorities there, copies of whose communications will be found in the enclosure marked (A), whence it may be convenient to insert certain extracts.

No. 1, 5 December 1834.

As a military and civil lawyer, the Judge Advocate-general, Mr. Piguenet, declares, in reference to the disturbances, that "the efforts of the civil power to overcome the resistance of the labouring population were ineffectual;" that "the evil increased daily, property was sacrificed, and eventually, after great forbearance, your Excellency proclaimed martial law according to the laws of this Island;" but for these measures adopted by your Excellency, "I think the Colony would have been ruined, and for the mild but determined conduct of your Excellency during that period, you are entitled to the gratitude of every class of persons within this Colony."

No. 2, December 1834.

Upon the same subject Mr. Burt, Speaker of the present as well as of the late Assembly, avows his regret "that doubts should be entertained of the expediency of a measure, to the timely adoption of which, in the general opinion of all who are witnesses to the then insubordinate spirit and turbulency of the negro population, is the present quiet state of this Colony solely attributed;" "that their intentions were to have destroyed the works on the estates, and that the passive resistance that took place was in consequence of the measure taken by your Excellency, particularly the appearance of the large naval force, a measure, in my opinion, rendered unavoidable, on account of the total inadequacy of the civil power;" and that "the adoption of that measure, from a full conviction of its having saved this Colony from anarchy and confusion, met the ready concurrence and warm approbation of the House of Assembly, while the firm, yet mild and lenient exercise of its powers by your Excellency, at a time of such general excitement and alarm, entitle you to the thanks of the landed proprietor, and the benedictions of the apprenticed labourer."

ST. CHRISTOPHER.

Nos. 3 & 4, 18 December 1834.

The newly elected House of Assembly, in an address recently presented, assert, after expressing "the grateful feelings we entertain for the judicious and prompt conduct by which your Excellency restored order to this community in August last, by suppressing a dangerous revolt," that "the ordinary process of the law was unequal to the prevention, or the adequate punishment of offences, till then happily unknown in our peaceful community, and therefore unprovided for by the recent necessary enactments." "The proclamation of martial law placed in your Excellency's possession a powerful but a necessary authority, and the moderation with which it was exercised, while it afforded the means of protection of property, equally precluded the commission of crime, and the necessity of its punishment." "You have therefore, Sir, the consoling reflection, that while your measures were characterized by prudence and firmness, they were also tempered by mercy."

Nos. 5 & 6, 21 & 20 Dec. 1834.

The Board of Council, "in compliance with the requisition of his Excellency the Governor in Chief, submit the reasons which induced them as members of His Majesty's Privy Council to advise the proclamation of martial law on the 6th of August last." They state, "that emissaries from the leading and more powerful gangs were constantly on the alert to intimidate the irresolute and to confirm the wavering, and that destruction to their property, and loss of life to themselves, were threatened as the result of obedience to the new law;" and in alluding to the disturbances in the other Colonies, they observe, "in this Colony the conduct of the apprentices was widely different;" that "evidence was obtained that in the Nicolay Town Quarter it was intended to resort to the use of fire, if continued efforts were made to compel labour;" adding, "this Board, at the important crisis under consideration, felt that they could confidently entrust to the distinguished officer who held the supreme command of the civil and military force of the Island the power with which military law would invest him, and that in the discharge of his important and responsible duties, mercy would abundantly temper justice." "The judicious and determined measures adopted by his Excellency, the perfect restoration to peace and good order, which were their early results, the consequent immediate suspension of military punishments, the circumstance of only one life having been forfeited to the insulted peace of the community, fully vindicate the measure advised by this Board, even if it was not completely warranted by the 53d clause of our Militia Law, which authorizes the proclamation of martial law by the person first in command in this Island, in case of actual or visibly approaching danger."

No. 7, 20 December 1834.

The Honourable Robert Claxton, member of Council and Solicitor-general in St. Christopher's, remarks, "I was fully impressed with the opinion expressed by the Colonial Secretary of State that martial law, as an extreme remedy, could not be safely resorted to except in extreme cases; but at the time referred to, the civil power was proved to be unequal to the restoration of obedience on the part of the apprenticed labourers of the Island to the laws of the Imperial Parliament." "The colonial law of this Island authorizes the proclamation of martial law by the person first in command, in case of actual or visibly approaching danger; if ever an occasion can be considered to come within the meaning of that clause, it was the crisis under consideration." "I felt myself therefore imperatively called upon, in a case of such extreme danger to the interests of this Island, and with a full consideration of the real welfare of the unfortunate and deluded delinquents, to advise the measure, which was so successful, and at the same time so merciful in its results."

ST. CHRISTOPHER.

The public functionaries in St. Christopher's thus defending, on account of the inadequacy of the civil power to cope with the disaffected, and on the ground of the legal institutions of that Island, the soundness of the advice given to me by the Privy Council for the proclamation of martial law, my motives for acting on that recommendation came next to be assigned.

It is set forth in the Report of the Privy Council that "despatches were hourly received by his Excellency the Governor-in-Chief, from the magistrates, declaring the inefficiency to enforce obedience to the law; from the planters generally, stating the perishing condition of their stock, and earnestly praying for some decided measures to remedy the existing evils." If besides the excuse derivable from the reliance reposed by me on the weight which I imagined would attach to the concurrent evidence of the best judges on the spot, further apology is wanting for my having formerly withheld those documents, it will be abundantly supplied on reference to those financial arrangements of His Majesty's Government, whereby, owing to the absence of suitable staff and other official assistance, a Governor in my predicament, with six separate Colonial Legislatures to deal with, is most effectually deterred from voluntarily encountering any correspondence apparently superfluous.

Thirty-one of those communications adverted to will, however, appear copied in Enclosure (B.), 30 of which were conveyed to me between the 2d of August, the day of my return to St. Christopher's after repairing to the other Islands, and the 6th of that month, their substance being as follows:

Nos. 1 & 2, 2 August 1834. It is to be collected from the Lieut.-governor's letter and its enclosure, that the apprentices on twelve estates had refused to work, and that there was a "combination among them."

Nos. 3 & 4, 4 August 1834. The Lieut.-governor presumes orders will be given "to Mr. Fahie respecting his calling on the militia, or regular military force;" and Mr. Special Magistrate Fahie, although he has "heard of no violence or outrage," mentions that "the whole district is in a state of resistance to the authority of the masters and managers," and that the negroes upon seven estates, which he specifies, "refused to turn out to their work."

Nos. 5 & 6, 4 August 1834. The Lieut.-governor forwards a letter from Mr. Semper, entreating his Excellency "to take such measures as may best seem meet."

Nos. 7 & 8, 4 August 1834. The Lieut.-governor encloses a report, showing that the greater part of the apprentices on six estates "have left off work."

Nos. 9, 10 & 11, 4 August 1834. The Lieut.-governor transmits reports from Mr. Parsons and Mr. Caines to the same effect, respecting four estates, saying the strike in the neighbourhood is "universal," or "very general;" Dr. Caines remarking, "if some prompt measures are not taken, we shall materially suffer, by the starvation of our horses, cattle, &c."

No. 12, 4 August 1834. Mr. Hazell, of Conoly's estate, mentions, "there being no provender provided for the stock, I have been under the necessity of directing the overseer to appropriate a piece of cane sprouts for that purpose. On my leaving, the whole gang, I am informed, quitted the estate."

No. 13, 4 August 1834. The negroes on two estates, amounting to "360," Mr. Whitford reports, had "refused to obey his orders," &c.

No. 14, 4 August 1834. On Stapleton's, Mr. Davy states, the negroes declared, "they would submit to any punishment rather than perform their accustomed work without wages," one saying "they would prefer being shot."

No. 15, 4 August 1834. On Mardenborough's estate, Mr. Mardenborough says, the apprenticed labourers bid "defiance to the Act of the Imperial Parliament for the Abolition of Slavery; and that the cattle and other stock must inevitably perish unless immediate and proper measures be adopted to compel them to labour."

No. 16, 4 August 1834. Mr. Demming states, that the apprenticed labourers on Lucas's estate will "not work without wages."

No. 17, 4 August 1834. The apprenticed labourers on the Godwin estate, "in number about 220," Mr. Edwin observes, "had not turned out to work," adding, that "the cattle and other stock, after having been neglected for three days, must suffer greatly."

No. 18, 5 August 1834. Mr. Wilson affirms, that, amongst others, on the Grange, Woodley's and Beauriyeau's estates, "there are nearly 800 people, and all in a riotous way," and that those of the latter "are nearly all gone to the mountains."

No. 19, 5 August 1834. After "the most turbulent and rebellious resistance," Mr. Fahie reports that he succeeded "in securing some of those pointed out as ringleaders," on

Gillis

Gillis Payne's estate, and that "the rest of the negroes brought into the yard their hoes, and left them there." ST. CHRISTOPHER.

The same gentleman states, that the apprentices of Blake's estate "refuse to work," and "the district," he understands, "remains in the same disturbed state it was in yesterday." No. 20, 5 August 1834

Mr. Williamson says, that with "auxiliary constables, policemen and ordinary constables," he ordered "three individuals on Huskinson's estate to receive 50 lashes each;" and it appears from the enclosure he adverts to, that the gang "all cut off their hoes, and brought them to the door of the dwelling" of the director of the estate. Nos. 21 & 22, 5 August 1834.

Messrs. Wilson and Crawford, special magistrates, suggest "the necessity of establishing a system under which a severe example might be made on the spot of those negroes that have been taken into custody; as we are thoroughly convinced that nothing short of such a measure will save the Colony from ruin." No. 23, 5 August 1834.

Messrs. Dawson and Bond represent that the apprentices have ceased to work on the "Wells" and "Golden Rock" estates. Nos. 24 & 25, 5 August 1834.

Mr. Stevens, of the militia, and a manager, remarks, "My brother officers as well as myself consider that the most prompt measures are necessary to put down this state of insubordination and secure the safety of the district. Unless this is immediately done, I cannot answer for the consequences." And, alluding to the flight of Beauriyeau's gang to the mountains on a signal, "on seeing the auxiliary constables advance," he adds, "this agrees with the information I gave your Excellency at my last interview, of their intention to set fire to the buildings and canes, and fly to the mountains; the former of which, in my opinion, has been prevented only by the heavy rains which fell during the last three days." No. 26, 5 August 1834.

After enumerating several gangs retired to the mountains, Mr. Stephens says, "Woodley's estate negroes have not yet been at work, and declare they will resist any police force that may be sent to take them;" and "Mr. Wilson, of Greenhill, informed me this morning, that in searching the lock-up room on that estate, in which refractory negroes are confined, he found there pieces of touchwood bound up and wrapped in tar." No. 27, 6 August 1834.

Mr. Wilson, justice of the peace, mentions that the negroes on several estates have "gone to the mountains." No. 28, 6 August 1834.

Dr. Cains, Member of Council, and seven other gentlemen, assert, that "all steps taken by the civil authorities to induce or force the apprentices to work have entirely failed; and unless some prompt and effectual measures are resorted to, the entire destruction of our properties must shortly ensue." No. 29, 6 August 1834.

On the Fountain estate, and in St. Peter's parish, Mr. Favy complains that the negroes "had not turned out." No. 30, 6 August 1834.

Mr. Philips communicates, for the Lieutenant-governor's information, that "some secret understanding exists between those negroes who have absented themselves and those who remain on their estates;" and that "some plot has been planning for the subversion of His Majesty's laws in this Colony long before the 1st of August;" and further, "I have two men here in whom I can place confidence, but what are two, or more people, against an infuriated mob? I should therefore deem it expedient to appoint a certain number of regular troops, not only to protect the signal posts, but also those negroes who are loyally disposed, and to awe those into obedience who might be otherwise. Of the latter, I fear, there are too many among those who wear a different appearance." No. 31, 7 August 1834.

The materials to be gathered from the above appeals and other representations, with those previously sent home, present an answer in the affirmative to your inquiry, "Whether every effort of the civil power had been made, and had proved ineffectual, before the proclamation of the 6th (not of the 5th) of August was issued;" and as you require to know "what act of open violence affecting or threatening life or property had occurred" before that day, I must upon this head also turn to the same sources of intelligence, quoting, besides, another passage of Lieutenant-governor Nixon's Despatch of the 10th of July, detailing his having been grossly insulted in a progress through several estates, undertaken with the view of expostulating with the negroes; and relating that they declared "their resolution to resist, and not to work after the 1st of August without wages;" and that "they hooted, and, in some instances, instances, threw banana husks" at his Excellency; that "at one place it was contemplated to cut his horses' throats and break his carriage;" that "the overlooker of an estate was most roughly handled" in his Excellency's "presence, and probably would have been murdered, had not two of the most active of the rioters been seized and sent to gaol;" and that "as yet we have no police."

The very abstraction by the apprentices of those hours of their labour devoted by the Imperial Parliament to the service of their employers, openly injured the property of the latter, exposed their lands to waste, and their live stock to starvation; and when the negroes, while in the plain, endeavoured to commit murder in sight of the officer administering the Government, it was impossible to foretell into what outrages they might not have been urged by the emissaries said to be busied in luring them from their homes, had they been left at liberty to mature their machinations under cover of the hills and woods, where they secreted themselves in concert, or illegally deserting their usual places of abode.

You are pleased to "deprecate the existence of a belief, on the part of His Majesty's West Indian subjects, that martial law could be resorted to" on common occasions; but His Majesty's West Indian subjects are not liable to be misled by me on a matter of so much consequence, concerning which their conclusions are naturally regulated by the usages and legal enactments of their several Colonies, as confirmed in each under the sanction of the King.

In Antigua, for instance, it has from time immemorial been customary to proclaim martial law during the Christmas holidays; and in evidence of this fact, a newspaper is enclosed (C.), in which the discontinuance of the practice in the present year is thus promulgated:

"Thanks to the Governor, we have at last seen a Christmas pass without the nuisance of a civic guard. His Excellency himself expressed his conviction of the absence of all necessity for the proclamation of martial law. All who would have been harnessed for the duty are much obliged for his consideration; and the event has proved the soundness of his judgment."

Although martial law is a branch of the Royal Prerogative scarcely to be exercised within the United Kingdom, except in the event of invasion or actual rebellion, the position of Great Britain and that of her Colonies in this respect bear no sort of analogy to each other; the parent state having a large standing army and other powerful resources at its immediate command, and the numerical disproportion of its higher and lower orders being totally dissimilar to that prevailing between the like classes in the West Indies, where the number of persons possessing property is as nothing to that of the labouring population.

In the laws of St. Christopher's, No. 509, it is provided:

"46. And be it further enacted, that the Captain-general, or person first in command in this Island, in case of actual or approaching danger, shall order alarms to be fixed."

"48. That no alarm shall continue in force longer than seven days without the consent of the Council and Assembly of this Island: provided always, that it shall and may be lawful for the Captain-general or Commander-in-Chief of this Island for the time being, on receiving information or intelligence of any intended attack or descent upon this Island, or of probable or existing internal commotion or insurrection, to order and continue the alarm at his own discretion."

"53. That the Captain-general or person first in command in this Island may, in case of actual or visibly approaching danger, proclaim matial law in force, during the continuance of which, all persons in this Island shall be subject to the same."

It is, therefore, established, that as Governor of St. Christopher's, it was imperative on me, under the constitution of that Island, not to slumber in inactivity while danger ripened; but, if practicable, to guard against its actual arrival, by publishing martial law on discerning merely its visible approach.

But on revising my Despatch to Sir Lionel Smith of the 12th of July, imparting to his Excellency the requisition from the Lieutenant-governor and Legislature of St. Christopher's for a reinforcement of troops, you may perceive that my more comprehensive obligations in the capacity of Governor of the Leeward Islands and of Dominica were forcibly impressed upon my mind, his Excellency being thereby apprized of my opinion, that "under all circumstances, it would therefore seem imprudent to risk a further diminution of the force in Antigua, than by the employment of a company on any temporary detached service; but should the labourers of St. Christopher's after the 1st of August absolutely refuse to work in the character of apprentices, it is obviously of the first importance that the difficulty should be instantly grappled with and overcome, not only with the view of restoring public order in that Colony, but of obviating the still more serious evils likely to arise should the resistance to lawful authority be successful for such a period as to admit of the contagion spreading to the neighbouring possessions of the Crown." ST. CHRISTOPHER.

That my apprehension of this sort of combination was not fallacious, may be ascertained on inspecting the enclosure (D.), as its accuracy is thereby shown to be sustained by functionaries of the highest station and local experience within the Leeward Island Government.

Mr. Isaacs, President of the Virgin Islands, declares, "that no doubt whatever remains on my mind of the effect which the prompt and decisive measures adopted to check the late disturbances at St. Christopher's, and to restore the working classes of that Island to a proper degree of subordination, had on the same description of persons in this and the other Virgin Islands, in preventing their resorting to conduct of a similar nature, which, &c. was strongly indicated to be in contemplation." No. 1, 6 December 1834.

Mr. President Maynard, of Nevis, portrays the results that would have ensued, in his estimation, from a different conduct, ending in a "total disorganization of society;" and subjoins, "that your Excellency's measures in St. Christopher's prevented the occurrence in Nevis of the consequences I have specified, I am, after a full and careful revision of the circumstances of that period, thoroughly satisfied." No. 2, 10 December 1834.

The President of Montserrat, Mr. Hamilton, says, "without the aid of the military, the disturbances in August could not have been suppressed;" and "for the subsequent continuance of good order, we are, in my opinion, largely indebted to the decisive measures adopted by your Excellency in St. Kitt's." No. 3, 15 December 1834.

The Lieuteuant-governor of Dominica, his Excellency Sir Charles Schomberg, states, "It was officially reported to me that the watchword or catch expression was, 'We free; no bind; no work, as in St. Christopher's;'" and "I therefore come to the conclusion, that had the disturbances in St. Christopher's, instead of being treated as an extreme case and rapidly subdued by military means, been left, as in an ordinary instance of insubordination or refusal to work, to the operation of the civil law, the natural irritability of the French negroes, and the inherent volatility of their character, would in all probability have been encouraged by so dangerous an example of delay, and would have produced most lamentable results in the Island of Dominica, a country whose natural strength is such, that a handful of men in the fastnesses of the mountains could with ease maintain themselves against the utmost European force that could possibly be brought against them at that season." No. 4, 2 December 1834.

Mr. Lockhart, the President now administering the Government of Dominica, states, that "the working classes in this Island were influenced by the prompt measures adopted by your Excellency in subduing the disturbances in St. Kitt's; and I am strongly of opinion, that if the matter had been left to the operation of the civil law, the effect would not have been such as it has been;" and likewise that "movements in one Island are soon known in another by the labourers: and any disturbance, not immediately checked in one, seldom fails to give trouble in the other." No. 5, 19 December 1834.

The satisfaction signified in your Despatch of the 16th October, (St. Kitt's,) in allusion to the sentiments of the President of Nevis, who attributed to "the prompt and energetic measures" pursued in St. Christopher's, the maintenance of tranquillity within his own Presidency, will not be diminished, I would willingly flatter myself, on your witnessing the manifestation towards me of similar cordiality and good "feeling," not only as renewed by himself, but as also cherished by the Lieutenant-governor of Dominica and the Presidents of that Colony, of the Virgin Islands, and of Montserrat.

As you have assumed that I am "aware that, with this single exception, all partial disturbances or acts of insubordination which have occurred in His Majesty's West Indian Colonies have been met and suppressed by the civil power," power," it is proper to assure you that no such circumstance was consistent with my knowledge; but (Enclosure E, 1,) it will be seen that I have applied to Sir Lionel Smith in the following terms upon the subject: "As your Excellency enjoys better opportunities of acquaintance with transactions in the other Colonies, may I take the liberty of requesting to be informed whether any disturbance of the like nature, equally serious, and involving equally important consequences in its issue as that subdued in St. Christopher's, has been put down by the civil power alone in any of the Islands under your Excellency's superintendence as Governor-in-Chief, or within the still wider range of your military command."

16 December 1834.

In answer, (Enclosure E, 2,) his Excellency remarks, "the only instance, even of partial disturbance, in the Windward Government was at Grenada. There the negroes of one or two contiguous estates declared against apprenticeship, and that they would not work. The magistrates, well knowing their own inefficiency, immediately called for military aid, and a company of the 1st West India regiment seized the principals, and restored order. Had this been neglected or slowly executed, depending on the civil authority, and waiting for actual mischief to warrant the call for troops, as in countries where all the inhabitants are protected by similar or equal laws, a combination, presuming on the weakness or fears of Government, would have spread over the Island, and created general resistance."

"From Trinidad I was called upon for more troops. The negroes, in a state of ignorance, deserted the estates and flocked to the capital, but I never heard that they committed violence; and the Lieutenant-governor soon found himself strong enough to maintain the laws with the means he had."

"In Demerara, the Lieutenant-governor, a military officer, reported the movement and use of three companies of the line to put down a combination of negroes."

"There is every reason to believe that this bad spirit was not general in these Colonies; and the two latter being Crown Colonies, it is very likely the civil authorities had more strength than in those Colonies which maintained no police establishments on a scale to control the negro population in a general state of resistance. Where such was the case, I should be of opinion military law was unavoidable."

From this statement it is to be deduced, in the only Island of the Windward Government where a slight commotion arose, and in Demerara, military means were had recourse to in order to coerce the disobedient labourers; that in Trinidad the negroes, in lieu of hiding in mountainous forests, as in St. Christopher's, placed themselves at once within reach of the Lieutenant-governor's resources, by assembling at the seat of Government; and that the "bad spirit" notoriously general amongst the apprentices in the Leeward Islands and Dominica, was not so either in the Crown Colonies or Windward Islands.

As you are so good as to say, "I doubt not that the grounds on which you asked the opinion of the Board, on the 4th of August, with respect to the necessity of proclaiming martial law, will, when more fully stated, appear conclusive," it is right to explain that the Board of Privy Council were advised with by me as to its expediency on the 6th, as well as on the 4th of August, and to solicit your deliberate attention to my then situation, as exhibited in my letter of the 27th November to Sir Lionel Smith: "Your Excellency is aware of the pressing calls of the authorities in St. Christopher's for aid; that the force at your own immediate disposal was fully occupied; that the demands of Antigua prevented me from removing more than one company from this garrison to Basseterre; and that for its conveyance thither I was indebted to the accidental presence of the Belvidera at Barbadoes, and to your Excellency's kindness in communicating with Captain Strong."

"The mass of the apprenticed labourers soon afterwards withdrew from the estates to which they were by law attached, and, covered by woods, congregated in the mountains of the interior, where no chain of military posts could hem them in, and whence they could emerge in any numbers, at any time, and towards any quarter or quarters they might have thought proper, augmenting not only their powers of devastation, if tempted by hunger, the suggestions of their ringleaders, or by my supineness, to descend into the lower grounds, but the difficulty of the troops in overtaking them, as the arena expanded towards the circumference of the Island."

"The

"The minds of the working classes in the Virgin Islands, Nevis and Montserrat were unsettled, and any hesitation evinced by me at St. Christopher's would have prolonged the double risk of encouragement to the insubordinate negroes there being afforded by corresponding proceedings of their fellows in the adjacent Colonies, or of inciting the last-mentioned parties to persevere in emulating the resistance of the former." ST. CHRISTOPHER.

Had I been minutely conversant with the interior affairs of St. Christopher's, and even permanently resided there as officer administering its government, the condition of the Island in August last would surely have justified me in consulting the Privy Council with respect to it; but there is a peculiarity touched upon in the same Despatch to Sir Lionel Smith, which would seem decisive of the point: "Between the duties of the Lieutenant-governor of Demerara, Trinidad and St. Lucia, and those of your Excellency and myself as Governors of the Windward and Leeward Islands, there appears to me a very marked disparity; the arrangements to be conducted by them being of a less complicated nature, because, however extensive their jurisdiction, the measures they have to pursue are generally applicable but to one theatre of action. With us the case is different, and owing to our respectively governing several Islands, each with a separate internal administration, our position is rendered much more critical."

That this is not an invidious or unjust comparison, the complete alteration the structure of society in Antigua was destined to undergo on the 1st of August last, by the sudden elevation of its labouring orders from slavery to freedom, may not unworthily illustrate. It was while intent on providing for the arrival of that crisis in this Island that I was reluctantly compelled to quit it, in order to respond to the cry of peril unexpectedly issuing from St. Christopher's; and until the hour of my departure, the new arrangements to be instituted here, in as far as they depended on the executive, demanded and received my personal directions. On removing suddenly to a totally different scene, in which, although in a great degree a stranger, I was obliged to become the principal actor, the very nature of the case involved the necessity of seeking the best authenticated information; and there being none to be more implicitly confided in than that procurable from His Majesty's Privy Councillors, who are deeply responsible for their advice to the representative of the Sovereign, furnished me with undeniable grounds, on landing in St. Christopher's, for ascertaining the feelings of the members of that Board.

On the 13th of October, in a Despatch expressive of your "regret that it became necessary to employ any other than the civil power in Montserrat," it is added, "I can easily conceive that deficiency of police force may have rendered the employment of the military indispensable, and it is, at all events, satisfactory to learn that it was effectual to its object." When it is remembered, therefore, on Lieutenant-governor Nixon's authority, that there was at the time of the disturbances no police in St. Christopher's, and no whisper of commotion having hitherto transpired from that Island since I left it, the same reasoning that in the one instance admits, cannot in the other consistently deny, the expediency of military interference.

I have now, Sir, fulfilled your commands in such a manner, it is to be hoped, as will remove any indistinct impressions you may previously have imbibed of facts attendant on the abolition of slavery in August last in St. Christopher's, and in His Majesty's other West Indian Colonies, or at any rate, as will answer fully at least the questions propounded in your communication of the 16th of October.

Acting on the principle of my observations in Privy Council on the 19th of August, "that the interests of St. Christopher's were not alone at stake, but that those of the other Colonies under the system of apprenticeship were exposed to the influence of her example, every inducement," as therein stated, "conspired to prompt me in crushing the threatened evil in the bud;" to that end, availing myself of the power legitimately devolving on me under the local enactments of St. Christopher's, and after due warning to the delinquents, I did not hesitate, as a measure of precaution, to proclaim martial law on the 6th of August. On the 9th, an amnesty was tendered to such apprentices as would agree to work; and on the 18th, another proclamation restored the Colony to the jurisdiction of the civil power, the purposes for which the law martial had been introduced being, in that short interval, effectually tually attained. To my sense of the paramount importance of executing this service with extreme rapidity my life was nearly sacrificed at the moment, owing to over exertions, from which my health has ever since materially suffered; but, cheered by the internal consciousness of having zealously discharged my duty to the King, by the favourable opinion of the public bodies and principal officers of the communities concerned, and by the sounds of "God bless you, Sir," "God bless you, master," which greeted me on re-embarking from St. Christopher's, I most unfeignedly rejoice that those exertions were not spared; and that, in the accomplishment of the arduous task imposed on me, I did not shrink from responsibility, the consequences of which it is now, of course, incumbent on me, with every deference and respect, to meet.

For the courtesy observed in intimating your doubts of the propriety of my ulterior proceedings, as well as for the approbation formerly conveyed in your Despatches of the 5th and 6th of September, when you considered me engaged in the comparatively trivial occupation of repressing "ordinary cases of insubordination or of refusal to work," I take the liberty, in conclusion, of returning my sincere acknowledgments.

Sir, St. Christopher's, 5 December 1834.

Enclosure (A.)

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Excellency's letter of date 27th ult., stating, that with the single exception of this Island, the partial disturbances or acts of insubordination in His Majesty's West India Islands had been met and suppressed by civil means; and desiring me to explain the grounds upon which, as a military and civil lawyer, I was satisfied, by acts of open violence affecting or threatening life and property, on the part of the labouring population of this Colony, or otherwise, that the efforts of the civil power to overcome their resistance were ineffectual, and that it became requisite for the purpose that martial law should be proclaimed.

In my report to your Excellency of date 19th of August last, I remarked that the examples therein alluded to were necessarily made by you, and, on further reflection, I feel the more confirmed in that opinion.

For some time previous to the 1st of August a spirit of insubordination was openly evinced by our labouring classes, and more particularly by the contempt in which they held the civil power, and the insults and indignities offered by several of them to our Lieutenant-governor. For these various reasons the Legislature applied to your Excellency for assistance, which you immediately afforded; and sufficient time elapsed before the 1st of August for the insurgents to communicate with the neighbouring Islands, and to relate the measures adopted here. To this may be attributed the ease with which the partial spirit of revolt was checked in those Islands, as, perhaps, the discontented there profited by the example afforded them in this Colony.

I am of opinion that the civil authority was totally inadequate to check the general spirit of revolt in this Island: our free population was very small, and, compared with the labouring classes, shows a fearful disparity. Our highest civil authorities had not only been disregarded, but openly insulted, by the labouring classes, who openly declared that the King had made them free, but that the authorities here were endeavouring to keep them in bondage; that they cared not for the militia, and that the King's troops would not act against them. Repeated endeavours were made by the civil power to undeceive them; the evil increased daily; property was sacrificed; and eventually, after great forbearance, your Excellency proclaimed martial law, according to the laws of this Island. But for these measures adopted by your Excellency, I think the Colony would have been ruined; and for the mild but determined conduct of your Excellency during that period, you are entitled to the gratitude of every class of persons within this Colony.

Sir, St. Christopher's, December 1834.

I HAVE the honour of acknowledging the receipt of your letter of the 27th last month, informing me that doubts had been suggested of the necessity of resorting to the alternative of martial law for the purpose of suppressing the late insubordination manifested by the apprenticed labourers, and requiring me, as Speaker of the House of Assembly during your Excellency's visits to this Island at that period, to state, from my knowledge of the previous intentions, designs and spirit of the negro population, why, in my estimation, it became requisite requisite to employ military instead of civil means for the due subjection of the apprentices to law, and for the protection of the respectable inhabitants of the Colony.

It is a subject of regret to me that doubts should be entertained of the expediency of a measure, to the timely adoption of which, in the general opinion of all who were witnesses to the then insubordinate spirit and turbulency of the negro population, is the present quiet state of this country solely attributed.

I firmly believe, from the threats that were openly made by the negro population before the 1st of August, which occasioned the application by the Legislature to your Excellency, that their intentions were to have destroyed the works on the estates, and that the passive resistance that took place was in consequence of the measure taken by your Excellency, particularly the appearance of the large naval force; a measure, in my opinion, rendered unavoidable, on account of the total inadequacy of the civil power to cope with so general and openly declared resistance to the constituted authorities.

The adoption of that measure, from a full conviction of its having saved this Colony from anarchy and confusion, met the ready concurrence and warm approbation of the House of Assembly, while the firm, yet mild and lenient exercise of its powers by your Excellency, at a time of such general excitement and alarm, entitle you to the thanks of the landed proprietor and the benedictions of the apprenticed labourer.

Sir, St. Christopher, 18 December 1834.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to your Excellency the enclosed Address from the House of Assembly, expressive of the high sense entertained by them of the judicious measures pursued by you in suppressing the revolt of the labouring classes in August last.

To His Excellency Sir Evan John Murray MacGregor, Bart.

May it please your Excellency,

WE, His Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Assembly of St. Christopher's, avail ourselves of the opportunity which the opening of the present session affords to express the grateful feelings we entertain for the judicious and prompt conduct by which your Excellency restored order to this community in August last, by suppressing a dangerous revolt.

We feel assured that it is alone to the course then adopted by your Excellency that the peace and good order which at present prevail among the labouring classes of our population is to be attributed; the wisdom of your Excellency's measures being fully established by their results.

When we reflect on the determination which the late slave population evinced to oppose the laws; their unreserved declarations to that effect, made, not only in the hearing of every passer-by, but addressed to his Excellency the Lieutenant-governor, when he sought to explain to them the benevolent intentions of His Majesty's Government; when we consider how unavailing were the proclamations addressed by your Excellency to these persons, for the purpose of inducing them to return to their duties; how much greater they were in numerical strength; how general was their revolt, and how determined their disobedience; we cannot but regard the proclamation of martial law as a salutary measure, which prevented much evil. The ordinary process of the law was unequal to the prevention or the adequate punishment of offences, till then happily unknown in our previously peaceful community, and therefore unprovided for by the recent necessary enactments. The proclamation of martial law placed in your Excellency's possession a powerful but a necessary authority; and the moderation with which it was exercised, while it afforded the means of protection for property, equally precluded the commission of crime and the necessity for its punishment.

You have, therefore, Sir, the consoling reflection, that while your measures were characterized by prudence and firmness, they were also tempered by mercy.

George Henry Burt, Speaker.

Sir, Privy Council Room, Basseterre, 20 Dec. 1834.

In compliance with the requisition of his Excellency the Governor-in-Chief, we now submit the reasons which induced us, as Members of His Majesty's Privy Council, to advise the proclamation of martial law on the 6th of August last, as the only means of subduing the resistance made by the apprentice labourers to the provisions of the Imperial Act for the Abolition of Slavery.

For some time previous to the 1st of August it was ascertained that a very general feeling prevailed among the slave population inimical to the intermediate state of apprenticeship prescribed by the Statute of the Imperial Parliament. This feeling was more particularly developed by the manner in which they received the information attempted to be given them on this important subject by the religious teachers in various parts of the Island. The influence which they were known to have obtained over the minds of the great body of our slave population had been for a series of years gradually increasing, and the facility with which they threw off that influence marked the spirit that actuated them. They refused to listen to any explanation of the advantages which they would derive from the system of apprenticeship, or received with distrust, and even at times with abuse, the advice and opinions of all those persons whom they had been accustomed to consider as their best friends. They were fully impressed with the idea that the abolition of slavery was the decision of the Imperial Parliament, and that the system of apprenticeship originated with the Colonial Legislatures. The circumstance of the Legislature of Antigua not adopting the apprentice system was attributed to the presence and to the influence of the Captain-general; and the report that Lord Romney, an extensive proprietor in this Island, intended to absolve his people from their apprenticeship, confirmed them in the belief that they were unjustly treated. Had this feeling been partial, it would not have excited much apprehension; but it was known to be generally diffused over the whole Island. It was supposed that explanation on this important subject, afforded to the slaves by His Majesty's representative, would arrest their attention, and that they would listen to him with respect; but they received your Excellency everywhere with insults and derision, and in many places they proceeded to acts of riot and insubordination in your presence.

It was ascertained that emissaries from the leading and more powerful gangs were constantly on the alert to intimidate the irresolute and confirm the wavering, and that destruction to their property and loss of life to themselves were threatened as the result of obedience to the new law. This was exemplified by several cases of severe batteries which were investigated by the magistrates; and the sentiment which they were frequently heard to express, that "they would give their souls to hell and their bodies to the sharks" rather than be bound to work as apprentices, evinced a determination which could not be mistaken. Under these circumstances, our attention was naturally directed to the code of laws recently passed, to the power thereby entrusted to the special magistrates, and to its efficacy in suppressing any probable revolt. These laws had been passed at a time when the quiet demeanour of our agricultural population, and their cheerful obedience to the existing laws, entitled them to confidence rather than awakened suspicion, and the punishment thereby permitted for the most serious offence did not exceed 39 stripes. The laws were passed, and transmitted by you to the Colonial Secretary of State, and transcripts forwarded to his Excellency the Governor-in-Chief, in the month of March; but the authority to fix your assent to them was not received by you until the 18th of July; consequently, the system of police thereby contemplated, with the necessary constabulary force, was hardly organized before the eventful day arrived on which it was required to act. One only of the special magistrates appointed by Government had arrived in the Colony; and by the new system of laws, the ordinary magistrates could not interfere between the apprentices and their employers.

Other special magistrates were appointed by your Excellency, but they had not the influence which might have been expected from those directly appointed by His Majesty. It is admitted that up to the evening of the 31st July the slaves everywhere performed their duty on their respective estates with nearly their usual assiduity, and that subsequently thereto no acts of violence, either to persons or property, were committed. The resistance, however, which was offered to the law by these misguided people, although passive, would in its consequences have been most destructive to property, and but for the active and judicious measures adopted might have assumed a character and produced results which have been most fortunately avoided. The disturbances in the other Colonies, as far as we have been informed, were partial; in many cases the resistance to the law was active. In the first case, the punishment of a few was a sufficient example to others, and in the second case, the apprehension and punishment of the offenders were readily effected by the civil authorities. In this Colony the conduct of the apprentices was widely different. On the morning of Monday the 4th of August, when the labour of the apprentices was generally required, there was not a labourer to be found at work on any estate in the Island, with the exception of eight or nine in the neighbourhood of town, and almost within the reach of the guns of the ships of war at anchor in the roadstead. The remonstrances of the managers and overseers were ineffectual in inducing them to labour, and where offenders were apprehended and punished to the extent of the law, they did not hesitate openly to express their determination of continuing their disobedience. Additional special magistrates were appointed by his Excellency the Governor-in-Chief; but their efforts, although supported by the presence of the military, were useless and unavailing. The apprentices were impressed with the conviction, tion, that as long as they refrained from acts of violence, no law could more strongly visit their disobedience; that His Majesty's troops would not be ordered to act against them; and that perseverance in the line of conduct adopted must produce concession on the part of the planters, and that they would thereby obtain a release from their apprenticeship.

The warning proclamation issued by his Excellency the Governor-in-Chief in no one instance had the expected effect; but in the towns, in an hour or two after they had been posted up, not one copy could be seen. This circumstance was calculated to produce the belief that the domestic apprentices, and perhaps the lower class of free people, were in council with the general mass of the disaffected. Evidence was obtained that in the Nichola Town Quarter it was intended to resort to the use of fire if continued efforts were made to compel labour. From the 1st to the 6th August no work had been done on the estates, therefore the stock had been during that period unprovided with their accustomed food, and must have perished or have been driven to feed upon the growing crops. Despatches were hourly received by his Excellency the Governor-in-Chief, from the magistrates, declaring their inefficiency to enforce obedience to the law; from the planters generally, stating the perishing condition of their stock, and earnestly praying for some decided measures calculated to remedy the existing evils. It was at this period, and at this period only, that this Board, from a full conviction that the civil authorities were unequal to cope with the peculiar, combined and organized resistance to the law evinced by the apprentices; that vacillating and uncertain measures, by giving to them a false and delusive confidence, would strengthen them in their disobedience, and perhaps impel them to heavier offences against the laws; and that the prevention of crime was infinitely to be preferred to its necessary and consequent punishment, felt themselves justified in advising the proclamation of martial law, when the measure was suggested by his Excellency the Governor-in-Chief. This Board at the important crisis under consideration felt that they would confidently entrust to the distinguished officer who held the supreme command of the civil and military force of the Island the power with which military law would invest him, and that in the discharge of his important and responsible duties, mercy would abundantly temper justice. The judicious and determined measures adopted by his Excellency; the perfect restoration to peace and good order which were their early results; the consequent immediate suspension of military punishments; the circumstance of only one life having been forfeited to the insulted peace of this community, fully vindicate the measure advised by this Board, even if it was not completely warranted by the 53d clause of our militia law, which authorizes the proclamation of martial law by the person first in command in this Island in case of actual or visibly approaching danger.

Sir, St. Christopher's, 20 Dec. 1834.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Excellency's Despatch of the 27th November, enclosing copy of a letter addressed to his Excellency the Lieutenant-governor, to be opened in Privy Council. The reasons which compelled me, as a member of His Majesty's Privy Council, and as the law officer of the Crown and constitutional adviser of your Excellency, while administering the Government of St. Christopher's, to advise the proclamation of martial law on the 6th of August last, are fully detailed in the letter addressed to his Excellency the Lieutenant-governor by the Privy Council of this Island, to which I have the honour to refer you. I beg to assure your Excellency that I was fully impressed with the opinion expressed by the Right Honourable the Colonial Secretary of State, that martial law as an extreme remedy could not be safely resorted to except in extreme cases; but at the time referred to the civil power was proved to be unequal to the restoration of obedience on the part of the apprenticed labourers of the Island to the law of the Imperial Parliament. The colonial laws of this Island authorize the proclamation of martial law by the person first in command in cases of actual or visibly approaching danger. If ever an occasion could be considered to come within the meaning of that clause it was the crisis under consideration. I felt myself therefore imperatively called upon in a case of such extreme danger to the interests of this Island, and with a full consideration of the real welfare of the unfortunate and misguided delinquents, to advise the measure, which was so successful, and at same time so merciful in its results.

Enclosure (B.)

Sir, St. Christopher's, Government House, 2 August 1834.

I HAVE the honour to enclose you an extract of the letter I showed your Excellency this morning, enumerating the estates that threw up their hoes and bills in the district of Cayon. Since I had the honour of seeing you this morning, Dr. Caines reports that several of his negroes have done the same; and in the neighbourhood, at Coleman's estate, the negroes have followed the example, and have refused to work.

I have been just now in communication with some gentlemen of Sandy Point district, who are very confident that the estates in that quarter will follow the example; and it has been suggested that if one of the ships of war was anchored off Sandy Point (very good anchorage), that the presence of such a force would have a very good effect indeed, and might be the means of intimidating the negroes, and preventing them from committing any breach of the laws when they are required to go to their work on Monday.

If your Excellency concurs in this suggestion, perhaps you would have the goodness to take such measures as you may deem proper to get this object effected.

I certainly beg to offer my opinion that prevention is much better than cure.

EXTRACT from a LETTER from Mr. Adam Stevens, Director of Bourregan's Estate, to His Excellency the Lieut.-governor, dated 1 August 1834.

I CONSIDER it proper to inform you that yesterday evening, when the gang of this estate left off work, they brought their hoes into the yard, threw them down, giving a loud huzza, and left them.

I asked their reason for so doing, but could get no answer; I was also informed at parade this morning by the managers and overseers of the following estates, say, Baker's, Woodley's, Mill's, Philips's, Spooner's, No. 7, Molineux, Ottley's, Grange's, Mathews's and White's, negroes all did the same. This evidently shows a combination among them to resist the laws, and cease to work except on their own terms.

Sir, St. Christopher's, Government House, 4 August 1834.

I HAVE the honour to forward to your Excellency the copy of a report which I have just received from Mr. Fahie, special magistrate for the district of Sandy Point, reporting that the negroes of the several estates in his district have refused to work.

The local Acts of the Island are not yet printed, consequently I could not furnish Mr. Fahie with copies of them for his guidance.

I presume that your Excellency will give your orders to Mr. Fahie respecting his calling on the militia or regular military force, which he speaks of doing, as I do not, in the absence of your orders, conceive myself authorized to interfere.

Sir,

I LOSE no time in stating to your Excellency that I have received official information from the managers of the under-mentioned estates that the negroes thereupon have almost unanimously refused to turn out to their work, and are in a state of passive resistance to the law, for as yet I have heard of no violence or outrage. The police constables, I have been given to understand, are in a state of great inefficiency; I shall not therefore hesitate, in case of necessity, to call for the aid of the militia or regular military force. I beg also to state to your Excellency that I am without a single data, or instruction of any kind whereby to guide myself.

I HAVE the honour to enclose, for your Excellency's information, a letter which I have just received from Mr. Semper of Belle Fête estate.

Sir, Belle Fête Estate, 4 August 1834.

I BEG to inform your Excellency that my apprentice labourers have refused to obey my directions or turn out to work. In reference to Mr. Justice Fahie, I understand he has been particularly directed by your Excellency not to interfere as regards these apprentices. I therefore beg to state to your Excellency that I am consequently placed in a very unpleasant situation, as no other means now present themselves whereby these people may be brought to a proper sense of their duty.

I request your Excellency will be induced to take such measures as may best seem meet to you.

Sir, Government House, 4 August 1834.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to your Excellency a report I have just received from Mr. Williamson, of Old Road.

I have, &c.

To his Excellency (signed) J. Lyons Nixon, Lieut.-governor.
The Governor of the Leeward Islands,
&c. &c. &c.

(No. 8.)

Old Road, Monday, 5 August 1834.

Cow Phips.—None of the field people turned out. Cooper, distiller, fireman and all the stock-keepers, four watches, house servants of their respective work; one field negro come into hospital; four in hospital; two drivers at duty.

Romney's.—All quiet.

Conyer's.—Four of the field-people at work, driver, overlooker, two watches, two stockmen. The two constables appointed. The rest absent.

Lambret's.—None of the field gangs at work, except one Speedwell. Present, three drivers, one overlooker and constables.

Wingfield's.—Overlooker, two drivers, four stock-keepers, and all the house servants present; none at work in the field or at the works.

Hutchinson's.—Present two drivers, overlooker, four stock-keepers, two distillers, a mason and all the house servants. None at work in the field.

August 4, 1834, Justice Room, Old Road,
Sir, half-past nine o'clock.

WE beg to forward what reports we have received up to this hour.

Your obedient servants,

Sir, Government House, 4 August 1834.

I HAVE the honour to enclose your Excellency two reports which I have received one from Mr. Parsons of Estridge's estate, the other from Dr. Caines of Belle Vue.

I have, &c.

To his Excellency (signed) J. Lyons Nixon, Lieut.-governor.
The Governor of the Leeward Islands.

(No. 10.)

Sir, Estridge's Estate, 4 August 1834.

I BEG leave to inform your Excellency that the gang upon this estate (the tradesmen, the drivers, and a few others excepted,) have absented themselves from their work this morning. I am informed by the head driver the strike is universal in the neighbourhood.

I am, &c.

(No. 11.)

Sir, Belle Vue, 4 August 1834.

I BEG leave to inform your Excellency that none of my apprenticed field labourers have turned out to work this morning. The same is the case at Stone Castle estate and at Lower Estridges, excepting that two labourers have turned out on the latter.

I rather think that the strike on this side is very general.

If some prompt measures are not taken, we shall materially suffer by the starvation of our horses, cattle, &c.

I have, &c.

To his Excellency Lieut.-governor Nixon. (signed) H. Caines.

(No. 12.)

Sir, Basseterre, St. Christopher's, 4 August 1834.

I VERY much regret the necessity I am under of communicating to your Excellency the state of insubordination of the apprenticed labourers on a property called Conoly's, under my direction.

I waited upon the Lieut.-governor this morning, and he has requested me to lay the matter before you, which I now beg to do.

I this morning visited the estate for the purpose of giving the necessary directions for their labour, and found that not a single person was prepared to commence the day's work. Soon after, I discovered them in a group near the copper-holes, and inquired of them several times what they were doing there, to which they made no reply; I then ordered them to their work, which order was not obeyed. Upon which I singled out six men and three women, and directed the overseer to call over their names, to which they severally answered. The order that they should commence their work was then repeated, and, as before, disobeyed. After an interval of about 20 minutes their names were thrice called, the same order given, and the nature of their present situation explained to them, but without effect.

There being no provender for the stock, I have been under the necessity of directing the overseer to appropriate a piece of cane sprouts for that purpose. On my leaving, the whole gang, I am informed, quitted the estate.

Sir, Douglais Estate, 4 August 1834.

I BEG to inform you that the negroes on this estate and the adjoining estate (College), together amounting to 360, have refused to obey my orders, or to do any work.

I have, &c.

To his Excellency the Governor. Thomas Whitford, Manager.

(No. 14.)

Stapleton's, 4 August 1834.

Mr. Davy, the manager of the estates called Stapleton's and Parry's, takes leave respectfully to report to his Excellency the Governor that this morning he summoned the negroes on their respective estates to turn out, and that they most peremptorily refused to do so, declaring that they would submit to any punishment rather than perform their accustomed work without wages, and that last evening one of the gang declared to Mr. MacKurzir, the overseer, that they would prefer being shot to working without pay. This expression Mr. Davy has considered necessary to make known to your Excellency.

Sir Evan Murray MacGregor, Governor.

Sir, St. Christopher's, 4 August 1834.

I take the liberty of addressing your Excellency as a proprietor in this Island, and have the honour to inform you that the apprenticed labourers attached to the Mardenbrough's estate (Monkey Hill) have refused to work, thereby bidding defiance to the Act of the Imperial Parliament for the Abolition of Slavery. I beg leave to state that these apprentices have had three days to themselves, and that the cattle and other stock must inevitably perish unless immediate and proper measures be adopted to compel them to labour.

I have, &c.

Basseterre, 4 August 1834.

Mr. Denning, manager of the Lucas estate, begs most respectfully to inform his Excellency the Governor that he summoned the apprenticed labourers to go on with their respective duties, which they most peremptorily refused to do, stating that they will not work without wages.

Sir, Basseterre, 4 August 1834.

I have the honour to inform your Excellency that from accounts just received from my manager at the Godwin estate, I learn that none of the apprenticed labourers attached to that property (in number about 220) have turned out to work.

I need not state to your Excellency that the cattle and other stock belonging to the estate, after having been neglected for three days, must suffer greatly.

Sir, Mathews' Estate, Cayon, 4 p. m. 6 August 1834.

I have to inform your Excellency that some of the largest estates in this parish and Nicholas Town are still in a very unsettled state. On five or six of the largest, there is not a single apprentice at work. Grange, Woodley's and Bourgeaux are very obstinate; on these three estates there are nearly 800 people, and all in a riotous way. Bourgeaux are nearly all gone to the mountains. I have taken about 50 of the ringleaders, and I should be obliged if your Excellency will give me instructions what to do with these people. They have behaved so bad in many cases, that I think they deserve that punishment which I have not the means of ordering. We have no place of imprisonment in this part of the Island.

To his Excellency
Sir Evan J. M. MacGregor, Governor.

Sir, 5 August 1834.

I have the honour to inform you that I have visited the estate called Gillies Paynis, where, after the most turbulent and rebellious resistance to the law, I succeeded in securing some of those pointed out as ringleaders. The mob consisted mostly of women and children, few men making their appearance. The manager of the above estate has just informed me that since I returned from the estate, the rest of the negroes have brought into the yard their hoes, and left them there.

His Excellency the Captain General.

Sir, 5 August 1834.

Immediately on the receipt of your Despatch of yesterday's date I repaired to the estate called Blake's, and, after much trouble and disturbance, succeeded in securing some of the refractory apprentices pointed out to us as ringleaders. I caused to be inflicted corporal punishment on one, and the others to be put into confinement, with the intention of bringing them up to-day for further punishment, it being then nearly dark.

I ordered the crowd of apprentices to disperse quietly to their houses, and to turn out to work in the morning. They did disperse, but I am very sorry to say the example I made has had no effect, and they refuse to work according to law. The district I understand remains in the same disturbed state it was in yesterday. I am about to proceed to another estate for the purpose of obeying your orders.

Sir, Old Road, 5 August 1834.

I beg leave to state, for your Excellency's information, that I ordered out the auxiliary constables at seven o'clock this morning. They proceeded, in charge of the policemen and ordinary constables, to an estate in this neighbourhood, called Hutchinson's, and brought the gang of the estate before me. The director of the estate was in attendance, who selected 10 individuals, who he had reason to believe were the ringleaders; on being questioned, they could give no satisfactory reason why they had not turned out to their duty yesterday morning, and by way of example, I thought proper to order these individuals to receive 50 lashes each, and three women were ordered into confinement. This I expected would have a salutary effect, but, on the contrary, I have been informed that they still continue refractory. Referring your Excellency to the enclosed note from the director of the estate,

My dear Sir, 5 August 1834.

The Hutchinson's gang have all cut off their hoes and brought them to the door of the dwelling, and threw them down before me; the driver and my son being present and witnessed the same.

I am, &c.

Walter Williamson, Esq. Special Magistrate. (signed) C. Pickering.

(No. 23.)

Sir, Mathews' Estate, Cayon, 5 August 1834.

We beg to report, for your Excellency's information, that several of the negroes belonging to this estate have been taken into custody by the grenadier company stationed on the said estate, some of them for contumaciously refusing to work while in the field this morning with the gang, others for coming late to their work, some having been taken in the negro houses, and some for insolence, &c. &c.

As it appears to us of the utmost importance that a thorough and summary example ought to be made of these in order to instil fear into the others, without which all exertions that have already been made will most likely be attended with little benefit to the community, we beg to know from your Excellency to what extent we are authorized in such circumstances to inflict punishment. We beg most respectfully to suggest to your Excellency the necessity of establishing a system under which a severe example may be made on the spot of these negroes that have been taken into custody, as we are thoroughly convinced that nothing short of such a measure will save the Colony from ruin. A set of handcuffs and cats-of-nine-tails from any of the vessels of war will be required here.

Sir, Mathews', 5 August 1834.

I BEG leave to inform your Excellency, that while on duty here with the grenadier company, I have learnt that the Golden Rock labourers, in the parish of St. Pierre, Basseterre, under my directions, have refused to do their work on that estate.

I have, &c.

(No. 26.)

Sir, Lodge Estate, 5 August 1834.

I HAVE to inform you that the negroes in the Nicholas Town parish and part of Cayon evince a very refractory spirit. Some of the ringleaders of both sexes are secured by being tied, and others are in confinement, under the guard of the entire of the 7th company, which, I wish to impress on the mind of your Excellency, is very small, having been much reduced by nine of the men receiving the appointment of police constables. My brother officers as well as myself consider that the most prompt measures are necessary to put down this state of insubordination, and secure the safety of the district. Unless this is immediately done I cannot answer for the consequences. I have further to state that Burragan's gang are still out, and on seeing the auxiliary constables advance a signal was given by one of the party placed on an eminence, when all fled to the mountains. This agrees with the information I gave your Excellency at my last interview of their intentions to set fire to buildings and canes and fly to the mountains, the former of which, in my opinion, has been prevented only by the heavy rains which fell during the last three days.

I have, &c.

(signed) Adam Stevens, Lieut. in Command.
His Excellency the Governor-general.

The number of males who are tied is eight, of females a similar number; there are 11 males and 10 females who are in confinement in the sick-house on this estate.

(No. 27.)

Sir, Lodge Estate, 6 August 1834, 12 o'clock.

I HAVE to inform your Excellency that the negroes of Greenhill, White's and Burragan's, have retired to the mountains. Those of Molineux and Phillip's estates have all absconded since nine o'clock, and in all probability have gone to the mountains; also Woodley's estate negroes have not yet been at work, and declare that they will resist any police force that may be sent to take them. The Mansion estate negroes have taken their hoes, but yesterday again threw them up, stating that they would not work unless they were paid wages. Two or three only are at work this morning.

Mr. Wilson of Greenhill informed me this morning that in searching the lock-up room on that estate, in which refractory negroes are confined, he found three pieces of touchwood, bound up and dipped in tar.

Sir, Mathews', Cayon, half-past eight A. M., 6 August 1834.

Sir, D. Bay, 6 August 1834.

WE beg leave to represent to your Excellency the state of this part of the country, which is truly deplorable. Our negroe-houses abandoned; the cattle not only without people to attend them, but left to starve in the pens without food or water, must shortly perish. Tillage has entirely ceased. All steps taken by the civil authorities to induce or force the apprentices to work have entirely failed, and unless some prompt and effectual measures are resorted to the entire destruction of our properties must shortly ensue.

Sir, Mathews' Estate, Cayon, 6 August 1834, half-past six o'clock, A. M.

I BEG leave to intimate to you that I am on duty here, and having the command of Fountain estate, in the parish of St. Peter. I also take the liberty of informing you, that from the latest accounts I had from that quarter, two o'clock P. M. yesterday, the negroes had not turned out, nor indicated any willingness to do so.

Sir, Stonefort Estate, 7 August 1834.

IN acknowledging the receipt of your letter of this day's date, I have to acquaint you, for his Excellency the Lieutenant-governor's information, that his orders relative to the signal-post here have been observed, and also that the negroes belonging to this estate are, to appearance, quietly disposed. But if my candid opinion were required on that head, I should say that some secret understanding exists between those negroes who have entirely absented themselves and those who remain on their estates, and also, from several incidents which have occurred within my knowledge, that some plot has been planning for the subversion of His Majesty's laws in this Colony, long prior to the 1st of August.

With regard to the signal-posts here and elsewhere, were we at war with a foreign enemy, nothing could be more expedient than adopting and conducting them as they are at present; as it is, be assured that unless they are guarded by others than those directly interested in cutting off all intelligence with Brimstone Hill, in the event of a general insurrection, they would be perfectly useless.

I have two men here, in whom I think I can place confidence; but what are two or more people when opposed to an infuriated mob? I should, therefore, deem it expedient to appoint a certain number of regular troops, not only to protect the signal-posts, but also those negroes who are loyally disposed, and to awe those into obedience who might be otherwise. Of the latter, I fear, there are too many, even among those who wear a different appearance.

I have, &c.

T. Light Philip.

"THANKS to the Governor, we have at last seen a Christmas pass without the nuisance of a civic guard. His Excellency himself expressed his conviction of the absence of all necessity for the proclamation of martial law. All who would have been harnessed for the duty are much obliged for his consideration, and the event has proved the soundness of his judgment."

Enclosure (D.)

I HAD the honour to receive your Excellency's Despatch, dated the 29th November 1834, and have to inform your Excellency that no doubt whatever remains on my mind of the effect which the prompt and decisive measures adopted to check the late disturbances at St. Christopher's, and to restore the working classes of that Island to a proper degree of subordination, had on the same description of persons in this and the other Virgin Islands, in preventing their resorting to conduct of a similar nature, which by sundry reports made to me, very shortly previous to the 1st of August, was strongly indicated to be in contemplation.

Sir, Nevis, Government House, 10 Dec. 1834.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of a communication from your Excellency, dated the 29th ultimo, in which you make a reference to an extract, thereto annexed, of a Despatch from the Right Honourable the Colonial Secretary of State, and to a previous Despatch from me of the 13th of August, and request me to state my opinion as to the probable bable consequences of the disaffection which prevailed among the labouring population of this Island, in the early part of that month, if the disturbance in St. Christopher's, instead of being treated as an extreme case, and rapidly subdued by military means, had been left, as in any ordinary instance of insubordination or refusal to work, to the operation of civil law.

The consequences of this disaffection, under the alternative which your Excellency offers as a supposition, I should have expected to be, the suspension of continuous and efficient labour for an indefinite period of time; the accumulation of the idle-disposed apprentices in large bodies; the occurrence of plunder, from their want of food, and of violence, if resistance were offered; the perpetration of mischief, from that wantonness which in the ignorant follows the sudden and entire relaxation of a previous strict discipline; and, finally, a total disorganization of society.

These consequences I consider were to have been anticipated; first, because the causes of disaffection were not partial, arising from the conduct of individuals, but general, originating in the distrust felt by the apprenticed labourers as to any exposition of their new condition afforded by their masters, and in their dissatisfaction and discontent with the provisions of the law when faithfully laid before them; secondly, because the working class were in a state of highly excited feeling, dependent on the discussion of their political state, and on their having obtained a boon, long hoped for, and respecting which they had frequently suffered disappointment; and, thirdly, because, in my judgment, the apprentices suspected the inadequacy of the resources of the new system to meet the difficulties which would be produced by a general defection on their part from their duty.

That your Excellency's measures in St. Christopher's prevented the occurrence in Nevis of the consequences I have specified, I am, after a full and careful revision of the circumstances of that period, thoroughly satisfied.

Upon the receipt of your Excellency's Despatch of the 8th of August, in reply to mine of the 7th of the same month, information was generally circulated that unless the appearance of affairs should improve previous to Monday the 11th, martial law would then be resorted to as a remedy. On that day every indication which could excite apprehension had disappeared, and the labourers, without any exception, had returned to their duty.

Sir, Montserrat, 15 Dec. 1834.

In reply to your Excellency's letter of 29th November, with paragraphs of a letter from the Right Honourable the Secretary of State, I beg leave to inform you that, in my opinion, without the aid of the military the disturbance in August could not have been suppressed. We were at that period destitute of a police, a militia newly raised, mostly young men, armed with a musket and fixed bayonet, without scabbards, belts or accoutrements of any kind, and which as yet have not been received from Barbadoes. I therefore conceived that it would have been highly imprudent in me to depend solely upon them, lest any unfortunate occurrence should take place (their feelings being considerably excited as well as the labourers') that might open a fire, that might be attended with great loss of life amongst those deluded fellow-creatures.

I therefore deemed it most prudent to place the whole detachment under Captain De Lacy of the 36th regiment, with the view of overawing them and reducing them to obedience, which was happily effected.

In the subsequent continuance of good order we are, in my opinion, largely indebted to the decisive measures adopted by your Excellency in St. Kitt's. The summary punishment of transportation to Bermuda, inflicted on some of the offenders, created a great sensation amongst our labourers.

But for the military measures enforced by your Excellency at St. Christopher's, and simultaneously by me in Montserrat, and had the disturbances in both Islands been left alone to the civil power, I am of opinion the result would have been most disastrous.

I am decidedly of opinion, as there then was an open dissatisfaction, so there has been since, and is now, a latent spark of discontent amongst the apprenticed labourers, which I attribute to our vicinity and constant intercourse with Antigua; several of the apprentices having asked me if I did not consider them as good as the negroes in Antigua, and as fit for freedom, and why they were not so.

I have, &c.

(No. 4.)

Sir, St. John's, Antigua, 2 December 1834.

I have to acknowledge your Excellency's communication of the 29th ult., wherein your Excellency is pleased to call upon me to state whether, in my estimation, "the conduct of the working classes in Dominica would have been in any degree affected by the proceedings in St. Christopher's, had the disturbance in that Colony, instead of being treated as an extreme case, and rapidly subdued by military means, been left, as in ordinary instances of insubordination or refusal to work, to the operation of the civil law." In reply to which, I beg leave to mention, that in consequence of the astonishing rapidity with which intelligence reached Dominica, through Guadeloupe, reports were current at a very early period of the evil disposition which manifested itself at St. Kitt's. This caused me to watch vigilantly the French estates, partly in the wild and populous quarters of Colibistrie and Colihant, &c. &c. &c., where a formidable mass of women and children, as well as men, were known to resort for the purpose of obtaining information, which circumstance prevented the necessity of then placing the detatchment of civil and military forces into situations of the most awful character at that pestilential time of the season. The negroes thus received news daily, of which advantage was immediately taken to carry into effect the desired object, the maintenance of tranquillity and return to labour, by expostulation, &c.

It is proper here to remark, that it was officially reported to me that the watchword or catch expression was, "Me free; no bind; no work," (as in St. Christopher's.) The whole mass of the people would have followed the advice of their influential women, and one old chief, who openly declared, "White man all rascal, false and lie; me know plenty for 20 years," for which he was punished on the spot; that they would have returned, as recommended by their women, had it not been for the stipendiary magistrate, the late Mr. Radford, who, with his combined force, checked and almost immediately brought things to a crisis, by seizing some culprits, and sending others by water to Roseau prison, and punishing others on the spot.

The St. Christopher's news reached the Windward, and estates most difficult of access, with an apparent organized rapidity, which was well known to have existed amongst the French negroes for a length of time. I therefore have no doubt, that had so fatal an example been permitted to linger, that consequences of a most serious nature would have resulted; and such was the opinion of the gentlemen functionaries and others, who seemed to feel a relief on my promulgating your Excellency's Despatch, anticipating a cessation of martial law, in consequence of the apprehended danger having been averted by the prompt and energetic measures adopted by your Excellency on this alarming occasion.

I therefore come to the conclusion, that had the disturbance in St. Christopher's, instead of being treated as an extreme case, and rapidly subdued by military means, been left, as in an ordinary instance of insubordination or refusal to work, to the operation of the civil law, the natural irritability of the French negroes, and the inherent volatility of their character, would in all probability have been encouraged by so dangerous an example of delay, and would have produced most lamentable results in the Island of Dominica; a country whose natural strength is such, that a handful of men in the fastnesses of the mountains could with ease maintain themselves against the utmost European military force that could possibly be brought against them at that season. The King's troops were then suffering severely, although guarded against all exposure.

Sir, Government House, Roseau, 19 December 1834.

In reply to the letter of 29th ult. (confidential) that I had the honour to receive from your Excellency, I beg leave to say, I am most decidedly of opinion that the working classes of this Island were influenced by the prompt measures adopted by your Excellency in subduing the disturbances in St. Kitt's; and I am strongly of opinion that if the matter had been left to the operation of the civil law, the effect would not have been such as it has been.

Movements in one Island are soon known in another by the labourers, and any disturbance not immediately checked in one never fails to give trouble in another.

Enclosure (E.)

No. 1.

Leeward Islands, &c.

(Confidential.)

Sir, Government House, Antigua, 27 November 1834.

Enclosure (E.)

The late resistance of the St. Christopher's apprentices to the Abolition Act being treated of at home as an ordinary case of insubordination or refusal to work, for which the civil law affords appropriate remedies, and the Right Honourable the Colonial Secretary of State entertaining doubts of the propriety of the employment of the law martial there, because, with with this single exception, all partial disturbances or acts of insubordination which have occurred in His Majesty's West Indian Colonies have been met and suppressed by the civil power, your Excellency will, I am persuaded, readily pardon my present intrusion. ST. CHRISTOPHER.

Between the duties of the Lieutenant-governors of Demerara, Trinidad and St. Lucia, and those of your Excellency and myself, as Governors of the Windward and Leeward Islands, there appears to me a very marked disparity; the arrangements to be conducted by them being of a less complicated nature, because, however extensive their jurisdiction, the measures they have to pursue are generally applicable but to one theatre of action.

With us the case is different, and, owing to our respectively governing several Islands, each with a separate internal administration, our position is rendered much more critical in the event of any disaffection pervading the negro population of the whole.

Your Excellency is aware of the pressing calls of the authorities in St. Christopher's for aid; that the force at your own immediate disposal was fully occupied; that the demands of Antigua prevented me from removing more than one company from this garrison to Basseterre; and that for its conveyance thither, I was indebted to the accidental presence of the Belvidera at Barbadoes, and to your Excellency's kindness in communicating with Capt. Strong.

The mass of the apprenticed labourers soon afterwards withdrew from the estates to which they were by law attached, and, covered by woods, congregated in the mountains of the interior, where no chain of military posts could hem them in, and whence they could emerge in any numbers, at any time, and towards any quarter or quarters they might have thought proper, augmenting not only their powers of devastation, if tempted by hunger, the suggestions of their ringleaders, or by my supineness, to descend into the lower grounds, but the difficulty of the troops in overtaking them, as the arena expanded towards the circumference of the Island.

The minds of the working classes in the Virgin Islands, Nevis and Montserrat were unsettled, and any hesitation evinced by me in St. Christopher's would have prolonged the double risk of encouragement to the insubordinate negroes there being afforded by corresponding proceedings of their fellows in the adjacent Colonies, or of inciting the last-mentioned parties to pursue in emulating the resistance of the former.

I may have erred in deeming this an extreme case; but as your Excellency enjoys better opportunities of acquaintance with transactions in the other Colonies, may I take the liberty of requesting to be informed whether any disturbance of the like nature, equally serious, and involving equally important consequences in its issue, as that subdued in St. Christopher's, has been put down by the civil power alone in any of the Islands under your Excellency's superintendence as Governor-in-Chief, or within the still wider range of your military command.

I have, &c.

(No. 2.)

(Confidential.)

Sir, Barbadoes, 16 December 1834.

I HAVE had the honour to receive your Excellency's confidential letter of the 27th ult., detailing the considerations which led to the late proclamation of the law martial at St. Christopher's, and requesting I would inform you whether there were any similar instances of insubordination among the apprentices in any of the Islands of this Government, or in any of the military stations of the command, and how such occurrences were dealt with, consequent upon the abolition of slavery.

In this Island, where we have upwards of 82,000 apprentices, scarcely any change in their temper, conduct or habits was to be perceived; but a great deal of ignorance and misconception was removed by my personal explanations, through intelligent individuals, selected from every estate, the smallness of the Island giving great facilities for such communication.

Had there been the least insubordination, I should have, no doubt, been hard pressed by the local authorities to declare martial law; and indeed none of the Legislative Slave Colonies, that I know of, have had civil laws or police establishments for the government of the negro population, slave-owners having possessed arbitrary power, under local codes, over their own slaves, and the military therefore have been invariably resorted to, to put down disturbances; and as long as the militia are not let loose upon the negroes in this state, I am of opinion the employment of troops of the line among such population will, for a long time to come, be found the most merciful and prompt, because soldiers have no prejudices against them, and meet such helpless enemies with forbearance and compassion.

The only instance, even of partial disturbance, in the Windward Government was at Grenada. There the negroes of one or two contiguous estates declared against apprenticeship, and that they would not work. The magistrates well knowing their own inefficiency, immediately called for military aid, and a company of the 1st West Indian regiment seized the principals and restored order. Had this been neglected, or slowly executed, depending on the civil authorities waiting for actual mischief to warrant the call for troops, as in countries where all the inhabitants are protected by similar or equal laws, a combination, presuming on the weakness or fears of Government, would have spread over the Island, and created general resistance.

ST. CHRISTOPHER.

From Trinidad I was called upon for more troops. The negroes, in a state of ignorance, deserted the estates, and fled to the capital, but I never heard that they committed violence; and the Lieutenant-governor soon found himself strong enough to maintain the laws with the means he had.

In Demerara the Lieutenant-governor, a military officer, reported the movement and use of these companies of the line to put down a combination of negroes.

There is every reason to believe that this bad spirit was not general in these Colonies, and the two latter being Crown Colonies, it is very likely the civil authorities had more strength than in those Colonies which maintained no police establishments on a scale to control the negro population in a general state of resistance. Where such was the case, I should be of opinion military law was unavoidable; and as long as such law did not trench upon the rights and liberties of the whites, even its powers and punishments would be found comparatively mild to the laws under which the unfortunate negroes had previously existed.

Sir, Colonial Office, 13 March 1835.

No. 217. I HAVE received your Despatch dated the 1st January last, explanatory of the circumstances and motives by which you were induced to proclaim martial law in the Island of St. Christopher on the 6th of August last.

You appear to understand the Despatch in which my immediate predecessor in office called for this information as intimating some prepossession unfavourable to your conduct.

I cannot of course undertake to be the interpreter of Mr. Spring Rice's meaning; but as far as I have the means of forming a judgment on the question, I believe that he would disavow and deprecate any such construction of his language.

Adverting to the various documents which you have now transmitted, I am happy and prompt to acknowledge that they not only exculpate you from all blame in the transactions to which they refer, but that they prove that you were amply entitled to the grateful acknowledgments which you received from persons of every class among the inhabitants of the Colonies under your Government.

I have laid the whole of this correspondence before the King; and I perform an office very agreeable to myself in conveying to you, in obedience to His Majesty's commands, the assurance that His Majesty has been pleased to approve the measures which you adopted for the maintenance of the public peace in St. Christopher's in the month of August last, which appear to His Majesty to have been equally commendable for the enlightened humanity by which they were suggested and for the decision with which they were carried into execution.

Sir, Government House, Antigua, 8 April 1835.

Doubts as to the legality of inflicting the punishment of whipping on female apprenticed labourers and female children of that class being about to be brought to the notice of the Right Honourable the Earl of Aberdeen, I request your Excellency will be pleased to adopt such measures as may tend to suppress this practice in the Islands under your Excellency's administration, until his Lordship's instructions respecting it shall have been received. Copy of a DESPATCH from Lord Glenelg to Governor Sir E. J. Murray MacGregor, Bart.

Sir, Downing-street, 15 June 1835.

I have received your Despatch of the 9th of April last, representing that the provisions of the 17th clause of the Imperial Act for the Abolition of Slavery have been variously interpreted in the various Islands under your government, and that the special magistrates act on different systems, even in the same Colony, in regard to the whipping of female apprenticed labourers and female children of that class. No. 219.

In the absence of any explanation of the nature or grounds of this doubt, I can only state that it appears to me that the words of the Act of Parliament distinctly and unequivocally forbid the practice in question. The enactment is, that it shall not be lawful for any Colonial Legislature, or for His Majesty in Council, "to authorize any court, judge or justice of the peace to punish any apprenticed labourer, being a female, for any offence by her committed, by whipping or beating her person." I know not how the prohibition could be rendered more absolute or more comprehensive. As, however, doubts have been raised, I approve of the course you adopted, of directing the officers administering the Governments of St. Christopher's, Dominica, Nevis, Montserrat and the Virgin Islands to interpose their authority for the prevention of any such punishments. You will signify to them, and through them to the special magistracy of the different Islands, my entire concurrence in your interpretation of the law on this subject.

Copy of a DESPATCH from Lord Glenelg to Governor Sir E. J. Murray MacGregor, Bart.

Sir, Downing-street, 26 July 1835.

No. 220. His Majesty's Government have had under their consideration the Acts passed by the Legislature of St. Christopher's in the month of July 1834, with a view of giving effect to the Act of Parliament for the Abolition of Slavery, of which the titles are as follow:

"An Act for the Abolition of Slavery in this Island, and for the establishment of a system of Apprenticeship for a limited time in lieu thereof."

"An Act for prescribing the Powers and Duties of Special Magistrates."

"An Act to divide Apprenticed Labourers into several Classes."

"An Act to provide for Apprenticed Labourers during the term of their Apprenticeship."

"An Act for prescribing the Duties and regulating the Conduct of Apprenticed Labourers within this Island."

"An Act to prescribe the Duties to be performed by Employers towards their Apprenticed Labourers, and to enforce the performance of the same."

"An Act to regulate the removal of Prædial Apprenticed Labourers from one Plantation to another, to establish certain Rules to govern the Sale of the Services of all classes of Apprenticed Labourers, and the disposition thereof by Will, as well as to regulate the Descent of the same in cases of Intestacy."

"An Act for dividing this Island into Districts, and for establishing a sufficient Police within the same."

"An Act to punish Apprenticed Labourers for Offences against the public welfare."

"An Act to regulate the dissolution of Apprenticeship by the voluntary act of the Employer, and to compel such dissolution in cases where the Labourer is able and willing to purchase his or her discharge from Apprenticeship."

"An Act to extend to the Island of Anguilla the several Acts passed by the Island of St. Christopher, pursuant to an Act of Parliament made and passed in the 3d and 4th year of the reign of His present Majesty, intituled, 'An Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies; for promoting the Industry of the manumitted Slaves; and for compensating the persons hitherto entitled to the Services of such Slaves;' except as hereinafter provided."

It affords me sincere gratification to observe that the Legislature of St. Christopher appear to have been actuated by the desire of fully carrying into effect the instructions of the King and the wishes of Parliament on the important subjects to which these Acts relate. It is true that they contain several variations from the model prescribed by His Majesty in Council, which I cannot consider to have been quite judicious; but, with only two exceptions, they appear to me to come within that class of topics on which some scope for difference of opinion must be allowed; and the general spirit and tenor of the Acts afford me the strongest assurance that the Legislature of St. Kitt's will readily give their attention to the suggestions I feel it my duty to make upon these points, with the view of removing the objections I entertain with respect to them.

1st. By the 7th section of the Act, prescribing the duties of special magistrates, the apprenticed labourers are made liable to summary conviction and prompt punishment, in certain cases, for perjury, although for perjuries committed on the same occasions persons entirely free could be punished only on legal conviction after a regular trial. This is an encroachment upon the general principle of legal equality in whatever respects the administration of the penal law, which though perhaps not very essential in its direct consequences, may yet not be without importance, as impairing the integrity of that general principle.

2dly. The 11th section of the Act, for regulating the conduct of the apprenticed labourers, subjects them to imprisonment, with hard labour, for absenting themselves from the service of their employers, and then requires that they shall make satisfaction to the employer, not only for the time of absence, but for

for the time lost to him by the imprisonment. To constitute the apprentice a debtor to the extent of the injury which his endurance of the punishment of imprisonment may incidentally inflict upon his employer, appears to me unreasonable; and it is also objectionable, as giving the employer an interest in the misconduct of his apprentice.

Feeling assured that the Legislature of St. Christopher will apply themselves to remedy these defects, in the same spirit with which they have already given effect to the British Act, by the supplementary enactments which have been under my consideration, I am happy to announce to you that His Majesty's Government are of opinion that the Legislature of St. Christopher have performed the condition upon which the right of the Colony to a participation in the compensation fund has been made to depend.

COPY of RESOLUTIONS on the subject of the ABOLITION of SLAVERY, passed by the HOUSE of ASSEMBLY, and concurred in by the Honourable Board of Council, the 20th August 1833.

Resolved, That in conformity with the wishes of Parliament, such effectual measures be adopted for the speedy Abolition of Slavery as may be consistent with a due regard to the permanent welfare of the slaves, the interests of the masters, and the general safety of the community at large.

Resolved, That it is expedient that the grant of £.20,000,000 sterling offered by the two Houses of the British Parliament towards compensation to the proprietors of slaves, for the losses they will sustain by the operation of the measures proposed by His Majesty's Government be accepted, though totally inadequate for the purpose of compensation; provided such grant be distributed among the proprietors of slaves at an equal sum per head for every slave throughout the Colonies.

Resolved, That to secure the tranquillity of this Colony, and to obviate the dangers and evils which a sudden change in the condition of the labouring population will produce, it is indispensably necessary to maintain an active and powerful system of police. And this House receives with gratitude the announcement of His Majesty's gracious intention to defray the expenses incidental to such an establishment, and to provide, upon liberal and comprehensive principles, for the religious and moral instruction of the emancipated population.

Sir, 31st August 1833.

YOUR Honour's Letter of the 22d instant, together with the joint Resolutions of the Council and Assembly of Nevis, for the extinction of Slavery, will be duly conveyed to the Right honourable the Secretary of State for the Colonial Department.

So many conflicting interests of various Colonies press simultaneously upon the attention of His Majesty's Government and of Parliament, that modifications are to be looked for during the progress through the Houses of Lords and Commons, of those measures which the King's Ministers may propose, as in their estimation the best adapted for promoting the general interests of the Colonists at large.

This consideration induces me, although with the greatest deference, rather to doubt the expediency of the second Resolution, passed by the Legislature of the Island under your administration, if it is actually intended to imply that a share of the £.20,000,000 sterling, offered by the British Parliament, in compensation for the value of slaves, is positively declined by the proprietors in Nevis, unless the grant be distributed "at an equal sum per head for every slave throughout the Colonies."

Mr. President, and Gentlemen of the Council,
Mr. Speaker, and Gentlemen of the Assembly,

ALTHOUGH it was my intention, as early as the arrangements of the respective Colonies consequent on the important event of emancipation might properly admit of my absence from Antigua, to have visited the several Legislatures of the other Islands in this Government, it is not without the most serious regret that I now experience the necessity of trespassing on your attention at an unusual season, owing to the refractory disposition displayed by certain evil-minded Negroes in an adjacent possession of the Crown.

The King having announced the determination to enforce obedience to lawful authority, it is impracticable to foresee what ruinous results these infatuated people may entail upon themselves; and therefore most pleasing to me to ascertain, that by the preservation of peace and order the labourers of Nevis judiciously cultivate the good opinion and favourable report of their employers, and thereby dutifully seek to be further recommended to the paternal care of our most Gracious Sovereign.

Mr. Speaker, and Gentlemen of the Assembly,

The liberality of your Honourable House fully warrants the expectation that on your part nothing will be left undone to foster the present laudable sentiments of the working classes, and to shield the internal tranquillity of the Colony from interruption.

Mr. President, and Gentlemen of the Council,
Mr. Speaker, and Gentlemen of the Assembly,

The real interests of the various orders of inhabitants being indissolubly blended, it is impossible, when assembled together on an auspicious occasion, to be ever memorable in West Indian history, not to hail with exultation that happy alteration in the fabric of Colonial society this day fortunately achieved through the enlightened benevolence and energy of the King's Councils.

At the same time that thousands of our fellow creatures and their descendants yet unborn are permanently exonerated from bondage, the higher ranks of the community are relieved from the inconvenience of waging a harassing and hopeless contest against those of the parent State, and the prosperity of these Colonies, unembarrassed by any intervening shade of distinction, is henceforward identified with that of the rest of His Majesty's dominions.

The King's loyal and faithful subjects of Nevis, diligently and quietly pursuing their avocations under the new system opening with this cheering prospect, may lean on the protection of the officers entrusted by His Majesty with the administration of civil affairs and with the command of the royal naval and military forces, who are prepared to concur with and support your Honourable Board and House, if requisite, in repressing and punishing any infraction of the laws.

May it please your Excellency,

WHILE we regret that untoward circumstances in a neighbouring possession of the Crown have rendered it necessary for your Excellency to be absent from Antigua at an unusual season, we cannot at the same time refrain from expressing our grateful acknowledgments for those prompt and decisive measures you have adopted in order to provide for the safety of every Colony under your Government.

We feel happy that the conduct of the labouring population of this Island is such as to deserve the good opinion and favourable report of their employers, and further, to recommend them to the paternal care of our most Gracious Sovereign.

We receive with gratitude your Excellency's assurance, that in the critical circumstances in which we are placed, we may rely with confidence on the protection of the officers entrusted by His Majesty with the administration of civil affairs and with the command of the royal naval and military forces.

To His Excellency Sir Evan J. Murray M'Gregor, Bart.,
&c. &c. &c.

May it please your Excellency,

With sentiments of cordial sincerity, we, the Members of the House of Assembly in this Island, beg leave to offer to your Excellency our congratulations on your presence in this Island at the commencement of an era productive of the most important changes in the civil state of society in His Majesty's West India possessions; and our satisfaction on this occasion is much increased by the general state of tranquillity which we have hitherto enjoyed, and from our well-grounded expectations that good order and obedience to the laws will continue to be observed by all classes of this community.

We are happy in assuring your Excellency, that the labourers of this Island, with some few exceptions, are dutiful and obedient, and all of them are impressed with lively sentiments of loyalty and gratitude to our most Gracious Sovereign for the blessed gift of freedom which this day they enjoy; and if any dissatisfaction, arising from misconception or ignorance, may have been partially manifested on some few occasions, such feeling we have good reason to believe is now removed by the care which has been diligently taken in explaining to the labourers the real nature of the benefits which they will now continue to enjoy, and of the salutary restrictions which for a season are imposed upon them.

It has been a subject of much regret and disappointment to the inhabitants of this Colony that the officer entrusted by His Majesty with the special jurisdiction incidental to the new state of society has not arrived to assume his functions. In the labouring class the absence of this magistrate may create distrust, in the other classes much embarrassment, and in all considerable difficulty, from the want of a competent authority to administer justice. We earnestly trust that your Excellency will take the most efficient means to procure a speedy remedy for this untoward circumstance.

In the exalted sentiments of exultation with which the hearts of the enlightened and benevolent in the Mother Country will be filled by the events of this day, we sincerely and fully participate. Slavery now belongs only to history. In the annals of the world no parallel transition from bondage to freedom can be found by which at once was removed the accumulated mass of evil which an age had built up; and relying on the beneficent protection and care of our gracious King, we look forward with confidence to the cheering prospect which the unimpeded exertion of the labourer and the more prosperous condition of the higher classes will soon we trust afford.

I DO myself the honour of transmitting to you the enclosed copy of a Letter from Mr. Daniell, the President of Nevis, on the subject of your circular Despatch, dated 30th September 1834, in reference to the probable consequences of the great change in the condition of the Negro population of His Majesty's Colonies, on the system of cultivating lands, and on the general pursuits of industry.

Enclosure in No. 231.

Sir, Government House, 12 January 1835.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge to your Excellency the receipt from the Right honourable the Secretary of State for the Colonies, of a circular Despatch, dated the 30th September 1834, in which is requested the communication of local experience and opinions, as to the effects which free labour, and the apprenticeship of the Negroes, are likely to produce upon the pursuits of profitable industry; it therefore becomes my duty to offer to your Excellency the following observations:—

A landed proprietor in Nevis, as in most of the West Indian islands, is at the same time an agriculturalist and a manufacturer. In the former character he raises, by a difficult and uncertain system of cultivation, the sugar-cane, various vegetables used as food, and some which minister to luxury; in the latter he produces, by processes more or less laborious and complicated, sugar, molasses and rum.

Of these substances, so generally used for domestic purposes, some quantity is of course consumed within the Colony; but the great bulk is exported to the United Kingdom, to the British North American possessions, and to the United States.

The sweet potatoe, the Angola pea, the banana, the yam, and the Indian and Guinea corn, are cultivated to some extent, entirely for internal consumption, and principally as food for the labouring class, who are, however, mainly dependent on importation for the articles of their sustenance. The plant which yields the arrow-root, and those fruits which are preserved in the form of sweetmeats, are slightly attended to, and small quantities are exported.

It may be presumed that a West Indian estate, when disencumbered of the weight of supporting, through all seasons, whether productive or otherwise, the same number of labourers, will be wielded with more facility as an instrument of production. When the soil is separated from its cultivations it will be purchased for less money, and will consequently be more easily acquired for the purposes of experimental agriculture. Many persons possessing the requisite skill and enterprize are at present deterred from embarking in such pursuits, by the large outlay of capital necessary at the commencement, and the annual cost of maintaining persons attached to the land.

It does not appear that it will ever be possible to effect a disunion of the agriculturalists from the manufacturer. The cane harvest must be gathered as soon as it is fit for the mill, or it rapidly depreciates in value; and it is so bulky, and when severed from the stem so soon undergoes chemical changes, as to preclude the possibility of its transmission to any distance. There are, however, various improvements connected with the culture of the cane, the manufacture of sugar, and the distillation of rum, so palpable to the least scientific knowledge knowledge as to ensure their adoption, when an altered state of society shall render it possible to make changes in the present systems. Should the consumption of vinegar in the arts, or for domestic purposes, give rise to an increased demand for that substance in the United Kingdom, it might easily be produced, at trifling expense and of excellent quality, from cane juice, which is now converted into superfluous sugar.

As far as the lessons of experience have yet taught us, few favourable anticipations can be entertained as to the period during which the apprenticeship shall continue; so long will landed property hold an unnatural value, so long will the burthens of an estate remain the same, whether the seasons be adverse or propitious, so long will labour be rendered unwillingly, and the apprentice be confirmed in habits of indolence, so long will disagreement and dissatisfaction disturb the relation of master and servant, and so long will all prospects of social improvement remain unsettled and uncertain.

A great bar to the prosperity of the sugar colonies is to be found in the duty, amounting to a prohibition, levied on refined sugar imported into the United Kingdom. The process of refining is a mere extension of that by which Muscovado sugar is produced: by the adoption of a few alterations the purest sugar might be manufactured at once from the juice of the cane. The advantages of such a procedure are numerous and considerable. The rude and inartificial methods to which the cane juice is at present subjected, to bring it to the state of sugar, cannot but affect injuriously the product which is obtained. On an improved system the manufactured article would suffer no injury in its production; it would be less bulky, unalterable by the circumstances of a sea voyage, and when formed, would undergo no subsequent diminution by drainage.

The Nevis proprietor, suffering as he does under the pressure of adverse circumstances, justly considers the duty of four-and-a-half per cent., which he pays to His Majesty on all exported articles, and which is applied to purposes in which he is not interested, as a very grievous hardship. The abolition of this impost, or its application to objects connected with the Island, would be hailed by the colonists with delight, as a token of His Majesty's most gracious consideration for their distressed condition.

The fiscal regulations respecting tonnage appear to operate injuriously on commerce, as they affect trading vessels in proportion to their size, and not in proportion to the amount of intercourse which they may have with the Island.

The duties on the produce of the United States, with which communication might be more easily maintained than with the British possessions in North America, are disadvantageous to West Indies, however serviceable they may be to other colonies.

If those evils, which have been pointed out, are admitted to be really such, the remedies suggest themselves.

To remove the impediments which stand in the way of improvement in West Indian manufactures, by reducing the duty on sugar of perfect quality imported from these colonies into the United Kingdom, to abolish the four-and-a-half per cent. impost, or to apply it to insular purposes, to modify the tonnage duties, so as to affect vessels in proportion to their cargoes, and to facilitate, by an alteration of duties, the supply of such necessary articles as lumber, staves and flour, from places where they may be obtained at moderate prices and of good quality; these changes would all be the substitution of good for evil.

The establishment of an improved judicial system, the influence of which shall reach the Court of Chancery, is very desirable. It can hardly be expected that unprofessional persons should be competent to decide upon complicated legal questions; such, however, is the arrangement generally adopted at present.

The promotion of education, and of religious and moral instructions, cannot but be intimately connected with the prosperity of a community.

The further centralization of the government, by making one island the seat of the legislative, as well as of the supreme executive department, affords a reasonable prospect of advantage; such a legislature would be actuated by more general views, and, on the principle of selection, would be composed of more competent persons, than at present form the local Councils and Assemblies. The resort of a number of delegates to one point would render it of increased importance, and would greatly advance it in civilization. Mutual intercourse would put each in possession of whatever existed in the department of another worthy of being known, and on their return they would all carry back an increased stock of information for local purposes.

Copy of a DESPATCH from Lord Glenelg to Governor Sir E. J. Murray M'Gregor, Bart.

Sir, Downing-street, 27th July 1835.

The two Acts passed by the Legislature of the Island of Nevis, for giving effect within that Colony to the Act of Parliament for the Abolition of Slavery, do not appear to have hitherto been made the subject of any communication to yourself: I now proceed to apprize you of the views which His Majesty's Government have taken of the provisions of those laws.

NEVIS.

On comparing the Acts of Nevis with the orders made by the King in Council for a similar purpose in reference to the Islands of Trinidad, St. Lucia and Mauritius, they appear to be not only much more compendious, but in certain important respects defective. Bearing in mind, however, the narrowness of the society of Nevis, and the consequent paucity of the resources at the command of the local Legislature, I am ready to admit, that the abbreviation of the forms of the Orders in Council, and even the omission of some of their rules, may not constitute a valid ground of objection to these Acts. I have, however, to call the attention of the Council and Assembly of the Island to the following remarks, to which the apology I have already mentioned for other departures from the model proposed to them is inapplicable.

First,—If the supply of food to the apprenticed labourers should be deficient, the complaint must be preferred within one week from the neglect. This time is manifestly too short; because the opportunity of making the complaint may often not present itself until a much later period.

Secondly,—The removal of apprenticed labourers from one plantation to another belonging to the same owner, is authorized by the 16th section of the first of these Acts, if the sanction of a single special magistrate can be obtained. But by the ninth section of the Act of Parliament, the consent in writing of two such justices at the least is declared indispensable. It is with very serious regret that I notice this direct repugnancy between the Colonial Act and the Imperial enactment. His Majesty in Council cannot, of course, confirm any law of any colony which is in positive contradiction to any part of this, or indeed of any other Act of Parliament; but an Act not so sanctioned cannot be declared by the King to be, within the terms of the 44th section, an "adequate and satisfactory provision" for giving effect to that statute. Consequently, the persons formerly entitled to the services of the emancipated slaves in Nevis have not yet acquired a right to participate in the compensation fund. It is superfluous to urge upon you and upon the legislature of the Island the most prompt attention to this subject, with a view to the necessary amendment of the enactment in question.

Thirdly,—A summary process of ejectment against apprenticed labourers trespassing on land, is given by the 23d section. It will be necessary that some time (probably not more than twelve months) should be fixed, after the lapse of which the possessory title of the apprentice should be placed beyond the reach of this prompt remedy.

Fourthly,—The language of the 24th section is such as to afford some countenance to the opinion, that an apprenticed labourer in attendance on the person of his or her employer, may be removed from the Island, even against the will of the labourer. It being quite clear that such a proceeding would be illegal, I do not suppose that the Colonial Legislature really designed to authorize it. They should, however, prevent the possible misconstruction of their meaning in this respect, by a distinct affirmation that they are not to be so understood.

Fifthly,—By the 33d section, the substitution of whipping for imprisonment is authorized in the case of male offenders; and the substituted whippings may be repeated three times with a maximum of thirty lashes on each occasion, as the punishment for a single offence. It is impossible to sanction the exercise of such an authority by any magistrate whatever, even though invested with a special commission. The infliction of ninety stripes for any offence cognizable before him, is quite inadmissible. In this respect, His Majesty's Government cannot authorize any advance beyond the limits prescribed in the Order in Council; nor will they consider the Parliamentary condition as fulfilled, until the Act of the Legislature of Nevis shall have been amended accordingly.

Sir, Tortola, May 5th, 1834.

I HAVE the honour, in compliance with a requisition, of which the enclosed is a copy, authorized by the Council and Assembly of the Virgin Islands, to forward herewith, for your consideration and His Majesty's approval, transcripts of four Acts, intituled as therein mentioned, which have been passed by those branches of the Legislature, and shall also take advantage of the earliest conveyance to transmit to his Excellency the Governor-in-Chief, transcripts of the same, together with copies of the said requisition and of this Despatch; and shall, at the same time, furnish his Excellency, in conformity to his general direction, with the opinion of the senior King's counsel of this Colony relative to those Acts which have been submitted to him for examination.

May 2, 1834. On the 11th, 16th & 23d April 1834. Vide President Isaac's Despatch, 30 July 1834.

The existing diversity of opinion of different members of the Legislature during the course of their endeavours to frame Acts corresponding with the Act of Parliament for the Abolition of Slavery in the British Colonies, and, at the same time, to render them as salutary as possible to all descriptions of persons in these Islands, without losing sight of the local circumstances of the Colony, has retarded the completion of their enactments to so late a period, that were those Acts to be sent to the Governor-in-Chief in the first instance, and the usual course of proceeding to take place, His Majesty's pleasure could not possibly be known here previous to the first of August, when it will be of the utmost importance to the safety and welfare of this Colony that some law should be in force, adapted to the great change which will then take place; and as I have not had the honour to receive any reply to my Despatch, dated the 13th April last, to his Excellency Governor M'Gregor, shortly after receiving a notification that such requisition would be made, requesting his Excellency's direction for my guidance on the occasion, and which I can only attribute to a cause for which I feel great regret, having learnt on the packet's arrival, a few days ago, that he was so much indisposed as to be unable to attend to business; I have therefore been induced, from the urgency of the case, to entertain the application, considering that I am, as the officer administering the government of these Islands, borne out in doing so by the "Fourth Article" of the additional Royal Instructions.

It is a subject of considerable regret to Mr. Spring Rice that the Bills should have been sent home in such a form; but in order to obviate the serious inconvenience which would result to the Islands by these Bills not coming into operation on the 1st August next, I am directed to acquaint you that Mr. Spring Rice has received the King's commands to inform you, that if the House of Assembly of the Virgin Islands be still in session, and the usages of the Colony permit it, the required assent should be given by the officer administering the Government. If, on the other hand, the session shall have been closed, I am to desire that immediate steps be taken to convene the Legislature, who must be invited to re-enact these Bills, to which, when so re-enacted, Mr. President Isaacs will give his assent.

Tortola.

I have the honour to state, that His Majesty's ship 'Belvidera' anchored on the 23d in the harbour of Tortola, and the Enclosures Nos. 1, 2 and 3 show what passed there between the Legislature and myself. A degree of uncertainty, rather than positive alarm, seemed to prevail respecting the intentions of the Negro population; but the militia, including the liberated Africans, who are highly loyal and zealous, were under arms and well clothed and appointed, which circumstance, together with the presence of the King's troops, the established conviction that ships of war are in the neighbourhood, ready to appear if wanted, and the probability that experience may reconcile the apprenticed labourers to their new condition, lead me to dismiss the idea of their openly resisting its provisions, unless attempts of the like nature in any other quarter should unfortunately prove successful.

24th July 1834.

The special magistrate appointed by His Majesty's Government for service in the Virgin Islands had not yet appeared there, which was felt by the public authorities as a most serious inconvenience.

Mr. President, and Gentlemen of the Council,
Mr. Speaker, and Gentlemen of the Assembly,

In addressing your Honourable Board and House, it is a source of gratification to me publicly to testify the favourable sense with which I am impressed of the general good conduct, since my appointment to this government, of the labouring population.

Rejoicing, as a sincere friend of the Negro race, at the important amelioration of their lot about to be introduced on the abolition of slavery, I anxiously advise them by diligence, assiduity and obedience during the intermediate stage of apprenticeship to evince their loyalty and gratitude to the King, and by meriting a continuance of His Majesty's Royal protection thus to render themselves deserving of the ulterior benefits to be eventually conferred on them under the auspices of our most Gracious Sovereign.

Mr. Speaker, and Gentlemen of the Assembly,

The Executive looks to your Honourable House for such co-operation as the best interests of your constituents may be found to demand, particularly in adequately accommodating His Majesty's troops at present stationed here.

Mr. President, and Gentlemen of the Council,
Mr. Speaker, and Gentlemen of the Assembly,

The circumstances attending my arrival at this crisis attest the determination of the civil authorities as well as of the officers commanding the King's naval and military forces, by the vigilant maintenance of public order and tranquillity, to secure the safety and promote the prosperity of all classes of His Majesty's faithful subjects in the Virgin Islands.

We, the members of His Majesty's Council of the Virgin Islands, beg leave to express our great satisfaction at your Excellency's visit to this part of your government.

We are happy to concur with your Excellency, that the slave population since your Excellency's administration have conducted themselves in a peaceable and orderly manner; and we sincerely hope that they will by their future good behaviour evince their loyalty and gratitude to the King, and thereby merit a continuance of His Majesty's Royal protection.

We duly appreciate the motive by which your Excellency was induced to visit this Colony, and rest satisfied that your Excellency, as well as the officers commanding the King's naval and military forces, will use all the means in their power for maintaining public order and tranquillity, and securing the safety and promoting the prosperity of all classes of His Majesty faithful and loyal subjects in the Virgin Islands.

Extract of a LETTER from his Honour the President of the Virgin Islands to Sir Evan Murray M'Gregor, Bart., dated 4 August 1834.

I feel most happy in being enabled to inform your Excellency that the 1st of August has passed off very quietly. The Negroes generally throughout the Island were given the day; a great number came into town and attended their usual places of worship, and conducted themselves very peaceably; no unusual excitement was manifested, and with the exception of a few instances, of little importance, all went quietly to their work under the new system on the following Monday morning. I sincerely hope this state of things may continue.

—No. 240.—

Copy of a DESPATCH from Lord Glenelg to Governor Sir E. J. Murray M'Gregor, Bart.

Sir, Downing-street, 28 July 1835.

HIS Majesty's Government have had under their consideration four Acts passed by the Legislature of the Virgin Islands in the month of April 1834, (although not received at this department till the present month,) of which the numbers and titles are as follows:

(No. 87.) "An Act for regulating the division of apprenticed Labourers into their respective Classes, and for providing for the dissolution of the Apprenticeship by Contract or otherwise."

(No. 88.) "An Act for prescribing the duties of apprenticed Labourers and Employers respectively, and imposing Penalties for the non-performance thereof, and providing other regulations for the maintenance of good order."

(No. 89.) "An Act for prescribing the powers and duties of special Justices, and for defining the Jurisdiction of the same."

(No. 90.) "An Act to regulate the removal of prædial apprenticed Labourers from one Plantation or Estate to another; the alienation by sale, inheritance or will, of the services of apprenticed Labourers; the apprenticeship of children of apprenticed Labourers, and the relation in which apprenticed Labourers will stand towards the State in the said Virgin Islands, and thereby to carry more effectually into operation the enactments contained in that behalf in an Act of the Imperial Parliament of Great Britain, intituled, 'An Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies, for promoting the Industry of the manumitted Slaves, and for compensating the Persons hitherto entitled to the Services of such Slaves.'"

The common object of these laws is to give effect to the Act for the Abolition of Slavery; and being for the most part transcribed from the projected Order of the King in Council, of which copies were sent to the West Indian Legislatures for their guidance, they are, in their general tenour, free from objection. But there are some material exceptions to be made to this remark, which I proceed to specify.

First.—By the 7th and 10th clauses of the Act No. 87, the right of purchasing a discharge from apprenticeship is denied to the labourers in two cases. The first is that in which the party shall have been proved to have been guilty at any time since his apprenticeship of any theft, larceny, or any crime or felony; or of having received stolen goods; or of having acquired dishonestly or fraudulently any part of the money he is about to pay; or of having run away or absented himself from his employer's service for twenty days at one or at several times, or shall have been convicted of harbouring any runaway apprentice. The second case is that in which the apprentice may fail to pay the amount of the valuation; that failure is to be fatal to his application for a discharge at any future time. Without pausing to comment on the injustice of these provisions, it is sufficient to say that they are repugnant to the 8th clause of the Act of Parliament, which gives the right of purchasing a discharge, unfettered by any such restriction. No Colonial Legislature can lawfully contravene the British statute by such an enactment.

Second.—The 12th and 13th sections of the Act No. 88, forbid the apprentice to receive any person in his own hut, if within the employer's estate, except with the employer's consent; the case of a husband or wife being excepted only, if the applicant for the indulgence be of good character, and if the request for conjugal society be preferred in a proper manner; and even then the parties are to meet at the home of the apprentice only at proper times, and as long as they shall conduct themselves in a proper manner. There is an uncertainty and harshness in these rules, which I forbear to dwell upon, since their illegality is a still more conclusive objection to them. The apprentice is the tenant at will of the hut he occupies, paying rent in the form of services, and entitled to admit into his home whatever person he shall think proper, provided that his guests or inmates do not infringe the police regulations of the Colony, or the good discipline of the plantation. To debar husbands and wives of each other's society, or even, in the present state of West Indian manners, to forbid an apprenticed labourer to receive his concubine under his roof, is an invasion of the rights of the apprentice, for which no compensation could be found in any consequent increase of good order or of good morals.

VIRGIN ISLANDS.

Third.—The 15th section of the same Act forbids the apprentice to quit the district in which he lives, without a written pass from his employer. Unless the special justice be entitled to grant this indulgence, the effect will be to give to the employer a monopoly of the leisure time and extra labour of their apprentices. This is entirely at variance with the spirit of the Act of Parliament, and terms of the Order in Council.

Fourth.—The 19th section forbids an apprentice to depasture any cattle or other live stock, on the land of any person whatever, except in pursuance of a written authority for the purpose. Such regulations, if enforced, are calculated to give rise to continual vexation, and do little or no good.

Fifth.—Under the 28th section of the same Act, the special magistrates are authorized to sentence the apprentices to imprisonment on the estates. No security is taken against the use of improper places of confinement.

Sixth.—The seven and a half hours of daily labour are, by the 39th section, declared to commence with the arrival of the labourer at his place of work. I cannot admit the justice of this rule. While walking thither, he is just as much engaged in his employer's service as when actually at work there; and if he resides four miles from the scene of his labour, this rule would add two hours daily to the period prescribed by Parliament.

Seventh.—By the 51st section of the Act No. 88, and by the 24th section of the Act No. 89, an appeal is given to the King's Bench and quarter sessions against the decision of the special magistrates. As those courts have no judges except the proprietors of the colony, the result of this rule is to give to them an entire control over the administration of the law between employers and apprentices.

Eighth.—By the 22d section of the Act No. 89, whatever time an apprentice passes in prison will render him a debtor to his employer for a double amount, just as though the absence had been voluntary. I consider this twofold punishment objectionable, both as unjust in itself, and as giving to the employer a direct interest in the misconduct of his apprentice.

Ninth.—By the second clause of the Act No. 90, it is declared that the consent of a single special justice shall be sufficient to authorize the transfer of a prædial apprentice from one plantation to another. The 9th section of the British Act of Parliament requires the consent of two justices. If it is said there may be only one in the Colony, the inevitable answer, I apprehend, is, that in such a case Parliament has made the apprentice irremovable. The expediency of that rule may be debated; but the existence of it, and consequently its authority until repealed, is perfectly clear.

Tenth.—The 4th section of the same Act declares, that in cases where the removal of the apprentice may not last beyond five days successively, the consent even of a single magistrate shall not be necessary. The 9th section of the Act of Parliament, on the contrary, forbids the employment of prædial apprentices at all, beyond the limits of the estates to which they were attached on the 1st of August last, unless the consent of two special justices be obtained in the peculiar case which is there mentioned.

You will be pleased to communicate to the Legislature of the Virgin Islands, the objections which I have been thus under the necessity of stating to their laws for giving effect to the Act for the Abolition of Slavery; and whilst you request them to take measures for removing these objections, you will not fail to remind them, that they cannot, in the meantime, be considered as having performed the condition on which alone they will be entitled to their share of the Compensation Fund.

Government House, Dominica,
Sir, Roseau, 3 August 1833.

I HAVE the honour to transmit (direct) a copy of a message received this day from the Honourable Board of Council and the Honourable House of Assembly of Dominica, for the information of the Right honourable the Secretary for the Colonies.

The message, as will appear, was in consequence of my communication to the Legislature on the subject of the resolutions which passed both Houses of Parliament, relative to the Abolition of Negro Slavery, bearing date 25 June 1833.

I have been induced to communicate direct, from the desire expressed on the part of the Right honourable Secretary to obtain information, as early as possible, on this important subject, and more especially as the packet might not delay sufficiently long at Antigua, to insure transmission through his Excellency the Governor in Chief from thence.

I have duly apprised his Excellency Sir Evan M'Gregor of the steps I have therefore thought it expedient to adopt.

His Honour the President and Council, and the Speaker and House of Assembly, to his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor.

IN acknowledging the receipt of your Honour's message of the 27th ultimo, received yesterday, transmitting for our information the very important Despatch of the Right honourable the Secretary of State for the Colonies, with the Resolutions by which the House of Commons have declared the expediency of adopting immediate and effectual measures for the Abolition of Slavery in the British Colonies; we beg leave to express our sense of the enlightened view which Parliament has taken of that momentous question, embracing as it does not only a great financial measure, but the interest of the slaves and society at large, both in the West Indies and the Mother Country.

The principle of compensation to proprietors of slaves having been conceded to the amount of twenty millions sterling, we most confidently rely on the justice of Parliament for a fair and unqualified distribution of this grant, per capite; we shall then be ready to co-operate with Government, and apply ourselves in a spirit and temper befitting the important duties of so arduous an undertaking as this great change in the existing relations of society will immediately require of us. We shall wait with a cheerful hope, not unmixed with anxiety, for the provisions of the Bill which is to give effect to the Resolutions, in the expectation that it will be of such a nature as to aid and assist our future deliberation on this important subject.

COPY of a DESPATCH from Lieutenant-Governor Sir C. M. Schomberg to Mr. Secretary Stanley.

Sir, Dominica, Roseau, 2d November 1833.

ALTHOUGH nothing has occurred to make it necessary for me to communicate with you direct, yet, as the present may be considered a moment of some anxiety, I do myself the honour of stating, that since His Majesty's proclamation has been promulgated in due form, and in French and English, and since the substance of the Act for the Abolition of Slavery has been explained in the fullest manner to the Negroes on the different estates, every thing has continued as tranquil on this Island as when I assumed the executive duties on the day of my arrival, the 23d April last.

DOMINICA.

The feeling on the part of the old Negroes, I have reason to believe, is not unmixed with doubts respecting their future fate, when the period of apprenticeship will terminate, and at a time when they may look forward to be helpless: that manifested by the younger people is merely an anxiety for speedy emancipation. Much more apathy, however, has been observed on the part of the Negroes generally on the subject, than was expected by people of considerable experience.

Some planters and attorneys on the estates now seem to wish for immediate and total emancipation of their Negroes, from an idea that they could make more advantageous arrangements than they fancy they are likely to do (all considered) under those about to be adopted. Doubts of future results must pervade a certain number of persons, but I hope not the majority. Coffee is likely to be more cultivated than heretofore, especially by the French proprietors, the advantages of which cannot of course be felt for some years.

I have the honour to enclose copies of messages to and from the Assembly on the occasion of presenting the Abolition Bill and its accompanying circular. The House on both occasions was thinly attended. I have reason to know that a great desire exists to ascertain the feelings of other islands on the present occasion.

I shall have the honour of transmitting to his Excellency the Governor-in-Chief copies of any public documents which may be forwarded to the Colonial Department from time to time.

I have, &c.

His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor to his Honour the Speaker and House of Assembly.

His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor avails himself of the earliest opportunity of laying before the honourable House of Assembly, "An Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies, for promoting the industry of the manumitted Slaves, and for compensating the Persons hitherto entitled to the Services of such Slaves," bearing date 28th August 1833, forwarded by Mr. Secretary Stanley, and received this day; the same having been assented to by His Most Gracious Majesty.

His Honour also transmits copies of a Royal Proclamation, which will be immediately made public, according to the instructions of the Right honourable the Secretary of State for the Colonial Department.

Whatever further information his Honour may have to transmit, both honourable Houses of the Legislature may depend on the earliest possible communication being made to them of it from time to time.

The Lieutenant-Governor avails himself of the present occasion to lay before the honourable House of Assembly a copy of a circular Despatch from the Right honourable the Secretary of State for the Colonial Department, relative to the "Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies," which has been already submitted.

The message received by the Lieutenant-Governor from the honourable House of Assembly, in reference to that Act, leads him confidently to look forward to cordial, earnest and active exertion, in furtherance of the important measures requisite to be adopted by the honourable House of Assembly, for the full accomplishment of the great objects which His Majesty's Government have in view, the happiness of His Majesty's subjects, and the prosperity of his colonial possessions.

The

The Lieutenant-Governor begs to assure the honourable House, that he will be most happy in cheerfully and diligently performing that part of his duty which may tend to facilitate the measures that may be thought expedient to adopt, in order to conquer any difficulties which may arise (from time to time) from local or unforeseen circumstances, and which the Lieutenant-Governor hopes will be no sooner discovered than dissipated.

COPY of a DESPATCH from Governor Sir E. J. Murray M'Gregor, Bart., to Mr. Secretary Stanley.

Sir, Government House, Antigua, 30th May 1834.

I DO myself the honour of forwarding two Acts passed by the Legislature of Dominica, and which have been assented to by the Lieutenant-Governor, under my instructions, in conformity with the advice of His Majesty's crown lawyers, for the Island of Antigua, viz.

Acts printed in the Appendix (B.) No. 41 & 42.

1st. "An Act for registering all Persons actually within this Island, on the first day of August, in this present year of our Lord One thousand eight hundred and thirty-four, and who shall have been duly registered as Slaves, in conformity with the Laws now in force; and also for establishing a Classification thereof, for the purposes set forth in and by an Act of the Imperial Parliament of Great Britain and Ireland, intituled, 'An Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies; for promoting the industry of the manumitted Slaves, and for compensating the Persons hitherto entitled to the Services of such Slaves.'"

2dly. "An Act for the Abolition of Slavery in this Island, in consideration of compensation, and for promoting the industry of the manumitted Slaves."

Extract of Summary by Attorney-General of Dominica.

"The first of these Bills has for its object,—

"1st. A new and special enregistration of all the slaves actually in the Colony on the 1st August 1834, with a view of clearly defining the parties coming within the terms of the first clause of the British Act; and secondly, the classification of the apprenticed labourers, according to a form annexed, and a statement in alphabetical order of the names of every slave in the Colony, with an additional column for those who shall, on the 1st August, be under the age of six years.

"The returns are directed to be on the 1st day of August 1834, or within thirty days after; the classification of the labourers is distinctly stated, and the whole of this section is in perfect accordance with the strict letter of the first and fourth sections of the British Act.

"2d. To facilitate the preparing these returns, the registrar is directed to send printed copies of the Act to the waywardens of each parish, for distribution and general information, to cause advertisements to be inserted in the public newspapers, and at the public expense to cause to be printed for general distribution forms of the returns directed to be made.

"3d. Registrar to preserve the original returns, and within six months to copy them in a strongly bound book, to be kept for public inspection.

"4th. The registrar to authenticate the registry when completed.

"5th. Parties making returns to be sworn to the truth thereof.

"6th. Registrar doubting the accuracy of the return to summon all proper parties and witnesses, and to inquire into the same, and if necessary to correct returns; either party to have the right to appeal to a judge of the Court of Common Pleas.

"7th. Party neglecting to make return on affidavit to incur a penalty not exceeding 25*l.* nor less than 40*s.*

"8th. The judges to make rules regulating the proceedings on appeals from the decision of the registrar.

"9th. Question arising as to what class an apprenticed labourer belongs, a certified extract from the registry to be conclusive evidence.

"10th. Registrar neglecting duty to incur penalty of 200*l.*, and to be liable to action at the suit of the party aggrieved.

"11th. Registrar to receive 300*l.* currency out of the Colonial Treasury, on the completion of the duties required of him by this Act.

"12th. Points out the mode in which fines and penalties are to be recovered; one half to the informer, and the other half to be paid in the Treasury.

"13th. Parties wilfully making false oath to any matter required by the Act declared guilty of perjury."

"The next Bill professes to embrace every object contemplated by the Act of Parliament, and is intituled, 'An Act for the Abolition of Slavery in this Island, in consideration of compensation, and for promoting the industry of the manumitted Slaves.'

"The first seven clauses are precisely in the terms of the British Act, with the exception of section 4 of the British Act, regulating the classification of the labourers, which is provided for by a distinct Bill, already alluded to.

"These clauses regulate the manner of discharging labourers from their apprenticeship, and they embrace the object of the Imperial Parliament, as expressed in the 7th and 8th sections of the British Act. In cases of compulsory discharge, without the consent of the employer, they provide that the appraised value shall be fixed by three magistrates, one of whom shall be of special appointment.

"—— Is in accordance with the 10th section of the British Act, and provides that no labourer, for the purposes of judicial sale, shall be removed from the place of his abode, and in cases of attached prædials shall only be sold with the land.

"—— This section, as well as the 45th, 46th, 47th, 48th and 49th, have in contemplation the carrying into effect the intention of the Imperial Parliament, as expressed in the 11*th section* of the British Act.

"—— Are transcripts from the 12th and 13th sections of the British Act.

"—— This is in accordance with the 18th and 19th sections of the British Act. Special justices alone to have exclusive jurisdiction over all offences, &c. committed by labourers or their employers in their relation to each other.

"—— Is in conformity to the 17th section of the British Act."

The various local rules and regulations which the 16th section of the British Act leaves it to the Legislature of each Colony to make and establish, for carrying into complete effect the object and the intention of the Imperial Parliament, are amply provided for by the remaining sections of this Bill, which have been transcribed, mostly from the Jamaica Act, and from the Orders in Council framed in reference to British Guiana, alluded to in Mr. Secretary Stanley's Despatch of the 19th October 1833. The "Jamaica Act," as published in the newspapers, has been relied upon as a model; but the enactments of the Dominica Bill are, in many particulars, much more full and explicit, and, in my humble opinion, embrace every point specified in the British Statute, or contemplated by His Majesty's Government.

The following is an extract from Lieutenant-Governor Sir Charles Schomberg's Despatch of the 19th instant, in which the foregoing Acts have been transmitted to me.

"I have caused the great seal of the Island to be affixed to each of the Acts herewith forwarded, in order (if your Excellency should deem it proper) that that the duplicate also should be transmitted to His Majesty's Secretary of State for the Colonies, instead of the usual practice of sending one copy to the President of the Board of Trade, to whose department the Acts in question do not in any way refer."

Dominica, Roseau, 1 August 1834,
6 o'clock P. M., Mail-boat due.

Sir,

THE date of this Letter will, I trust, sufficiently account for my having the honour of communicating with you direct, especially as his Excellency the Governor-in-Chief may not be immediately on the spot when the mail-boat takes her final departure for St. Thomas.

I therefore have the honour to state, that every thing is quiet, as far as I can learn up to the hour before stated; but an apparent sulky dislike to the apprenticeship system is quite manifest among the negroes, nor are there in Roseau, as yet, any symptoms of rejoicing or satisfaction displayed.

One stipendiary magistrate, who is indefatigable in the execution of his laborious duties, Mr. Radford, has arrived; the absence of the others is much felt, from the difficulties of the interior of this Island, and from the sickly season having set in with severity. I have therefore found it absolutely necessary to appoint 17 special magistrates to meet the weight of duty at this serious crisis, for the reasons already stated.

Schomberg my acknowledgements for these communications, and my approval of the appointment by him of 17 special magistrates to assist the one who had arrived from this country in meeting the weight of duty which was to be expected to devolve upon the magistracy at the present period. I learn with satisfaction the favourable opinion entertained by the Lieutenant-Governor of Mr. Radford, the stipendiary magistrate, who had reached his destination; and I trust that one, at least, of the others will have arrived in Dominica shortly after the date of Sir C. EXTRACT of a DESPATCH from Lieut.-Governor Sir C. M. Schomberg to Mr. Secretary Spring Rice, dated Dominica, Roseau, 15th August 1834.

A MERCHANT vessel, the Coriolanus, being on the point of sailing for England, as she will probably arrive before the regular packet, I have the honour to state for your information, that discontent has manifested itself, on the part of the negroes, on the French estates, by a refusal to labour and a declared hostility to the apprenticeship system of six years.

I have now, however, the satisfaction of reporting, that the insubordination alluded to has been promptly checked by firm but temperate measures, which had the effect of making the labourers resume their work for the present, and I hope for a continuance. The benefit derived from the appearance of the stipendiary magistrate, being a stranger, has been of great service, the other magistrates (special) having been familiar to the negroes.

Nothing has occurred, on the part of the negroes, of a more violent character than what has been stated, except in a few instances, and then the women were always the instigators and the most difficult to manage.

When the expected stipendiary magistrates arrive, I make no doubt but that much change may be produced for the better on the French estates, where laziness, subterfuge and neglect are only to be combatted by vigilance and perseverance.

The fatigue experienced by the magistrates, from the nature of the difficulties in penetrating into the Mountain Districts, has been great, the rains and sickly season having set in with severity.

My last communication from his Excellency the Governor in Chief was dated the 16th ult. His Excellency is, I believe, still at St. Christopher's.

P. S.—I have to regret that Mr. Radford, the stipendiary magistrate, is seriously ill from his exertions. His temporary loss is much felt, the negroes having the utmost confidence in him, being fully aware of his immediate authority.

Sir, Colonial Office, 10th January 1835.

WITH reference to the Act passed by the Lieutenant-Governor, Council and Assembly of Dominica, in the month of May last, for the Abolition of Slavery, I have to acquaint you that I expect to transmit to you by an early opportunity an Order of His Majesty in Council, by which that Act will be left to its operation.

On collating this Act with the corresponding law of Jamaica, I perceive that the former has been transcribed from the latter, with but few variations; and that these either do not affect the sense materially, or consist in amendments of which the uniform design is to render the law more effective. It therefore appears to me that I could not acquit myself of my duty on this occasion more correctly than by transmitting to you the enclosed Copy of the Despatch, in which my predecessor, Lord Stanley, commented on the corresponding law of Jamaica. The Council and Assembly of Dominica will receive it as containing those remarks which I think it necessary to make on the provisions made by them for accomplishing the same general object. It will be found inapplicable only in reference to those occasional amendments to which I have already adverted.

Sir, Government House, Barbadoes, 1 July 1833.

I HAVE the honour to enclose two Reports from the Lieutenant-Governor of St. Vincent, describing such unpleasant symptoms in the conduct of a part of the slave population of that Island, that I lost no time in repairing there myself; Commodore Farquhar having kindly allowed a brig of war to precede me and to attend my requisitions there.

I am now happy to report that the judicious measures adopted by Captain Tyler, the Lieutenant-Governor, effectually restored tranquillity.

It must not however be forgotten, that St. Vincent is remarkably strong in fastnesses, and security for slaves in rebellion, whence they can invade cultivated parts and long maintain themselves; and the rebellion of the Charibs, under the influence of the French, at the beginning of the last war, has left impressions of the difficulties by which they were ultimately overcome.

Altogether, from the intelligence of the negroes of this Island, and the knowledge they possess of the strength of the interior defences against regular troops, I shall watch over them with anxious suspicion; and as a temporary precaution, I have ordered arrangements by which the whole of the 69th regiment will be concentrated in the Island, a post established on the Charib coast, and a guard afforded to the capital; the Island meeting the whole expense of these additional quarters.

Enclosures in No. 254.

Sir, Government House, St. Vincent, 1 June 1833.

I HAVE the honour to acquaint your Excellency that I received on the 21st ult. information from the owner of one of the estates in the Charib country, that the negroes had become not only on that estate, but on others within the same district, very troublesome, displaying a great deal of insubordination, and using language towards their masters subversive of their power and authority. Presuming that such conduct was the result of a preconcerted plan on the part of the negroes, for the purpose of intimidating their owners and managers, I immediately directed the magistrates, within the district alluded to, to institute an inquiry into the above statements (a copy of my letter to them I forward to your Excellency), and to report to me the issue of their investigation. Their report (a copy of which, with one of the letters that accompanied it, I also enclose,) I received on the 26th ult.

No. 1. May 20th.

No. 2. May 21st.

No. 4 & 5. May 24th.

By these documents your Excellency will perceive the spirit that prevails at present among the negroes of that part of the Island, and I am led to believe by other information, that a similar feeling is common in the negro class throughout this Island. I am, however, far from imagining that these indications of disaffection will lead to any serious results, but at the same time, and more particularly under present circumstances, I thought it my duty to prove to them how prepared and determined we were to stop such proceedings, and to protect both the master and manager from insolence or revenge. To enable me to carry this desirable object into permanent and real effect, I am of opinion that the requisition for a small detachment of troops (as signified in the magistrate's letter,) to be stationed in or near the Charib country, would principally tend to impress the negroes with a just sense of obedience to the laws by which they are governed, as well as throw a shield of protection around the white inhabitants of that part of the country. The distance of these estates from Kingstown, and the difficulty of communication with it, arising from the peculiar formation of the intervening country, renders the necessity of local aid and assistance more imperative. Until that object can be attained, I have thought it advisable, with the concurrence of the Privy Council, to direct Major Reid of the Royal Engineers, an officer well known for his zeal and judgment, as well as his professional acquaintance with all parts of this Island, to repair to the Charib country, accompanied by one of the colonial aide-de-camps, and taking with him a circular which he was instructed to read to the slaves on the disturbed estates in the presence of their masters, who were desired to collect them together for that purpose.

No. 9. Circular, May 28th.

Major Reid was also directed to make observations, during this tour, as to the most eligible station for troops in that country, and to communicate with the proprietors respecting the best method of their quartering such troops.

Having

Having these several objects in view, it was my belief that the course I have adopted and explained to your Excellency, would answer all the ends the magistrates had contemplated as likely to be accomplished by my presence; and I moreover preferred that the civil authority should continue vested in them, until some more urgent cause than the present warranted its suspension.

No. 1.

My dear Sir, Waterloo, 20 May 1833.

I AM sorry to say that there is every appearance of our negroes becoming very troublesome. They all turn out morning and evening long after the proper time, and in a body. I was obliged on Saturday to send three of the Orange Hill people to the stocks, and I have learned that the gang of negroes declared, if they were punished, that they would go to the governor in a body. All the gangs are acting in the same manner, which shows that it is a preconcerted arrangement among them. I have every reason to think that they assemble at night to lay their plans; I of course punished the people this morning, and wait to see if they will put their threat into execution. I think before it is too late that we should apply for the establishment of a post at Mount Young; if all I hear be true, no time should be lost. I suppose you will be home to-morrow.

Sir, Grand Sable Estate, St. Vincent, 24 May 1833.

IN compliance with his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor's instructions, we have this day instituted an inquiry into the troublesome and insubordinate disposition which had manifested itself amongst the negroes on the properties situated in and near the Charib country, country, and beg leave to enclose, for his Excellency's further information, copies of the various depositions that have been taken, and to report that there appears to us to be a strong spirit of insubordination manifested amongst the negro population on many estates, and which we have every reason to suppose originates from the erroneous ideas they entertain relative to their immediate emancipation.

From the difficulty of eliciting any accurate information from the negroes respecting their own movements, we cannot decidedly state that nocturnal meetings have actually taken place for the purpose of discussing that subject, but we have every reason to suppose that such has been the case.

Under these circumstances, and considering the isolated position of the Charib country, and its distance from any military post, we beg leave respectfully to suggest to his Excellency, as a politic and precautionary measure, the expediency of affording some military protection to this important part of the Island, so soon as the state of the garrison will admit of it, and in the mean time the almost absolute necessity of having the public mind disabused on this important question, either by his Excellency's Proclamation, or what in our humble opinion would be still more efficient, a personal tour of inspection, as we have no doubt that his Excellency's presence would be attended with the most beneficial result to all parties.

And we press this recommendation the more earnestly, because, on reading over the enclosed depositions, his Excellency will not fail to observe in how very few instances have corporal punishments been had recourse to for the purpose of putting down this spirit of insubordination, and how desirable therefore it would be to induce a better feeling of the negro towards his master by the milder measures we have suggested, rather than be compelled to have frequent and repeated recourse to corporal punishments, which would be otherwise absolutely necessary, and which are still legalized by our colonial enactments.

We have, &c.

No. 5.

PROCEEDINGS of the Bench of Magistrates assembled at Grand Sable Estate in Charlotte Parish, St. Vincent, by order of his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor, for the purpose of inquiring into "the troublesome and insubordinate disposition which had manifested itself among the Negroes on the Properties situated in and near the Charib Country."

Friday, 24th day of May 1833.

Patrick Crichton, Esq. of Langley-park,
George Colquhoun Grant, Esq. of the Adelphi,
Rev. Thomas Alexander Browne, of Grand Sable, } SITTING MAGISTRATES.

James Sutherland, esq. of Waterloo estate, being sworn, deposed,—That on his return home from Kingstown, on Thursday, the 16th day of May, he was informed by his manager at Orange-hill, Mr. Stevenson, that the negroes during his absence in town had turned out very late to their work, which he had also confirmed by the testimony of the driver, "that such was the case, but what was the occasion of it he did not know."

Mr. Sutherland added, that he declared in the presence of the gang on the Friday afternoon, that if they persisted in their misconduct he would certainly punish them. The following day (Saturday) he attended at the field himself, and finding the negroes still persisting in the same conduct, ordered three of them into confinement.

The next day (Sunday) he was informed by his manager, that the gang had been overheard to say, that if those three men were punished, they would all go in a body to the governor to complain.

On Monday those three individuals were punished; since which time the gang have turned out to their work at the usual hour.

Mr. Stevenson, the manager of Orange-hill estate, being sworn, confirmed the evidence of Mr. James Sutherland, as relates to what passed in his presence; and further added, that the gang, for some days previous to the return of Mr. Sutherland from town, had generally turned out about half an hour after sunrise, and then proceeded (apparently on a preconcerted plan), in a body to the field which they seldom reached until a quarter before seven o'clock. Mr. Stevenson being asked by whom he was informed of the declaration of the negroes, that if those three men were punished, they would go in a body to the governor to complain, declined naming the person, from an apprehension that the individual might thereby be exposed to ill treatment from the rest of the negroes.

Mr. Alexander Macleod, of Turama, the estate adjoining Orange-hill, being sworn, deposed,—That he went to town on Tuesday, the 14th instant, and on the morning of the 18th, on going to the field, found that the gang had, during his absence of four days, done no more work than they might or ought to have done in two days. On inquiry, the overseer informed him that the negroes turned out very late in the morning; and that in the afternoon, noon, although they had been allowed fully two hours at noon, they did not turn out till an hour after the shell had blown. He attended at the field himself in the afternoon of the day on which he received the information, and observed that the gang, contrary to their usual practice, had collected in a body near the negro houses, from whence they proceeded to the field in the same manner, and reached it half an hour after the time they ought to have been at work. In consequence of their misconduct, and this apparent combination to neglect their work, he ordered four of those who appeared to be the principals to be punished, since which period they have turned out at the regular hour. One of the four, named Grandison, who had been ordered into confinement after being punished, was heard by Mr. Davis, one of the overseers, and Quashie, one of the coopers, to declare that what had been done to him he would soon do to them. Mr. Macleod being questioned by the magistrates whether he has any knowledge of nightly meetings being held by the negroes from different estates, said that he had every reason to believe that such do frequently take place, as he often met with numbers of the negroes from the other estates going in the direction of Orange-hill and Turama, at very late hours of the night; and further added, that during a residence of twenty-six years in the Charib country, he never before observed the same want of discipline and obedience which has been manifested for some months past. On one occasion, when returning home at eleven o'clock at night, he observed a body of about twenty-five negro men assembled on the high road, at the boundary line between the Rabacca and Waterloo estates; and on his riding up at a quick pace to discover who they were, they immediately dispersed themselves among the cane fields.

Alexander Cumming, esq., proprietor of Lot 14 and Rabacca estate, being sworn, stated that there has been a visible alteration in the conduct of the gang of No. 14 estate, within the last few months. The negroes have come into the hospital in considerable numbers, from thirty to fifty each morning, and the greater number without any appearance of sickness, or in fact any cause to prevent them from pursuing their usual occupations, some stating that they had been attending at the mill, and others at the copper-hole the preceding day, and were tired. A case of this kind occurred two days ago. A man named George came to the hospital, and said that he had a pain in his side; that he had been fireman yesterday, and that he wanted rest. Mr. Cumming told him that he did not think that there was much the matter with him, and thought that he might go to his work, asking him how he could expect to be fed and clothed, &c. unless he worked for it. To this George replied that he had already worked for his master a great deal; that it was true his master gave him fish and clothing, but that the work he did was quite sufficient payment for it; that as to his provision grounds, he had cleared and planted them himself, and that he considered them to be his own; that although his master had bought him with his money, he had already worked sufficiently long to pay him for what he cost. Mr. Cumming left George in the hospital; but on his return after breakfast, found that he had left it on business not connected with the estate, which evidently proved that he was able to resume his labour in the field, if he had been so inclined. Mr. Cumming further stated, that some weeks ago, when he threatened to punish a negro named Simon, for some gross misconduct, he (Simon) approached him in a menacing attitude, declaring that if he were punished, he would do something for which the gallows should be the punishment, and not the treadmill.

Mr. Jennings, the manager of Rabacca estate, being sworn, stated, that at the request of Mr. Cumming he attended at the hospital, at Lot 14 estate, and observed the numbers frequenting it so unusually great, that it would be utterly impossible to carry on the business of the estate if such a practice were continued; that on examination of the different persons he saw there, he found that far the greater number had not the slightest appearance of illness, or any sufficient reason to absent themselves from their work. Mr. Jennings further stated, that at Rabacca estate, where he resides, he finds the negroes generally turning out late to their work, and that the women and small gang in particular not only turn out much later, but do at least one-third less work when in the field than they formerly did; nor do they do their work in their usual cheerful manner. In answer to a question from the bench, of what steps had been taken to induce the numerous skulkers in the hospital at No. 14 to turn out to their work, Mr. Jennings stated, that every means, with the exception of corporal punishment, had been tried without success.

Mr. James Ellis, the manager of Lot 14 estate, being sworn, stated, that the gangs turn out much later than formerly, that they go in crowds to the hospital for the first four days in the week, turning out on Friday and Saturday, and thus losing three or four days' work in each week. Yesterday, on finding fault with some who turned out 15 minutes after sunrise, they told him that it was too cold a morning to turn out earlier. Mr. Ellis further stated, that for the last two months he has observed a spirit of obstinacy and disobedience among the gang, and particularly among the young grown up men and women.

Mr. Thomas A. Hares, overseer at Lot 14 estate, being sworn, deposed,—That being in the field on the 4th of this month, the negroes were very abusive, on account of a smaller quantity of rum than usual being sent by mistake to the field, though they were aware at the time that the deficiency had been ordered to be made up to them immediately; that he heard several of them declare that they would soon drive all the white persons off the estates, and take the buckras wives for themselves; that some days after this, as Mr. Cumming's servant was passing the works with his master's horse, deponent heard two young men, Guy and Dublin, in conversation, one of whom observed, pointing to the horse, that that was the one he would get when he was free, and the other said he would buy a gig. He reported these conversations to the manager (Mr. Ellis) immediately after.

ST. VINCENT.

Mr. Thomas Mackintyre, of Colonaire estate, being sworn, deposed,—That for some weeks past he has observed the negroes to be very troublesome, turning out very late in the morning and afternoon; that they sometimes did not get to work until nearly three o'clock in the afternoon, and that this occurred once when Mr. Munro, the attorney of the estate, was on the place; that Mr. Munro went to the field with deponent, and asked the gang if they had any cause of complaint; to which they answered No. Mr. Munro then asked them why they turned out so badly, threatening that if they persisted in it they should be punished. For some time after this, deponent observing no alteration in their conduct for the better, ordered one of those who came last into the field into confinement, with the intention of punishing him, but the gang interceded for him, promising better behaviour for the future; since which they have turned out earlier. Mr. Mackintyre further stated, that when inclined to behave ill or turn out late, the gang seems to act in concert, leaving their houses and going to the field in a body, so that no ringleader can be pointed out.

Mr. Macpherson, manager of Mount William estate, being sworn, deposed,—That the negroes have frequented the hospital of late in much greater numbers than formerly, and that he has great difficulty in prevailing upon them to go to their work.

Patrick Crichton, esq., manager of Langley Park estate, being sworn, deposed,—That he has observed that the negroes have frequented the hospital in great numbers with little or no apparent illness, and that he has found much difficulty in getting them out to their work; that the gang turns out much later than formerly, and that he has been obliged to punish several of them by confinement at night for such conduct.

George Colquhoun Grant, esq. of the Adelphi estate, being sworn, deposed,—That it had been reported to him by the overseers that the gang have, for the last two or three months, turned out very badly to their work; that they have not, while in the field, performed near the quantity of work which they formerly did, and the hospital list shews an increase of nearly double the number formerly there, without any apparent complaint; that the negroes are in a very unsettled state in consequence of the erroneous ideas entertained by them respecting their immediate emancipation; that about five days ago he was compelled to inflict 12 stripes on a negro man named Thomas, who made a practice of constantly coming late to his work, and who on being complained of by the driver and overseers for so absenting himself, was extremely abusive to the latter, declaring that his master had not the power of inflicting corporal punishment on him.

Gentlemen, Government House, St. Vincent, 27th May 1833.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Letter of the 24th instant, with a report of the proceedings and evidence taken before you on the subject of the insubordination manifested by the negroes on several of the estates within the Charib district, and having laid the same before his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor, I am commanded to inform you that immediate attention shall be paid to your suggestions, and every means adopted to prevent the recurrence of the acts of disobedience and disaffection which appear by your report to be generally prevalent amongst the negroes on the estates in that direction.

IN answer to your Letter of this day's date, requiring to know what means of accommodation exists for quartering a company of troops of the line at Mount Young, or in the vicinity of that post, I have the honour to acquaint you that there is now no building on or near it belonging to government, and that the only barracks in the Island are those of Fort Charlotte, with the exception of the small building for eight men at Cane Garden Point. Most of the estates in that part of the country have got some substantial buildings in which a company of infantry could be placed, provided their crop season be over.

(Circular.) No. 9. ST. VINCENT.

Sir, Government House, St. Vincent, 28th May 1833.

It is with feelings of regret and surprise that I find, by a late investigation into the conduct of some of the negroes upon your estate, that they have not only been guilty of great disobedience and insubordination, but that they have actually held out threats of violence and revenge against their master. Such conduct deserves the severest punishment, and they may rest assured that they will find me determined to visit any future behaviour of a similar nature with the exercise of the utmost powers that His Majesty has vested in me, and which, when brought into action will be equally prompt, rigorous and severe. You will, Sir, communicate this to the whole of the negroes under your estate, collecting them together for that purpose, and take this opportunity of impressing upon their minds the absolute necessity of shewing respect to their master, obedience to his commands, and a general improvement in their conduct; otherwise they cannot expect to receive any further benefit or indulgence from our most gracious Sovereign.

I have the honour to forward to you the accompanying Circulars (together with a copy of them for your own perusal) to be delivered to Major Reid, who will convey them to the individuals to whom they are addressed.

Major Reid will be accompanied by one of my aides-de-camp, and will lose no time in carrying into effect the instructions which he has received from me.

Sir, Government House, St. Vincent, 30 May 1833.

I have forwarded to Sir Charles Cayler, the commanding officer of His Majesty's Forces in this Colony, eight circulars, to be delivered to you. They severally contain the substance of our communication yesterday, and at that interview I so fully explained my reasons for selecting you for the purpose of conveying them to the individuals to whom they are addressed, that I need not, on the present occasion, recapitulate them; but trusting to your well-known zeal and judgment, I have the fullest confidence and assurance that you will carry into effect without delay the objects of my intentions.

Lieutenant-Colonel Taylor, one of my aides-de-camp, will accompany you, and be subject to any orders you may think fit to give him.

Sir, Government House, St. Vincent, 4th June 1833.

I had the honour of forwarding to your Excellency on the 1st instant, a detailed account of various proceedings that had taken place in this Government at the latter end of last month, in consequence of an appearance of insubordination amongst some of the negroes in the Windward and Charib districts of the Island, together with copies of correspondence and other documents relative thereto.

I have now the honour further to transmit to your Excellency, a copy of a Report from Major Reid, on his return from his mission to the several disturbed estates, and also of two Letters, which that Report in my opinion called for; the first appointing three magistrates to hold a petty session weekly upon the most disorganized estates to windward, and the other to the proprietor of that estate, to acquaint him with the step I had taken.

These various measures will, I trust, be fully adequate to bring the negroes back to their former habits of industry and obedience. There are other measures, however, adverted to in Major Reid's Report, viz. the establishment of a military force at Grand Sable, the organization of the Charibs into a useful auxiliary body, &c. &c., which will demand, and

Major-General Sir Lionel Smith, K. C. B.
&c. &c. &c.

Sir, St. Vincent, 2d June 1833.

In obedience to your Excellency's commands, I have visited the estates of the eight gentlemen in the Charib country and windward part of the Island, in company with your Excellency's aide-de-camp, Colonel Taylor, and I read your circular to the assembled negroes at each of their estates. The evidence previously taken by the magistrates, shows that although seven of these estates had fallen off in their duty to their master, the conduct of the negroes in Lot 14 alone was mutinous, and as we proceeded, we found this confirmed.

The proprietor of Lot 14, Mr. Cummings, met us at Grand Sable estate, and arranged the time of assembling his negroes, and although I was led to believe that they were in a state of great indiscipline, arising from their master's great kindness, accompanied with a determination not to punish, I did expect that they would have obeyed their master's orders to assemble to hear your Excellency's circular letter read. But this was not the case. A few men, with the women and children, only came, whilst the stoutest young men and women, when called in from their work for the occasion, went to their houses (close to the place of meeting) and would not come out until I interfered, by commanding the overseers of the estate to go and bring them, causing a list to be made, which I gave to the proprietor. After they were thus assembled, and I had assured them that your Excellency would maintain proper discipline, I commanded a silent hearing of your circular letter to their master, but when I commenced reading it, a negro came forward into the half circle formed, making antic gestures, and using words not distinctly heard, which caused me to stop and ask Mr. Cumming to place him in irons. He put him in the stocks, and in the afternoon brought him before a bench of magistrates, who have punished him.

At all the other estates, your Excellency's circular was received respectfully.

It appears to me that the evil effect of the insubordinate state of the negroes on Lot 14, is not confined to the property of Mr. Cumming, but that it has extended its influence, and if suffered to continue, may seriously affect the Island generally.

In further obedience to your Excellency's commands, I consulted with the proprietors regarding a post for troops, in case your Excellency should think it proper to send a detachment to that part. Major Crichton pointed out an unroofed store on the beach at Grand Sable, which, with some additions, might be made a convenient barrack for a company, and preferable at present to Mount Young, because there is water at hand, and provisions can either be landed opposite to it, or conveyed from the Grand Sable Jetty on a flat road.

Having reported upon the points which my attention was more immediately directed to, I think it proper to mention that the gentlemen of the country I have been in, complain that when the magistrates sentence persons to the tread-mill at Kingstown the punishment is not properly carried into execution by the keeper, which embarrasses the magistrates in the execution of their duty.

An idea was suggested to me by Mr. Macleod of Turama, (the gentleman who lives the nearest to the Charib settlement in the north) that the Charibs might be made much use of, in cases of trouble arising among the negroes, if they had something to lose in case of misconduct, which suggestion I think worthy of your Excellency's consideration.

In passing the Union estate, I found the ammunition of the militia was collected there, and without protection, which would be better, I think, divided among the men, who should be held individually responsible for the safety of their respective portions.

Having met a slave carrying his master's accoutrements to the place of assembly, at a distance of several miles, I could not help being struck with the custom at a time when I had been sent by your Excellency in consequence of disorders among the slaves, and I had afterwards some conversation with the militia officers, on the subject of rather going as some of the American militia go to muster, mounted, and in this way, I believe, they are enabled to make long and very rapid marches.

His Excellency Captn Tyler,
Lieutt-Governor.

I have, &c.

Gentlemen, Government House, St. Vincent, 3d June 1833.

As it appears to his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor to be highly important and essential that a system of strict vigilance should be adopted towards the negroes on Lot 14 estate, the property of Mr. Alexander Cumming, and that the utmost promptness should be used in repressing, and punishing where necessary, any disorders and misconduct on their part, I am commanded by his Excellency to desire that you will assemble in petty session upon that estate once in every week, or oftener if necessary, to hear and decide upon any complaints respecting their behaviour, and that you will make a weekly report of the proceedings before you.

The Report I received last night from Major Reid relative to the conduct of the negroes upon your property, convinces me that immediate measures must be taken to check the highly mutinous insubordination which now exists. I will not dwell upon Major Reid's opinion of the cause, but the effects are evident, and most painfully so, upon the estates around you. I have therefore thought it expedient to appoint the three magistrates named in the margin, to hold a session weekly upon your estates, Lot 14, for the purpose of inquiring minutely into the conduct of the negroes, exercising all their powers and authority where necessary, and reporting to me the issue of such investigations.

Copy of a DESPATCH from Mr. Secretary Stanley to Governor Sir Lionel Smith.

Sir, Downing-street, 20th August 1833.

I have received your Despatch of the 1st July last, covering the information sent to you by Captain Tyler, Lieutenant-Governor of St. Vincent, respecting the insubordination which has recently existed among some of the slaves in that Island, and the measures which have been taken to repress it.

I am happy to express my approbation of the course which Captain Tyler has adopted on this occasion, and I entertain a confident hope that the temperate yet firm spirit in which he has enforced obedience to the existing laws, combined with the military precautions which have been taken, will preserve the tranquillity of the Island during the interval which must elapse before the slaves are to enter upon their new condition.

I feel it my duty to call your attention to the remarks in Major Reid's Letter to Captain Tyler, of the 2d June last, respecting the unprotected state of the ammunition of the militia, and the practice of permitting the slaves to carry their masters' arms and accoutrements to the place of assembly.

These defects in the militia arrangements might, in the present state of the Colony, be productive of the most serious and even dangerous consequences; and I trust you will lose no time in suggesting and enforcing proper regulations on this subject.

Extract of a DESPATCH from Governor Sir Lionel Smith to Mr. Secretary Stanley, dated Government House, Barbadoes, 20 November 1833.

I am sorry to lay before you, in the accompanying correspondence, a violent protest from the Assembly of St. Vincent's, against the Abolition Act.

Enclosures in No. 256.

Enclosures in No. 256.

Sir, Government House, St. Vincent, 5 November 1833.

I have the honour to forward to your Excellency, copies of the communications which have passed between the Houses of Legislature of this Island and myself, upon their being summoned on the 15th ult., for the purpose of laying before them the Slavery Abolition Act, which had passed the Imperial Parliament and received the Royal Assent.

The House of Assembly have thought proper to pass a protest against the Act for the Abolition of Slavery. This measure, absurd and unwise as it is, was, I am informed, adopted in consequence of instructions from some party at home, who conceived that unless such a step was taken as a precautionary mode of proceeding, they could not hereafter expect to receive any additional compensation for whatever loss they may sustain by carrying int effect the present Act.

I am happy to observe, that the Council refused to concur in the protest, and I am inclined to believe, that in future the Members of the Assembly will fully act up to the sincere determination they express of supporting such plans as may from time to time be proposed to them by His Majesty's Government, and to assist in carrying safely into effect the Abolition of Slavery in this Colony.

I have, &c.

His Excellency Major-General Sir Lionel Smith, K.C.B. &c. &c. &c. (signed) Geo. Tyler.

(Signed, " Geo. Tyler.")

THE Lieutenant-Governor has the honour to transmit to the honourable House of Assembly, an Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies, which received His Majesty's assent, and passed into a law on the 28th of August, and likewise a copy of a Proclamation forwarded by the Secretary of State for the Colonies, and approved by His Majesty in Council. The Lieutenant-Governor begs to inform the honourable House, that this Proclamation was issued ond promulgated in this Island on the 9th instant.

It would be impossible for the Lieutenant-Governor himself to convey in terms sufficiently explicit the measures which His Majesty's Government propose to adopt, in order to give complete effect to the Act as now passed; he has therefore enclosed a copy of a circular Despatch from His Majesty's Secretary of State, which distinctly explains those points, and gives every information upon a subject so important to all classes of society within this Colony.

The Lieutenant-Governor feels assured, that it is not necessary to call the attention of the honourable House to that part of Mr. Stanley's Despatch, which states that " His Majesty's Government will not only admit, but will invite and weigh with all care, such observations as they (the drafts of the proposed Orders in Council) may call forth, and such suggestions as any persons may be disposed to make for the improvement of their projected regulations." With this understanding, and a sincere determination on the part of the Legislature of this Colony to co-operate with His Majesty's Government, the Lieutenant-Governor cannot but look with confidence to the future prosperity and tranquillity of this valuable possession of the Crown.

Government House, St. Vincent, 15 October 1833.

To his Excellency George Tyler, Esq. Captain in the Royal Navy, &c. &c. &c.

Sir,

THE Board of Council has the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Excellency's message of this date, accompanied with a copy of a circular Despatch from the Secretary of State for the Colonies, a copy of the Act of the Imperial Parliament, for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies, &c. to which that Despatch refers, and a copy of a Proclamation by His Majesty on the same subject, which your Excellency has caused to be proclaimed in this Colony.

The Board views with great satisfaction the honourable sentiments of the Colonial Secretary, relative to the legislature of these Islands, and hopes to prove to your Excellency, when the final instructions shall have arrived, that its attention will be devoted to the interests of the Colony, and the furtherance of the intentions of His Majesty's Government, as far as can be practically adopted with beneficial effects.

St. Vincent, 15 October 1833. (signed) John Peterson, President.

Sir, House of Assembly, 17 October 1833.

I HAVE had the honour to lay before the House of Assembly your Excellency's message of the 15th instant, together with the circular Despatch of Mr. Secretary Stanley, and I am commanded to transmit to your Excellency, the accompanying Protest against the Act of the Imperial Parliament of Great Britain, for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies; at the same time to assure your Excellency that, notwithstanding this precautionary mode of proceeding, there is a sincere determination on the part of the Assembly to give their best support to such plans as may from time to time be proposed by the supreme Government at home to carry safely into effect the Abolition of Slavery in this Colony, and to lay the foundation of future industry and prosperity, without, however, incurring in the remotest degree any portion of the great and fearful responsibility of a measure which will introduce such hazardous changes into the various relations of society.

I have, &c.

His Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor, &c. &c. &c. (signed) J. P. Ross, Speaker.

ST. VINCENT.

The Solemn Protest of the Assembly of Saint Vincent and its Dependencies, against the Bill for the Abolition of Slavery.

Actuated as we have always been by those feelings of attachment towards the mother country, which has so long formed the proud characteristic of the British West Indies, no less than by feelings of the most devoted loyalty towards the person of our gracious Sovereign, and anxious as we have always expressed ourselves, both in words and action, by the adoption of wise laws and opportune measures, gradually and safely to ameliorate the condition of our people, to reform their habits, to improve their morals, and to give them that religious instruction, which would best fit them for the station they would hereafter be called upon to fill in society, and ultimately to insure their emancipation; it is with feelings of the deepest concern and disappointment we learn, that the British Parliament, unmoved by our representations, and expressing a distrust in our professions, has determined upon the hasty, ill-advised and crude measure which has been officially communicated to us.

It would be needless, after so ample a discussion as this subject has received both at home and abroad, to state the tenure by which we hold these properties; the charters which secure our rights; the repeated and numerous Acts of the British Legislature, which confirm our claims; the striking and important fact that, in a variety of instances, not only the lands, but even the slaves themselves, have been purchased from the British Government. It would be needless now to state the value of these possessions; of the seven millions of revenue which they contribute to the mother country; of the four millions and a half derived from thence, supporting through these various and complicated ramifications so vast a body of merchants, manufacturers and tradesmen; of the 240,000 tons of shipping employed; of the thousands and tens of thousands of seamen maintained, forming the most valuable nursery for that branch of the British service, its marine, on which its glory and safety so mainly depend. It would be needless, because the fiat of the Imperial Parliament of England has already gone forth, and we must bow with due submission to its decree, conscious of our weakness and impotency to resist its authoritative mandate.

Yet we are conscious at the same time of the justice of our claims, conscious of our integrity of purpose, conscious of the efforts we have used, and which the repeated and very recent Acts of our Colonial Legislature so clearly evince, of our sincere intention, cautiously, judiciously and gradually to effect a change, so momentous and so complete, we profess no intention to resist the strongly expressed wishes of the British nation; on the contrary, we profess our readiness and willingness to meet the subject fairly and honestly, to give the measures of Government our serious and earnest consideration, and to co-operate so far as in us lies in carrying these measures into effect.

But at the same time we must and do solemnly protest against this undue invasion of our rights. We do solemnly protest against it as a hasty and ill-advised measure, which not only places in jeopardy the property, which (according to an appraisement now in progress) exceeds four millions sterling in value in this Colony alone, but whilst it endangers the life of the owner, is calculated to destroy the interests, the comforts and the well-being of the slave himself, for whose benefit this measure is professedly intended. We do solemnly protest against it as a dangerous precedent;—dangerous as not only affecting our chartered rights, but sapping the foundation of those of our fellow countrymen in every quarter of the globe. We do solemnly protest against it as a partial measure; a measure which ought only to have been adopted in conjunction with the other states of Europe, who are already rejoicing at the short-sightedness of our policy, and are even now pluming themselves upon the prospects which it presents of immediately exalting themselves upon our ruin. And by what means? By reviving in its full force, and encouraging to an almost inconceivable extent, that odious traffic, which it has been for so many years the benevolent aim of the British Government to prevent, and which has so long been happily banished from our own shores. We do solemnly protest against it, as establishing a ruinous system, which not only renders it imperative upon the owner to continue, in their fullest extent, all those privileges, indulgences and allowances, which his slave has hitherto enjoyed, but gives to his apprentice so large and unreasonable a portion of time, as will render it impracticable for his master to continue the profitable cultivation of the soil; at the same time it will superinduce in himself such habits of indolence, vagrancy and insubordination, as will render him still more unfit for a state of freedom, at the conclusion of his apprenticeship, than he is at the present moment. We protest against it as a measure which, in granting to a third person the right of continued interference between the master and his servant, teaches the latter to look up to some other power for protection and support; and is thus calculated to destroy all those kind feelings of attachment, mutual interest and dependence, which have hitherto subsisted. We protest against it as taking away all authority and wholesome control from the master, whom it has already deprived of the means of the possibility of reward, and substituting in their place a power totally insufficient to maintain order, or to enforce the performance of duty. And above all, we do solemnly protest against the inadequacy, as well as the uncertain mode and period of the payment of the compensation held out to us, and which amounts not, in a majority of cases, to one-tenth part of the value of the properties we possess.

Disclaiming, therefore, all responsibility attending this untried, and we fear impracticable scheme, we reserve to ourselves the right of demanding from the British nation a full compensation for the losses we may ultimately sustain.

Sir, Downing-street, 13th January 1834.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Despatch, dated the 20th November last, enclosing a copy of a Letter addressed by the Lieutenant-Governor of St. Vincent to yourself, together with copies of the communications which had passed between the Houses of Legislature of that Island and the Lieutenant-Governor, upon their being summoned for the purpose of having laid before them the Act for the Abolition of Slavery.

I have to request you to instruct Lieutenant-Governor Tyler to convey my thanks to the Council of St. Vincent, for their promise to devote their attention towards the furtherance of the objects of His Majesty's Government upon this important subject, and at the same time to communicate to the Assembly of that Colony my satisfaction at perceiving that, notwithstanding the protest which they have felt it their duty to make on this occasion, they have expressed a sincere determination to give their support to such measures as may be necessary to carry into effect the Abolition of Slavery in the Island of St. Vincent.

Sir, Government House, St. Vincent, 20th May 1834.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Excellency's Despatch, conveying instructions to me to assent to the Act passed by this Legislature, for the general registration of all slaves within this Colony.

Your Excellency remarks, however, " that the third clause of the above Act, is at variance with the 4th clause of the British Act for the Abolition of Slavery, inasmuch as the registration of occupation should be according to the occupations of the slaves, for 12 months previous to the passing of the British Act, and not for the period, previous only to the 1st of June next, as enacted by the clause in question."

I could fully appreciate the force of your Excellency's objection to the clause, if the proprietor had been called upon to classify his slaves, as well as to return their occupations; and to prove to your Excellency, how sensible I was of the bearing of the fourth clause of the Imperial Act, I herewith transmit a copy of my communication to both branches of the Legislature, on returning the Registration Act for reconsideration, in consequence of their having introduced in the original Act the word " classes" after that of " occupations," which undoubtedly, if not expunged, would have been at variance with the Imperial Act, but I apprehend that a mere return in the registration of the general occupations of slaves at the present moment within this Colony, will not be considered as very material, either at home or by your Excellency, when it is divested of any views as to their ultimate classification.

The Lieutenant-Governor has convened the present meeting of the Legislature, from an anxious desire of affording the earliest opportunity of completing the Police Act now in progress, and of insuring an immediate re-consideration of the Act recently passed for the registration of slaves in this Colony.

In the second clause of that Act, an authorized power is vested in the registrar of slaves, inasmuch as he is directed to make a return of the names, sexes, ages, occupations and classes of all slaves within this Colony.

The duty of classing the slaves according to the Imperial Act for the Abolition of Slavery, is confined solely to the Commissioners for Compensation. The Lieutenant-Governor is persuaded, therefore, he has only to point out this discrepancy, to obtain for it the immediate attention and consideration of both branches of the Legislature, as also to recommend that the period fixed by the same Act for the returns of slaves to be made by the registrar, should be extended beyond the 30th of the present month.

Sir, Government House, St. Vincent, 2 August 1834.

I have much pleasure in acquainting your Excellency, that the period prescribed by law for abolishing slavery throughout the British dominions has passed over in this Colony without any symptoms of riot or insubordination; indeed, I should rather say, quite a contrary feeling has prevailed; for from the constant reports I receive from the interior of the Island, as well as from my own personal observation, there is every proof, with few exceptions, that the great boon which has been bestowed upon the negroes has been received by them with thankfulness, notwithstanding they are puzzled as to the term "freedom" being applicable to their present state and condition.

The good understanding which has universally prevailed between master and slave in this Colony, and the many advantages enjoyed by the latter, have in my opinion mainly contributed to the confidence they now place in the system adopted for their probation. No pains have been spared or means neglected to put them into possession of every necessary information previous to the 1st of August. A few days prior to the period, a requisition was presented to me by the proprietors, to direct the stipendiary magistrates to visit each estate within their separate division, for the purpose of explaining to the negroes the law as established for their future guidance and government. To this I readily acquiesced, being anxious for an opportunity to impress upon the negroes the importance of the office of the stipendiary magistrate, as well as to state my conviction to each individual planter, that if they should persist in adhering to the resolution they had unanimously adopted of working their negroes as usual on the 1st August, that such a proceeding would cause universal dissatisfaction, and might eventually lead to the most serious consequences. I therefore urged most strenuously my recommendation that a general holiday should be observed on that day throughout the Colony. This suggestion, I am happy to say, was finally adopted, though not without many instances being evinced of opposition and reluctance. The reports made by the stipendiary magistrates after their visits through their several districts, have confirmed my opinion that the course taken has been productive of the most satisfactory results; I have therefore now only to hope, that the measures which have been devised for carrying the new system into operation may prove effectual, and that it may ultimately establish that blessing which has for its object the unrestricted freedom of all within this Colony.

Sir, Government House, St. Vincent, 9 August 1834.

SINCE writing my Despatch to your Excellency of the 2d instant, I regret to say that a spirit of insubordination has evinced itself upon one estate called the Adelphi in the Island, originating from an idea that prevailed amongst the great gang that they had been worked beyond the time prescribed by law for their daily labour. This unfortunately led to a decided collision between them and the individuals called upon to enforce the law, but I am happy to say, from the prompt and decisive measures adopted by the latter, order has been restored and the delinquents punished.

I cannot omit to render every praise to the stipendiary and special magistrates who acted upon this occasion, but more particularly to the establishment of estate constables, which has in this instance evinced its most powerful efficiency. To strengthen this opinion, I venture to transcribe the terms in which they are spoken of by Mr. Grant, the proprietor of the estate in question: "the conduct of the apprentice constables was highly meritorious, and I congratulate the country in having found so effective a force."

Notwithstanding this unexpected instance of riot, I have every reason to hope that tranquillity will prevail in this Colony, and from the examples which have been made, a proper and due deference will be paid to the laws established for the government of the apprenticed labourers. It is my intention to visit this estate in the course of a few days, by which time I trust the authority of the stipendiary magistrate will be thoroughly understood.

Being unwilling to detain the mail boat, which has unexpectedly arrived, and which I am informed is charged with Despatches of importance to your Excellency from Trinidad, I am obliged to postpone forwarding a copy of the commission issued to the stipendiary magistrates of this Island.

Sir, Government House, St. Vincent, 1 November 1834.

I VENTURE to send, for your information, an abstract from the journals of the stipendiary magistrates in this Colony for the two months ending on the 30th September, giving the number of apprenticed labourers who have been guilty of any offence, the character of the offence and the punishment awarded.

This abstract will, I hope, prove satisfactorily that the amount of crime at a period like the present, in a population exceeding 20,000, is not beyond that which might be expected in one of the same extent under circumstances of less excitement.

The reports I constantly receive from both magistrates and planters, as well as my own knowledge of the facts, are most favourable as to the general conduct of the negroes in this Colony.

COPY of a DESPATCH from Lieutenant-Governor Tyler to Mr. Secretary Spring Rice.

Government House, Saint Vincent,
Sir, 27 January 1835.

WITH reference to a circular of the 30th September, wherein my attention is directed by His Majesty's Secretary of State for the Colonies to the subject which the great change in the condition of the negro population in His Majesty's Colonies must necessarily lead to, as regards not only the system of cultivation, but the general pursuits of industry, and requesting me to express my opinion as to the probable effect which free labour and the apprenticeship of the negroes is likely to produce upon the pursuits of profitable industry, I have attempted in the following remarks to communicate my ideas upon a subject which embraces so many points dependent upon future circumstances, that it is impossible at present to form any correct judgment respecting them; but however speculative the opinions may appear, I still trust they may prove in some degree beneficial to the interests of this Colony, and of advantage to the Mother Country.

1st.—The present state of productive industry in this Colony bears a relative proportion to the force employed. This will be seen by the annexed table, which shows the number of apprenticed labourers appraised on the 1st of August last; the average amount of produce raised for the last five years, as well as that of the exports and imports for the same period. This will however not include the articles raised for consumption, which consist chiefly of what are designated ground provisions, such as yams, cassava and other esculent roots. These, together with the fruits indigenous to tropical climates, comprise the chief of the produce raised for consumption. Sugar and arrow-root are consumed, but in a trifling proportion; rum is generally used to a great extent.

2d.—It is difficult, at so early a stage of the great experiment, to form any sound opinion upon the possible changes which may be produced by the Abolition of Slavery on the agricultural, manufacturing and commercial system of the Colonies; but if I may venture to predict from the present aspect of affairs in this Colony, I should say there is no apparent cause to suppose that productive labour will be diminished, provided that well-regulated and proper municipal laws are in time established to ensure its continuance. To this subject of paramount importance, the early attention of the local legislatures should be directed, aided and assisted by well-digested recommendations from the Home Government. These conclusions have principally suggested themselves from the practical evidences which I see daily occurring in this Island, where the apprenticed labourers have not only entered into specific agreements for wages, which have been duly recorded by the stipendiary magistrates, but in many instances they are hiring themselves out, or to their masters, to work during their own time in the cultivation of the sugar cane, for wages averaging about 8*d.* sterling per day.

Notwithstanding the encouraging hopes held out to us by such conduct, I am not so sanguine as to suppose that sugar, the staple commodity of the West Indies, ever can be cultivated hereafter, to the extent it has been under the system of slavery. There can be no doubt, if proprietors could be brought to a just sense of their own interests, that the lands now occupied under forced culture of the cane might be rendered available to other productions more congenial to the soil, of a nature less expensive in cultivation, and in the end more advantageous to the proprietor. To establish this conviction, or indeed any principle for the future, so as to guard against the loss of property, much must of course depend upon the judgment and perseverance of the proprietors themselves; but, whatever may be the cause, this Colony has to regret, in common with all the others in the West Indies, not only the general absence of proprietors, but the little anxiety which is evinced, or efforts made to introduce those improvements in agriculture which must eventually be beneficial to their interests. I cannot but contemplate with anxiety the future state of proprietors, if they continue to resign, as at present is the prevailing custom, the entire control and management of their estates to attornies or managers, whose interests or dispositions to improve property cannot be expected to equal that of a resident proprietor. In offering these opinions, I do not look to the preservation of property alone, but I take a more extensive view of the influence such residence would produce upon the general internal government of a Colony, as well as the security it would afford to the Mother Country in these valuable possessions.

3d.—In pointing out the remedies by which existing evils might be corrected, that are obstacles to general improvement, or tend to impede the extension of commercial intercourse, I would submit one circumstance, which, in my opinion, is at the present time deserving the immediate attention of His Majesty's Government. I allude to the ruinous system of the circulating medium of currency, which prevails in this Colony and throughout the West Indies to an extent which not only tends to destroy commercial intercourse, but virtually to establish separate interests. To obviate this evil, I had prepared, at the express wish of the Legislature, a proclamation for the purpose of establishing a circulating medium of sterling value within this Colony, at the rate of 4*s.* 4*d.* sterling to the Spanish dollar, the value placed upon that coin by an order of His Majesty in Council, bearing date the 23d March 1825, in lieu of the fictitious one now in existence; but on forwarding it to the Governor-in-Chief, I was given to understand that His Majesty's Government had under consideration some measure for providing an uniformity of currency throughout the Colonies. Under these circumstances all further proceedings on my part were stayed. I however transmit with this a copy of the address from the Legislature on the subject, together with that of the proclamation, with the view of showing the principle upon which it had been my intention to have recommended the measure to His Majesty's Government.

I cannot too strongly urge this subject for consideration, situated as this Colony is with respect to its monetary system. At the end of this crop, in July next, a sum of not less than eighteen thousand dollars will have to be distributed in small portions to the negroes for their extra labour. It is utterly impossible to provide for this want within the Colony; recourse must of necessity be had by proprietors to the Mother Country for British silver, the importation of which must be attended with risk, and the distribution of it with loss. So long therefore as four shillings and four-pence sterling (or the Spanish dollar) is called ten shillings currency, and that all other coins are made to bear their relative proportions to that standard, so long will the consumer be at the mercy of the retail merchant, and the American trader carry off all the specie.

4th.—In concluding the remarks, I would observe, that in promoting profitable industry, and establishing confidence in the negro, much care is necessary during the progress of his apprenticeship to wean him from his former habits of dependence, and to influence his mind with those moral and religious principles as will enable him to place a just value upon the blessings of unrestricted freedom. Upon these points hinge all our prospects with respect to the future promotion of industry, and the consequent prosperity of this Colony. It was with the view of effecting this important object, I suggested that steps should be taken in due time for establishing such municipal laws and regulations as would prove to the negro that the intention of His Majesty's Government was (aided by the local Legislatures) to place him in a situation of acquiring that interest in the soil and security in his person, as would ensure to him all the benefits and privileges attainable by any individual within His Majesty's dominions.

By these means, we may, I think, look with confidence to the greater portion of the present labouring population becoming hereafter the force to be depended upon for yielding profitable labour, and, I sincerely hope, of securing the continuance of this valuable possession as a productive appendage to the British Crown.

I have, &c.

A PROCLAMATION.

By His Excellency George Tyler, Esquire, &c. &c. &c.

WHEREAS his Excellency Sir Charles Brisbane, late governor of this Island and its dependencies, by his proclamation bearing date the 1st January 1818, under his hand and the great seal of this Colony, was pleased to affix a certain currency value to Portugal joes, the Spanish dollar, and certain parts of mutilated dollars; and by another proclamation bearing date the 5th day of March in the same year, also under his said Excellency's hand and the great seal of this Colony, the value of Portugal and American gold coins and doubloons, and of their aliquot parts, and also of the Spanish dollar, was further regulated, and a currency value affixed to the same. And by another proclamation, bearing date the 20th day of March 1819, also under his said Excellency's hand and the great seal of this Colony, the British coins of penny and half-penny pieces received a currency value; and by another proclamation, bearing date the 14th day of January 1823, also under his said Excellency's hand and the great seal of this Colony, the colonial coin issued by the Lords Commissioners of His Majesty's Treasury, consisting of one-quarter, one-eighth and one-sixteenth of the Spanish dollar, received a currency value: And whereas the House of Assembly of this Island, by their humble address to me, dated the 2d day of September 1834, have prayed that the said proclamations might be reviewed, and a sterling value affixed to the several coins in circulation in these Islands: And whereas I have considered that the adoption of such a measure will be highly advantageous to the prosperity and welfare of this Colony; I do therefore, by virtue of the powers and authorities in me vested, issue this my proclamation, and I do declare that on the 1st day of January 1835, so much of the provisions of the said several proclamations of the 1st January and 9th March 1818, the 20th July 1819, and the 14th January 1823, as are now in force, shall be and become revoked, void and of none effect; and on, from and after the said first of January, the currency denomination and value of all coins of every description in circulation in these Islands shall cease and determine. And I do further declare, that on, from and after the 1st day of January

Copy of a DESPATCH from the Earl of Aberdeen to Governor Sir Lionel Smith.

Sir, Downing-street, 30 March 1835.

THE time is now arrived when I feel myself able to communicate to you the results of my consideration of three Acts, passed by the Governor, Council and Assembly of the Island of St. Vincent respectively, in the months of April, May and June last, intituled,—

"An Act for the Abolition of Slavery in the Island of St. Vincent and its Dependencies; in consideration of Compensation, and for promoting the industry and good conduct of the manumitted Slaves." No. 308. 2d April 1834.

"Act for establishing a Police for the Regulation of apprenticed Labourers, and for carrying into effect certain provisions of the above-mentioned Act." No. 316. 23d June 1834.

"Act to provide for the general Registration of all Slaves, belonging to or settled in these Islands." No. 311, 19th May 1834.

ST. VINCENT.

These are the laws by which the Legislature of the Island of St. Vincent propose to give effect to the Act of the British Parliament, for the Abolition of Slavery. They embrace two general objects, of which the first is the adoption and re-enactments of the provisions of the Imperial Act; the second, the introduction of such subsidiary rules as Parliament have called upon the Assemblies to frame, in order to render the law of abolition effectual and safe.

In the remarks which I have to make, I shall endeavour to follow a similar division of the subject.

In the fourth section of the Act No. 308, the definition of a prædial apprenticed labourer, as given by Parliament, describing him to be such a person as shall have been for twelve months before the date of the Act habitually employed in agriculture, or in the manufacture of colonial produce, is augmented, in the local Act, by the words, " or employed in prædial labour." Though I am not in possession of any substantive reason which may have recommended this amplification, I conceive its objects could only be to obviate the possibility of difficulties which might from time to time arise, by reason of the great variety and ambiguous character of occupations which are embraced in the arrangements of West Indian properties; and even although it may perhaps be thought that this addition does not increase the perspicuity of the description, I do not mean to enter any formal objection against it.

The 9th section of the British Act requires the written consent of at least two special justices, to authorize the removal of apprentices from the soil to which they may be attached. The Act of Assembly declares the assent of one to be sufficient; again, Parliament in no case permits removal where the separation of husbands and wives or parents and children would be the consequence.

To this rule the Assembly have added the words, " except with the consent of the party to be removed." Reverting to the intentions of Parliament, with reference to this specific provision in the British Act, I cannot for a moment doubt, that it was contemplated to preserve during the apprenticeship, the conjugal, filial and parental relations from any disruption, in so far as that object could be obtained by legal enactments; and with reference to the former of these alterations, I think it well to apprize you, in the name of His Majesty's Government, that unless there be stated some positive reason to the contrary, the local Act ought to conform to the provisions of the Imperial Act, and the consent of two special justices to be required for removals; while as respects the latter, it is still more unequivocally clear that the proposed permission to separate apprentices standing to one another in the relations above enumerated, would, in a material point, intercept the intentions of the British Legislature. The same remarks will apply to the 13th section of the local Act, which refers to the breaking up of families upon descents and alienations. The principle of alteration is in both cases the same, and in both I deem it objectionable.

In the 22d section of the local Act, I find it declared, that apprenticed labourers are to be entitled, from the 1st of August 1834, to all the rights and privileges of free persons, " except as the same may be restricted by this or any other Act." I do not know that the direct signification of these terms contains in it any thing worthy of remark, but I cannot avoid suggesting that they may hereafter, in some possible contingency, be misapplied, or at least misapprehended. It might happen, and I am bound to guard against the alternative, even if improbable, that expressions of this nature might hereafter be said to constitute a sufficient intimation, that some restraints on the freedom of apprentices were contemplated in the year 1834, the enactment of which it was thought expedient to withhold to a more convenient season; I am aware, however, that as the freedom of the apprentices is materially qualified, it is natural and necessary that the declaration of that freedom should not exceed its subject; and I should suggest that the rules of equity will be observed, and the object of the Legislature duly attained, if for the words I have quoted above there be substituted some such expressions as the following, " except as the same may be restricted by this Act, or any other passed in conformity with the provisions of the Imperial Act 3 & 4 Will. 4. c. 73."

The same clause (the 22d) while denying to the apprentices the exercise of certain civil rights, does not in terms limit the force of that denial to the period of apprenticeship, but the declaration in question should be so modified as not to admit of any supposition, detrimental to the privileges of the apprentice as a freeman, beyond the term of years appointed by Parliament for the intermediate state.

The

The 25th clause of the local Act requires the apprenticeship of any child for whom its parents are incapable of providing. The 13th clause of the British Act only directs the apprenticeship of children who are not otherwise from any quarter provided with an adequate maintenance. It further enjoins that the employer shall, by the terms of the indenture, be obliged to allow reasonable time and opportunity for the religious education of the child. In both the particulars which I have noticed, I think it would be well that the terms of the local Act should be brought into conformity with those employed by Parliament.

I now come to the second general object of the Act, viz. the introduction of such subsidiary rules as are intended to give efficiency to the imperial law of emancipation, and I shall compare its provisions, under this head, with the code of regulations relative thereto which has been established by His Majesty in Council.

In sections 16, 17 & 18 of cap. 2. the order distinguishes improper complaints into three kinds, viz. the unproved, the frivolous and vexatious, and the malicious, exacting penalties in proportion to the respective degrees of culpability in each. The Act in its 35th clause substitutes for this distinction a general rule against groundless complaints. I think that even if an objection be entertained to the establishment of the threefold division, at least there is substantial use in the distinction between such complaints as are really groundless, and such as are vexatious, whether from frivolity or malice.

The clause is silent on the subject of improper complaints preferred by the employer; a grievance of by no means improbable occurrence, and one against which the local Legislature should certainly provide, if not in the present clause, in some other part of the Act. I shall presently suggest a means of securing this end.

Chap. 3d of the Order in Council provides for the division of apprenticed labourers into their respective classes. The effect of the law before me will be, that the new registries will furnish not a conclusive, but primâ facie proof of the servile condition of all persons registered before August 1st, 1834, and the nature of their employments. It does not appear that the alleged slave, or any one on his behalf, would have an opportunity of controverting the claimant's title to his services, or of disputing the particular kind of service ascribed to him. And further, there is no provision for summarily correcting the returns on appeal to any judicial authority. These deficiencies are supplied in the Order in Council, and should also be supplied by the Legislature of St. Vincent.

Sect. 15 of the same Act, No. 308, allows to the labourer, in the words of the Slave Law of December 1825, "a sufficient portion of land adapted to the growth of provisions; two pounds of salt fish daily, and eleven days annually to be deducted from the 45 hours per week." The Slave Law granted 26 days over and above the Sundays for the cultivation of such grounds, to which were to be added four annual holidays. I do not conceive that 104 lbs. of salt fish can be considered a real equivalent for 19 full days; and although it was not the intention of Parliament to exact from the Colonial Legislatures any legal addition to the provisions, or time in lieu of provisions, allowed under the Slave Law to apprentices, it was their unequivocal resolution that they should be maintained at their full amount; and this enactment must be referred back to the Assembly in order that the scale may be so adjusted as to secure the apprentice, either the full time which he enjoyed as a slave, or an ample and real compensation for any portion of it that may be subtracted.

In the 18th section, with reference to cases where it may be impracticable to maintain the apprentices by grants of land, it is required that the employer shall at all events "make good and ample provision for all such labourers, in order that they may be properly supported and maintained;" it will be necessary that the Assembly should explain and enact the nature of the good and ample provision here mentioned, inasmuch as those terms, without further specification, do not satisfy the requisition of Parliament, that the Assembly shall regulate the amount and quality of food in cases where it was not determined by the existing code.

The allowance of clothing appears to be scanty, as compared with the provisions of the Order in Council, and it is secured only to children over the age of twelve, while the order assigns it to any one above the age of five. I am not aware of any reason which warrants these departures from the provisions enacted by His Majesty.

By the 32d section, the magistrate is authorized to direct imprisonment on the plantation; this should have been connected with some precautions against the use of unhealthy or otherwise improper places of confinement. With reference to the

ST. VINCENT.

39th section, relating to the unauthorized wandering of an apprenticed labourer beyond the limits of the plantation of his employer, I am of opinion that it is either objectionable in substance, or, if qualified by its proviso to the full extent of the terms of that proviso, almost nugatory. It requires, I think, such modifications, whether of form or substance, as shall secure to the apprentice the free use of his own time, unimpeded by any restriction of his power to select for himself the place in which it is to be spent.

The enactments of section 42, for punishing apprentices injuring the cattle or other property, not only of the employer but of any other person, should be made general in their application, and not confined to apprentices, unless some substantive argument can be stated to a contrary effect.

In the 45th section, which refers to the punishment of women for heinous offences, I observe a vagueness of expression and of enactment, not in conformity with the due caution of the law. Heinous offences will demand serious punishments, and the more serious the punishment may be, the more necessary it will be to guard, by accurate specifications, against the possibility of abuse in its infliction. Something of a more definite character must be introduced into this clause as a substitute for the bare proviso of "such punishment as shall be awarded by the special justice." I object, upon a similar principle, to section 46, which specifies punishments without defining the crimes to which they are to be attached. It is surely possible for the wisdom and experience of the Legislature to anticipate every form of offence against the law, and to meet it with some adequate penalty. The clause, in its present shape, leaves room for a suspicion which ought most anxiously to be precluded, that it is intended to give scope to arbitrary power under the sanction of law, and the apparent forms of justice.

By the same clause the magistrates are forbidden to permit the whipping of females above the age of 12. I do not think it was contemplated by Parliament that the infliction of corporal punishment upon the weaker sex, should in any case become the subject of legal enactment or judicial process; and I have therefore to instruct you, that the prohibition should be made absolute.

The 51st section provides redress for complaints of the labourer against his employer for various specified injuries. I think it might be well to introduce into the catalogue the mention of improper complaints preferred by the master against the apprentice, unless some other method shall be devised of securing to the apprentice, under the apprenticed law, a remedy against this form of oppression.

There may be a doubt whether the proviso in the same clause, saving the right of the apprentice to proceed in the Superior Courts, does not, in effect, however contrary to the intention of the Legislature, take away from the apprentice every other mode of proceeding, except that summary remedy and the right of action. I would call your attention to the necessity of so framing this law, that it shall in no way interfere, even by possibility, with His Majesty's right of proceeding by criminal information and indictment.

The 56th section declares it a felony in a labourer to attend at a meeting for various specified unlawful purposes, and generally for any other unlawful purpose. These terms are so large, that they might be made to include many actions which cannot fairly be punished as felonious; and this defect ought be corrected.

The magistrate should, as well as the employer, have the power of authorizing an apprentice to reside beyond the limits of the plantation to which he is attached.

The 62d section prohibits the purchase, from an apprentice, without the written consent of his employer, of any goods except fish, poultry, goats, hogs, grass, fruit and vegetables. Adverting to the habit which may have been generated among the negroes of frequently purloining a variety of articles, I think it allowable to prohibit, under penalties, the purchase from him of those articles, the property of his master, which he may have the opportunity of abstracting; but the enactment, instead of permitting certain articles, and joining to that permission a general prohibition of all others, would, I think, be framed in a more liberal and equitable spirit, if it left unimpaired the general liberty of the apprentice to sell as well as to buy; and merely for bad transactions in those particular descriptions of goods, which may be supposed, as a general rule, to have come improperly into his possession.

You will perceive that the variations which have been noticed are numerous, and in some cases by no means unimportant. Considering, however, that these and similar Acts are to be tried, not in a spirit of minute criticism, but rather by their general and substantial conformity to the provisions of the British Statute in all its material purposes; and further, that the intentions of the Home Legislature do not appear appear to have been disregarded by the Colonial Assembly, in so far as relates to the prominent and principal objects had in view, I do not feel it my duty to recommend to His Majesty the disallowance of the Act in question; but on the other hand, I am unable to advise its immediate and definite approval. The decision of His Majesty upon it will remain suspended until you shall have been enabled to propose to the Legislature of St. Vincent, so to amend its provisions as that it shall be rendered more uniformly conformable to the views of His Majesty and of Parliament. From the temper which has already been manifested in the past proceedings of the local Legislature, I entertain no doubt of their acceding to the purposes contemplated in these instructions, and confidently anticipate the period when I shall feel it in all respects as consistent with my duty, as it would now be with my inclination, to advise His Majesty to affix to the Act of His subjects in the Island of St. Vincent His final and authoritative sanction.

Sir, Downing-street, 28th July 1835.

IN the Despatch, which was addressed to you by the Earl of Aberdeen on the 30th March last, you were informed that His Majesty would not be advised to give His immediate and definite approval of the Act passed by the Legislature of St. Vincent, for giving effect to the provisions of the Imperial Act for the Abolition of Slavery; but that His Majesty's decision would remain suspended until you should have been enabled to propose to the Legislature of that Island so to amend the provisions of the Act as that it should be rendered more conformable to the views of His Majesty and of Parliament. As the time approaches for carrying into effect the intentions of Parliament, in regard to the distribution of the compensation money awarded to the Colonies under the Slavery Abolition Act, I am induced to advert to this subject, and to impress upon you the necessity (should no steps have been taken by the Legislature of St. Vincent's for amending their Act) for your calling the attention of the Legislature to the contents of Lord Aberdeen's Despatch; pointing out to them, that until they shall comply with the requisition therein contained, they will not be in a condition to participate in the compensation fund.

Sir, Government House, Grenada, 26th Aug. 1833.

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Despatch of the 20th May, and the accompanying papers.

His Excellency Sir L. Smith was in Grenada, and at Government House, when your Despatch was brought to this Island, and I did not fail to show it to his Excellency; but as he was about to return to Barbadoes immediately, I had not an opportunity of receiving any instructions upon the subject of the Despatch. Sir L. Smith will communicate to me, without delay, so soon as he shall have arrived at Barbadoes, such instructions as he may consider requisite.

In the interim I shall endeavour to use my best exertions to meet the spirit of that part of your Letter which is more particularly addressed to me, as administering the Government of Grenada. I am happy to have it in my power to report to you, that up to this time the Island is perfectly tranquil, and that no instances of insubordination or outrage, on the part of the slave population, have come within my knowledge.

EXTRACT of a DESPATCH from Lieutenant-Governor Middlemore to Mr. Secretary Stanley, dated Government House, Grenada, 2d March 1834.

IN conclusion, I am glad to report in a favourable manner upon the disposition of the inhabitants generally to the measures proposed for the Abolition of Slavery. The two branches of the Legislature have applied themselves to this question in a spirit of good will which promises the most fortunate results: a good understanding prevails between them and myself; and the slaves, from whom some degree of excitement was perhaps apprehended, are in a state of profound tranquillity, and appear to understand and appreciate the boon held out to them.

Sir, Government House, Grenada, 8th March 1834.

I HAVE the sincere pleasure to acquaint you, that the Legislature of this Island have unanimously passed the Abolition Bill, which I this day assented to, and have the honour to transmit transcript of the same herewith.

Printed in the Appendix (B.) No. 47.

I cannot too highly praise the good spirit and temper evinced both by the Council and Assembly on this occasion, which will, I hope, entitle them to the advantage of every indulgence and consideration.

In the progress of the discussion, they communicated with me with the utmost confidence, evincing a sincere desire to conform to all the wishes of His Majesty's Government.

Referring you to the 48th clause, I expressed some doubt if the private working days for the apprentices were quite sufficient; but as the Imperial Act did not determine the number of days, and as the seeming intention was that every Colony should regulate the time according to the facilities of cultivation, fourteen days, exclusive of holidays, for this Island, appeared to be sufficient; and those whose opinions I most respected, assured me a longer period would only encourage idleness. I, therefore, did not think myself warranted in refusing assent on this only objection.

The Legislature will probably make some application for assistance in the maintenance of the district's police. They will be willing to pay them, but hope to be assisted in feeding and clothing them from the King's Government.

I anxiously promise myself you will be satisfied with the Act from this Island, and I proceed to St. Vincent on the 11th inst. in hopes of receiving an equally unexceptionable Act from the Legislature of that Island.

Sir, Downing-street, 21st August 1834.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Dispatch of 8th March, enclosing a copy of the Act which had been passed by the Legislature of Grenada for the Abolition of African Slavery.

It is not without considerable reluctance, that in announcing to you His Majesty's approval of the greatest part of this Act, I am compelled to state that there are some important defects in it which require to be amended, in order that His Majesty may be enabled to issue the Order in Council, declaring that adequate and satisfactory provision hath been made, by the Colony of Grenada, for giving effect to the Act of Parliament for the Abolition of Slavery; upon which declaration the right to the compensation which Parliament has provided, has been made to depend.

With

With the view of bringing under your notice, in the clearest and most succinct manner, the facts to which I have adverted, I shall institute a comparison between the enactments of the Grenada Act and the provisions sketched out in the draft of the Order in Council, which was transmitted with my predecessor's Despatch of the 19th October last, to the West India Colonies, for the consideration of their respective Legislatures, and which draft developed the views of His Majesty's Government as to the supplementary legislation necessary for carrying into effect the system of apprenticeship.

This comparison, whilst it enables me conveniently to point out those parts of the Act which require alteration, at the same time demonstrates that the Legislature of Grenada have, for the most part, closely and faithfully copied the model which was placed before them, and thus furnishes a proof, as gratifying as it is convincing, that they have been animated by a sincere desire to accomplish the intention of Parliament, and to carry into effect the wishes of His Majesty's Government.

1st. The judicial and ministerial agency to be employed formed the subject of the first chapter of the Model Draft, and it is treated of in the first four clauses of this Act. Upon this subject, the only point which I have to notice, as necessarily requiring amendment, is, that no power is given to the Governor to make regulations for securing the discipline and efficiency of the police. In the Model Draft this was provided for by the 17th section of the first chapter; and I fear that the omission of such a power from the Act before me, will prove a serious obstacle to the successful working of that establishment.

2d and 3d. As respects the second and third chapters of the Model Draft, which relate to the procedure to be observed by the special justices in the exercise of their functions, and to the division of the apprenticed labourers into their respective classes, subjects which are treated of in sections 5 to 33. Section 67, and sections 34 to 46 of this Act, I have no observation to make, further than to repeat the expression of my satisfaction at the cheerful adoption, by the Council and Assembly of Grenada, of the suggestions of my predecessor upon these subjects.

4th. The maintenance of the apprenticed labourers is referred to in the fourth chapter of the Model Draft, and in clauses 47, 50, and 53, 54 of this Act.

The Act of Parliament requires, in its 11th section, that during the continuance of the apprenticeship, the apprenticed labourer shall be supplied with such food, clothing, lodging, medicine, medical attendance, and such other maintenances and allowances, as by any law then in force in the Colony to which such apprenticed labourer might belong, an owner was required to supply to and for any slave, being of the same age and sex as such apprenticed labourer.

The precise and ambiguous terms of that enactment relieve me from all responsibility on this subject, beyond that of comparing the maintenance to which the apprenticed labourers are declared to be entitled by the Grenada Act now before me, with that which was secured to them, whilst in their state of slavery, under the Grenada Slave Act, passed in the year 1825.

The second clause of that Act requires that the owner shall allow to each prædial slave for his support, a sufficient portion of land, adapted for the growth of provisions; and if it shall be found inconvenient for the owner to allow such land, he shall, by other means, make good and ample provision for the slaves in lieu thereof. That the provision-ground shall be inspected monthly by the manager or overseer. That the owner shall allow every family of slaves a good and comfortable house, with one or more beds, raised a foot from the ground. That the owner shall give each slave a "sufficient" allowance weekly of salt and salt fish, or of such other food as their ages and state of health may require. That the owner shall give to each slave "a sufficient clothing and blankets, suitable to their respective age, sex and condition." That every non-prædial slave shall be provided with "comfortable lodging, sufficient food and decent clothing." The justices, on conviction of any owner for non-compliance with these rules, are to adjudge the owner to make the following allowances to each prædial slave:—"Quarter of an acre of land, or 4*s.* 6*d.* currency (about 2*s.* sterling) per week, in lieu thereof; a weekly allowance of one quarter of a pint of salt and 2 lbs. of salt fish, or such other provisions as may be equivalent thereto; an annual allowance of one penistown or cloth jacket, with three yards of cloth, or six yards of cloth without the jacket, eight yards of linen, one hat, with needles and thread, and a triennial allowance of one blanket." To each non-prædial slave the magistrates are to adjudge "a weekly allowance, in money or provisions, equivalent thereto, to the value of 6*s.* currency," and an annual allowance of two suits of clothing.

GRENADA.

These regulations, though passed in reference to slaves, are the measure of the rights of the apprenticed labourers to maintenance.

By the 47th section of the present Act, the employer is required to give to the apprenticed labourer, who is not provided with grounds, 2 lbs. of salted fish, one quarter of a pint of salt, eight pints of flour, or six quarts of meal, grain, pulse or other articles of food equally nutritious. It becomes, therefore, my duty to consider in the first place, whether I can sanction the substitution of the specific quantities of flour or meal in lieu of the 4*s.* 6*d.* currency, to which the prædial apprenticed labourer would have been entitled had he remained a slave.

Without attempting to decide whether these specific quantities are equivalent in their average value to the money allowance, I cannot but feel convinced that with a view to the early acquisition by the apprenticed labourer of those habits of forethought and economy, which are necessary to render him fit for the enjoyment of unrestricted freedom, it is much better for him to receive his maintenance in the shape of a weekly payment, than in specific articles of food. I should wish you, therefore, to urge the Council and Assembly of Grenada to revive the provisions of the law of 1825, and to adapt them to the case of the apprenticed labourers. Moreover, the re-enactment of those provisions will give to the apprenticed labourer the indefinite rights to "good and ample provision," to "sufficient food," and decent clothing, which, although inadequately sanctioned by the Act of 1825, cannot be withheld from them without infringing the British Statute.

If the recommendation which I thus made be adopted, the 47th section of the Act before me, to which I see several objections, will manifestly become inapplicable.

Whilst upon this subject, I cannot withhold the expression of my regret, that the Council and Assembly of Grenada should, as respects the apprenticed labourers, have diminished to so great an extent the time formerly allotted to the slaves for the cultivation of their provision grounds. I have no reason to suppose, that in the Colony of Grenada, the twenty-eight days to which the slaves were entitled, would be more than adequate for the purpose of supporting the apprenticed labourers, and at all events I should not feel myself justified in sanctioning a less allowance of time for this purpose than has been freely conceded by the Legislatures of Jamaica and Barbadoes; namely, twenty-six days in the year.

The 53d section of the Act now before me which relates to the medical attendance on the apprenticed labourers, very properly provides that a hospital book shall be kept on each plantation. Upon this point I have only to suggest the addition of a few words, enabling the special justice to call for and inspect such hospital book when he may think fit.

The 54th section authorizes the employer to keep the hospital locked up, and forbids any patient to leave it except by the permission either of the medical attendant or of the employer. Admitting, as I do, the necessity of this controlling power in the employer over the hospital and its inmates, I must nevertheless urge that this clause should be amended so as to prevent the employer from retaining any one in the hospital who may have obtained from the medical attendant permission to depart.

It is required by the 16th section of the Act of Parliament that the distance to which provision grounds may be removed from the abode of the apprenticed labourers should be confined within some maximum limitation. To meet this requisition in spirit, it is obviously necessary that the 49th section of the Grenada Act should be so far modified as to make the sanction of the special justice necessary to every arrangement, under which the provision grounds are situate beyond some reasonable distance (to be defined by the Grenada Legislature) from the apprenticed labourer's dwelling.

5th. The 5th chapter of the model draft, and sections 55, 63 and 65 of the Act under my consideration, relate to the duties to be performed by the apprenticed labourer, and the penalty for their non-performance. For the most part there is a close conformity between these parts of the two instruments. I feel it necessary, however, to make the following observations upon this branch of the subject. First, The order permits the absence of the labourers from the estates for "reasonable cause," leaving the special justice to determine in each case what cause is reasonable. For this provision the Act of Assembly substitutes a permission to be absent for any "legal cause." It appears to me that this alteration is not an improvement, but the reverse. The Act is silent as to what particular occasions shall amount to a legal justification of the temporary quitting the employer's service; and an Act which should fully supply that omission, must anticipate in detail the numberless numberless contingencies of human life which might afford the labourer an adequate apology. As this is impossible, the rule respecting "legal" causes of absence must either be identical in effect with the rule respecting "reasonable" causes of absence, or it must have no definite meaning whatever. On either supposition, the change of the one adjective for the other has, as it seems to me, left the rights and duties of all parties in this respect in great and needless obscurity.

Second. The Model Draft subjected an apprenticed labourer to punishment for ill-using the cattle of his employer, or for exposing his employer's property to injury by wilful-negligence. By the 58th section of the Act, the labourer is rendered liable to the same punishments, though the cattle or property should not belong to his employer, but to some third person. To this change, however slight it appears, I entertain a strong objection.

It was the intention of Parliament that, subject to the obligations of apprenticeship and to certain disqualifications arising out of that state, the slaves in the British West India Colonies should on the 1st August become free subjects of His Majesty. I am necessarily prevented from sanctioning any enactment in a Colonial Act which tends to create any distinction between an apprenticed labourer and any other free person, unless such distinction is incidental to the apprenticeship. I trust therefore that the Legislature of Grenada will not object to omit so much of the section now under my consideration as exposes the apprenticed labourer to a penalty for injuring the cattle or property of any individual, not his employer; a penalty from which other free persons are exempt.

Third. The 63d section forbids the resort of apprenticed labourers desiring to prefer complaints to any person except the special justice of the district. This exception should be made to extend to the Governor, as it is possible they may wish to complain to that functionary against the decision of the special justice, or to represent to him grievances not falling under the cognizance of a special justice.

Fourth. The 65th section of the Act authorizes the employer at his own discretion to imprison on the plantation, for 24 hours, any labourer guilty or suspected of being guilty of any offence against the Act, or the general law of the Island.

Although I am well aware of the essential importance of preserving good order on the plantations, yet I cannot approve of this section in its present shape; for notwithstanding the improvement here contemplated is doubtless intended as a precautionary, and not as a penal measure, yet it would almost inevitably assume in practice the latter character, and would thus lead to a direct contravention of the British Act, which declares any Colonial Act void in so far as it may authorize any employer to punish any apprenticed labourer for any offence by him or her committed or alleged to have been committed, by any personal or other correction whatever. I should not object however to the introduction of an enactment into this Act which should authorize the special justices to appoint constables on the plantations from amongst the most respectable apprenticed labourers; such constables to have (with reference to other apprenticed labourers) the same powers as ordinary constables, and to have authority to take into custody any apprenticed labourer in case he shall have offended against the law established by this Act, and in case it is presumed that he will attempt to escape.

6th. The 6th chapter of the Model Draft, which treats of the duties to be performed by the employers towards their apprenticed labourers, and the penalties for their non-performance, corresponds with sections 64 and 68 to 75 of this Act. Upon this branch of the subject I have to observe that I regret to feel myself unable to assent to the appointment of inspectors, as proposed by section 64 of the Grenada Act; although I can readily conceive that in many instances the employment of this species of arbitration may be convenient both to the employer and to the apprentice.

It appears to me, however, to have been the intention of Parliament that all questions incidental to the apprenticeship should be referred to the special justices only, and consequently I conceive that the intervention of these inspectors would be so far inconsistent with that intention, as to preclude me from recommending His Majesty to sanction this provision.

With regard to the subject of task-work, several important enactments suggested in the Model Draft, are omitted in this Act.

The Act contains no provision for reducing into writing all contracts for task-work or extra service; for annulling all such contracts unless approved by the special justice within a fortnight, for ascertaining that the terms of such contracts are understood by the parties, and are entered into freely, or for preventing ambiguities in the terms of such engagements. I regret the absence of such provisions, and I am disposed to suggest their insertion, or to propose as an alternative a provision to the following effect; (namely) that all contracts for task-work should be entered into books to be kept on the respective plantations for that purpose, and that upon complaint made to the special justice by any apprenticed labourer who shall have entered into the same, the special justice shall be authorized to inquire whether the terms of such contract were distinctly understood by such apprenticed labourer, and whether he entered into it freely and voluntarily, and whether the same is reasonable and just. And the special justice shall make such adjudication in the matter as the case may require.

7th. The 7th chapter of the Model Draft relates to offences which may be committed by the apprenticed labourers against the State, and the punishment of such offences; to which subject are devoted sections 76–89 of the Act.

First. Under the 76th section, labourers are made liable to solitary imprisonment for 12 months, with or without hard labour, on conviction before any justice of the peace of having remained at a riotous assemblage after warning to depart. To the penalty itself I offer no objection. The infliction of such a punishment by the sentence of "any justice of the peace," seems to me in the highest degree objectionable. This is far too great a power to have been confided to a single special justice. To entrust it to justices not having special commissions is directly opposed to the words of the Act of Parliament in the 76th section, in cases where the riotous assemblage may originate in any questions between the employers and the labourers. To remove these objections it would be advisable to insert the words "any two or more special justices," in lieu of the words "any justice of the peace."

Second. The 78th clause of the Act, which is adopted in pursuance of the 4th section of chapter 7 of the Model Draft, restricts within narrower limits than were originally contemplated, the right of the labourer to leave the estate to which he may be attached. So far from approving of this additional restriction, His Majesty's Government, upon more mature consideration, arrived at the conviction that the provision, even as originally framed, requires to be modified, so as to afford the prædial apprenticed labourer a greater degree of liberty during those hours which are not to be devoted to his employers. I recommend, therefore, that in the place of section 78 of the Act, the following clause should be substituted; (namely), Every labourer found in any place more than five miles distant from his residence, except in his way to or from some place of public worship, and not having with him a written pass for that purpose from his employer, or from the special justice of the district, shall be liable to be apprehended and brought before a special justice; and unless such labourer shall make it appear, to the satisfaction of such special justice that he or she, when so found, was employed on his or her lawful occasions, such labourer shall be adjudged a vagabond, and punished accordingly.

Whilst upon this branch of the subject, I must observe that I feel justified in sanctioning the clause which compels the apprenticed labourers to reside upon the plantations or establishments on which they may be employed. Having regard, on the one hand, to the importance of fixing the negro to a specified domicile during the apprenticeship, and on the other hand to the provisions in the Slavery Abolition Act, requiring the employer to supply the apprenticed labourer with lodging, medical attendance, and with provision grounds within a limited distance from such lodging, I am satisfied that this restriction is expedient, and that it is not inconsistent with the intention of Parliament.

8th. A dissolution of the apprenticeship by contract or appraisement, forms the subject of the 8th chapter of the Model Draft, and of sections 90th and 96th of the Act.

The comparison of the provisions on this subject respectively contained in the Model Draft and in the Act, leads me necessarily to the conclusion that a large proportion of the cases intended to be provided for in the Model Draft, are altogether unnoticed in the Act.

If the employer should happen to be under any disability, or should be unwilling to lose the services of his apprentice, the apprentice might in the first case (as the Act is at present framed) in vain desire his discharge; and on the second supposition, the same unwillingness might prevent such discharge, by inducing the employer to refuse to nominate an appraiser.

As it was the intention of Parliament that every facility should be given to apprenticed labourers desirous of purchasing their discharge, I trust that the Council and Assembly of Grenada will, when their attention has been directed to this subject, either adopt the provisions originally suggested, or modify the enactments of their Act, so as to render them complete and effectual.

9th. The

GRENADA.

9th. The 9th chapter of the Model Draft, and the 97th and 98th sections of the Act relate to the removal of apprenticed labourers from one plantation to another.

Under this head I have only to remark, that the 9th section of the Act of Parliament declares that no prædial apprenticed labourer shall be subject or liable to perform any labour in the service of his employer, except upon, in or about the works and business of the plantations or estates to which such labourer shall have been attached, or on which he shall have been usually employed before the 1st August 1834; but the 98th section of the Grenada Act authorizes the employment of any tradesman, artificer or other labourer on lands not belonging to their employers for certain specified purposes, or for any other lawful purpose. These two enactments are evidently contradictory, and repugnant to each other; and I am therefore under the necessity of recommending the repeal of the latter.

10th, 11th, 12th. The three last chapters of the Model Draft are adopted in the Act of Assembly, with no variations which it appears to me material to notice.

The 106th section of the Act requires every apprenticed labourer, after the expiration of the apprenticeship, either to work out in the master's service the time equal to that which he may have subtracted from it, or to make satisfaction to the employer for the loss. The qualifications of the rule to be found in the 20th section of the British Act, that no such extra service shall endure beyond seven years from the end of the apprenticeship, ought to be inserted, by way of proviso, in this section of the Grenada Act.

The 115th section of the Grenada Act declares, that all Acts in force in the Colony, by which slaves are rendered available to public uses, shall apply to the case of apprenticed labourers, so that the same services may be exacted from them for any public object, as have hitherto been exacted for any such object from the slaves. This section also requires to be qualified, so as to prevent the leisure time of the prædial apprenticed labourers from being encroached upon.

In closing these observations, I feel it my duty to state, that although I have thus frankly and unreservedly pointed out those parts of the Act under my consideration which I have deemed to be defective, yet I am not the less sensible of the prompt and cordial concurrence of the Council and Assembly of Grenada in the main object of Parliament, the emancipation of the slave, and of their sincere endeavours to carry into effect the details of the apprenticeship system, as pointed out to them by His Majesty's Government.

The line of conduct which the Council and Assembly of Grenada have pursued on this occasion encourages me to hope, with no small degree of confidence, that they will receive the suggestions which I have offered to them in the same spirit of acquiescence which they have hitherto displayed, and that they will ultimately afford me the satisfaction of communicating to them His Majesty's entire and unqualified approbation of their legislative exertions on this important subject.

Sir, Government House, Grenada, 6 January 1835.

Referring to your Despatch, dated Downing-street, 21 August 1834, Grenada, addressed to Governor Sir Lionel Smith, I have the honour to transmit herewith an Act of this Legislature, amending, agreeably to the expressed wishes of His Majesty's Government, "An Act for carrying into effect the provisions of an Act of the Imperial Parliament of Great Britain and Ireland, passed in the third and fourth years of the reign of His present Majesty, King William the Fourth, for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies, and to make further provision for the purposes in the said Act mentioned." I have received the Governor-General's authority to assent to this Bill, and as its early transmission to England is of the utmost importance to the Colony, I am induced to send one copy direct to you; a duplicate shall be forwarded to the Governor-General, with an explanation of my reason for having despatched the first transcript direct.

EXTRACT of a DESPATCH from the Earl of Aberdeen to Governor Sir Lionel Smith, dated Colonial Office, 28 Feb. 1835.

THE Act for the amendment of the Slavery Abolition Law will be disallowed by His Majesty in Council, because it requires the Governor to appoint a certain number of justices for each of the judicial districts into which the Colony is to be divided, which justices are not to be among the number of stipendiary magistrates, but are to act in concert with them in giving effect to the law respecting apprenticed labourers.

Abstaining from all discussion respecting the propriety of the scheme itself, it is sufficient for me to say, that both the general laws of the realm and the Act of Parliament for the Abolition of Slavery, require that His Majesty should reserve to himself an unfettered discretion as to the choice of the justices of the peace, and as to the number to be appointed for this or any other purpose, and that by this enactment the King would be virtually deprived of that discretion.

I observe that the Attorney-general of Grenada anticipated the objection, but that his opinion did not prevail, and is not even noticed in any communication made to this office on the subject by yourself, or by the Lieutenant-Governor. I conjecture that this oversight may have been occasioned by the great brevity with which the views of the Attorney-general are stated, but upon a subject so peculiarly within his province, it seems to me that the representations of the principal legal adviser of the Colonial Government were entitled to greater weight than on this occasion they appear to have received.

EXTRACT of a DESPATCH from Lieut.-Governor Darling to Mr. Secretary Stanley, dated Government House, Tobago, 10 August 1833.

THE last vessel of this season sailing direct for England to-morrow, I do myself the honour to acknowledge your duplicate Letter of the 13th June (the original not having reached me), with copy of the resolutions which had passed both Houses of Parliament for the abolition of negro slavery. I immediately on their receipt sent copies of your Despatch and the resolutions to the President of the Legislative Council and Speaker of the House of Assembly, in order that the Members of those bodies might individually have full time before the meeting of the Legislature next month, to give the most mature consideration to this important subject, which will probably soon be submitted to them collectively. It gives me great pleasure to be able to state my opinion that the views of His Majesty's Government will meet with little opposition in this Island on the part of the proprietors, while I believe also that the slave population is as little, perhaps less, excited than in any other of His Majesty's West India possessions. I give this, however, on the authority of what is reported to me by those gentlemen in whom I am inclined to place confidence; I may state, in corroboration of it, that although several complaints have been made to me since my arrival, by slaves from different plantations (on one occasion by seven at once), they have in no instance shown any impatience on the subject of emancipation, nor have their complaints had any thing of a general nature in them, still less of combination, being on every occasion confined to individual grievances, real or imaginary. I regret extremely that I cannot give this information, as the result of my own observation, further than I have just stated, not having been able to meet with horses in the Island, which has prevented my making a general tour of it ere this; I am however in daily expectation of being mounted from Barbadoes, when I hope to have confirmed by my own inquiry what at present I am obliged to take on the authority of others.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your circular Despatch of the 5th September, accompanied by a copy of The King's Proclamation and several sets of the Abolition of Slavery Bill. I immediately laid these documents before the Privy Council, who were of opinion that the abrupt promulgation of the Proclamation might possibly hurry the slaves into the belief that they were immediately set free, unless great pains were taken in explaining it to them, and suggested that it should be preceded by a short notice or address from myself explanatory of the subject. I in consequence issued the notice whereof I have the honour to enclose a copy, which has been followed by the King's Proclamation, and I am informed by gentlemen from the country that it has been attended with the the best effect and has given general satisfaction to the slaves. On one estate indeed there appears to be some little irregularity at this moment (not arising out of this measure), but it is not of such importance as to induce me to trouble you with any report upon the subject. I have no doubt of order being promptly restored. The copies of the Abolition Bill which I had the honour to receive with your Despatch have been circulated to the magistracy in the several districts of the Island, and to the Members of the Legislature, who are now in session and occupied with this subject.

Enclosure in No. 280.

By His Excellency Major-General Henry Charles Darling, Lieutenant-Governor of Tobago.

To the SLAVE POPULATION of the ISLAND.

Knowing how much you all wish for the receipt of those orders which you have for a long time expected to release you from slavery and make you free, I have great satisfaction in announcing to you that the Parliament of Great Britain has at last, after a great deal of trouble, completed the laws and regulations that have been found necessary on the great change that is about to take place in your condition; and The King's orders which I have received to make known this to you shall be immediately obeyed, as soon as the Proclamation can be printed and sent round the Island. To prevent you, however, from forming hasty and wrong opinions upon the subject and then meeting with disappointment, I think it right to inform you that no change whatever will take place in your condition until after next crop time, and that when your slavery itself shall cease you will still be required to work for a certain time for your former masters, but under regulations different from those to which you have hitherto been accustomed. With these new regulations you will become acquainted before the time for your manumission. I have directed all managers, overseers and magistrates, in short, all white people throughout the Island, to explain such parts of the new law as are most interesting to you; if you are not satisfied with what they tell you, you may come to me for explanation, but take care that you do not come in greater numbers than two or three together; I will not receive or speak to any body of slaves, either coming with complaints or to ask for information, that may exceed that number.

I have now only to express my hope and desire that you will not allow the receipt of this intelligence to excite you to any acts of insubordination, idleness or riot. You must recollect that you are still under the same owners and the same laws as heretofore, though they will in a short time be changed, and that it will be my duty (which you may depend upon it I will not neglect) to support those laws to the utmost, and that any ill-disposed negroes who may absent themselves from their work, or advise others to do wrong, shall be selected as the fittest objects for severe example. Be peaceable, be orderly, attend to your work with increased diligence, and show by your good conduct how much you value and deserve the blessings of freedom to which you will in a certain time be admitted.

I have much pleasure in forwarding herewith, for His Majesty's gracious allowance, a transcript of the Act which has been passed by the Legislature of Tobago, for carrying into effect the provisions of the Imperial Act for the Abolition of Slavery; and I feel assured that the spirit in which this Bill is drawn up cannot fail to afford satisfaction to His Majesty's Government.

No. 1. Printed in the Appendix (B.) No. 50.

You will perceive that by the last clause the period of its coming into operation is made to depend upon His Majesty's confirmation; but considering that such confirmation might possibly not be received by the 1st August next, I instructed the Lieutenant-Governor to recommend to the Legislature a repeal of the clause in question; so that the Act may at once be in full force on that day. I beg to enclose copy of a Despatch from General Darling, stating that it is intended to pass a Bill for this purpose; and at the same time enclosing a copy of his address, on recently proroguing the Legislature.

No. 2.

No. 4.

I have also much pleasure in transmitting, as connected with this Bill, the enclosed copies of communications between the Lieutenant-Governor and the Legislature of Tobago, by which it appears that it is proposed immediately to abolish the power of flogging slaves, except by sentences of magistrates; a measure which I consider of the utmost importance as a preliminary to the great change which is so shortly to take place in these countries.

Sir, Government House, Tobago, 6th May 1834.

I have had the honour to receive your Excellency's Despatch of the 18th April, authorizing me to assent to the Bill for the Abolition of Slavery in this Island; which order I carried into effect on the 2d instant, by signing the Bill in the presence of the Council and Assembly, when I addressed them in a short speech (of which I have the honour to enclose a copy) and prorogued the Legislature to the 9th instant.

I have furnished them with copies of your Excellency's Despatch; and when I meet them in a new session I shall not fail to call their attention to those points which you consider as requiring alteration with a view to the greater efficiency of the Bill. Of their ready acquiescence in your Excellency's suggestions, I have at present no reason to doubt. It appears indeed by the minutes of the Legislative Council that it was their intention the last clause should have been expunged, to which amendment the Assembly were understood to have assented; yet it was retained in the original of the Bill as received by me from the President, an oversight which they appear at a loss to account for.

On the other point adverted to in the 3d paragraph of your Excellency's Despatch, I had the honour to state in my Letter of the 1st April, that a Bill for the registration and classification of apprenticed labourers, which appeared to me very comprehensive, had passed the Council and Assembly; but owing to informality in the enacting part of it, I did not forward the transcript to your Excellency. When that point is again brought under their consideration, I am given to understand the Bill will undergo every necessary alteration to give it the desired effect.

This being accomplished, I hope the Legislature of Tobago will be considered as having fully merited the confidence of the British Government by the spirit and liberality with which they have given effect to the Act of the Imperial Parliament for the Abolition of Slavery in this Island.

I have, &c.

(signed) H. C. Darling.

Mr. President and Gentlemen of the Legislative Council,

Mr. Speaker and Gentlemen of the House of General Assembly,

It has been customary, I believe, for the Legislature of this Island to be prorogued at the end of each session by written communication from the executive, and I should undoubtedly follow so convenient a precedent on the present occasion, did I not consider that a summary and informal method of releasing you from further attendance on those duties which have occupied so large a portion of your time for the last six months, would but ill accord with the importance of the object which has chiefly engrossed your attention.

TOBAGO.

It would moreover deprive me of the gratification of expressing personally the satisfaction I derive from the spirit of liberality with which you have given effect to the views of the Imperial Parliament, by the Act which you have passed for the Abolition of Slavery in this Island. This Act I consider highly creditable to you as evincing the sincerity of your wishes to ameliorate to the utmost extent of prudence the condition of those who are about to exchange a state of slavery for one of temporary and modified servitude.

I have now to perform a very pleasing duty in assenting, in the name and by the authority of his Excellency the Governor-in-Chief, to the Bill before me for the Abolition of Slavery in the Island of Tobago; and if the high feeling of gratification with which I put my hand to this Bill were susceptible of augmentation, it could only be derived from the actual presence of those individuals, whose welfare and happiness it is its object to promote, and which I most earnestly hope may be fully attained.

Some informality in the drawing up of certain other Bills which have been presented to me during the present session, having obliged me to decline their acceptance for transmission to the Governor-in-Chief, I have no constitutional method of enabling you to rectify the objection, but by proroguing the Legislature for a short period, that you may in another session reconsider the several subjects and introduce the desired alterations.

I have now therefore to prorogue this provincial Parliament, which is hereby prorogued to Friday the 9th day of this month, then to meet for the despatch of business.

Government House, Tobago, 2d May 1834.

(signed) H. C. Darling, Lieutenant-Governor.

No. 3.

Sirs, Government House, Tobago, 14th May 1834.

As the period for the Abolition Act going into operation is now approaching, I wish to submit to the consideration of the Legislature, whether some preliminary measures by way of a gradual introduction of the great change that will take place on the 1st of August next, may not be advisable.

I leave to the superior judgment of the Council and Assembly to decide what these measures should be; the total abolition of punishment by order of the attornies, managers or others having at present this power, should perhaps be the principal; but there may be others of minor importance in themselves, which may materially tend to prepare the understanding of the slaves for the better comprehension of the more solid advantages to which they are about to be admitted.

To any measures of this nature I shall be most happy to give my co-operation and concurrence.

The Honourables the President of the Legislative Council and The Speaker of the House of Assembly.

I have, &c.

To His Excellency Major-General Darling, Lieutenant-Governor in and over the Island of Tobago and its Dependencies, &c. &c. &c.

The House of General Assembly have to acknowledge the receipt of your Excellency's message of the 14th instant, submitting whether some preliminary measures by way of a gradual introduction to the great change that will take place on the 1st August next, might not be advisable.

And the House in reply have much satisfaction in informing your Excellency that, previous to the receipt of this message, the House had taken advantage of the passing of a Bill to amend the Abolition Act, to introduce certain clauses taking away the power of punishment from the master, &c. after the 1st June next, and vesting the same entirely in the Magistracy of the Colony; and which measure the House consider will be one great step towards preparing the mind of the slave population for the important change that is about to take place in their future condition.

Sir, Government House, Barbadoes, 10th July 1834.

I have the honour to transmit herewith for His Majesty's gracious approval, an Act, intituled, " An Act to amend an Act, intituled, 'An Act to carry into effect the provisions of an Act of the Imperial Parliament of Great Britain and Ireland, intituled, 'An Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies; for promoting promoting the industry of the manumitted Slaves, and for compensating the persons hitherto intituled to the services of such Slaves;' and to repeal certain Clauses of an Act commonly called the Slave Act, passed on or about the 15th of August 1829, and to substitute other clauses in this Act in lieu thereof.'" TOBAGO.

The original object with which this Act was introduced, was to cancel the last clause of the Tobago Act for the Abolition of Slavery, which made its coming into operation dependent upon the receipt of His Majesty's allowance thereof, as already stated in my Despatch No. 7, of the 11th ult. (Tobago); and I am happy to acquaint you that the Legislature took the opportunity of introducing certain clauses, abrogating the power of the master to inflict punishment on the slave, and obliging him to refer all complaints to a magistrate from the 1st of last month.

Sir, Government House, Tobago, August 22, 1834.

A direct opportunity for writing to England occurring, by the departure of the last ship for the season, I avail myself of it to acquaint you, that the period for the expiration of slavery, and the transition to a state of apprenticeship, has arrived, and passed in this Island without any act of irregularity or insubordination on the part of the individuals whose hopes have been so long directed to the enjoyment of complete and unrestricted freedom. The pains that had been taken by the attornies and managers, for some time previous to the 1st of August, in explaining to the slaves the conditions which are for a further period to attend their emancipation, prevented any material expression of disappointment on the arrival of the expected day, whatever may have been felt on the occasion; and it affords me a very sensible gratification to assure you, as well from my own observation as from the weekly reports of the magistrates, from the distant parts of the Island, which have been made up to the 18th instant, that at no period have the slaves worked more cheerfully, or conducted themselves with more general propriety in this Island, than since the 1st of August. The very few complaints that have been brought before the magistrates have been of the most trifling description, being confined to occasional misunderstandings with respect to the hours of turning out to work, and the extra time to be granted to the apprentices out of the 45 weekly working hours, between the 1st of July and 1st of December. The special magistrates having fully explained those points, wherever they were not perfectly understood, I am induced to believe that the Island of Tobago will be found second to none in point of good conduct on the part of the apprentices; while it is no more than justice to the several attornies and managers to state, that there is a very general desire on their part to observe a strict attention to the law, and to shew every reasonable indulgence to the apprentices.

I beg to enclose a short address explanatory of the principal points of the Abolition Act, which was read and explained to the head-men on each estate immediately previous to the 1st of August.

And have, &c.

Enclosure in No. 284.

Enclosure in No. 284.

To the FREE APPRENTICED LABOURERS of the Island of Tobago.

AS the day has now nearly arrived when slavery is directed to cease in all the West India Islands, I have thought proper with the advice of the Council, to address you on the subject, for the purpose of explaining the chief points of the law, by which you are in future to be governed.

First then you must understand, that although you are declared to be no longer slaves, and cannot be bought or sold, or flogged as before, and that other things of which you have frequently complained are no longer allowed, yet you must know that you are still required to serve your late owners as labourers for some time longer, in order to pay them by your labour a part of what they would lose, were you to be altogether your own masters at once. This is but reasonable, and I hope that, by the cheerfulness with which you will continue to work under the new regulations, until the end of your apprenticeship, and by your orderly and peaceable conduct, you will show how well you deserve the blessings you will in a short time enjoy. You must know that in England and in every other country, there must be laws to punish the wicked and to keep idle and bad people in order. Free persons in England are indeed sometimes hanged, and in other ways very severely punished when they commit bad crimes. So must it be in the West Indies, when free men, either white or coloured, break through the laws and commit crimes. You will always find me your friend, and ready to protect you against injustice; but I shall be very strict in supporting the magistrates who order you to be punished, when you do anything against the law.

Now the law says,—

1st. That after the 1st August (next Friday) you are to be no longer slaves; that your children now under six years of age are free at once, and that those born after that day shall be born free in all respects; and that any slave who has at any time been in England with the consent of his master, is now at once free.

2d. Such persons heretofore slaves, but who are in future to serve as apprenticed labourers, and who are and have been employed constantly in the field and in out-door work, are to serve for six years longer from Friday next; but that you are not (except in particular cases) to work more than 45 hours in any one week.

3d. Labourers who are not attached to estates, seafaring men and others who never have their day given to them, and who attend on their employers all day and night if necessary, are to serve only four years longer, when they will be entirely free.

4th. If your employer should wish to release you from service before the periods I have mentioned, he may do so; but if he wishes to release and set free any old man, or one who is sickly and cannot work for himself, he must provide for the support and maintenance of that man, for the remaining part of the six or four years, in the same manner as if he had not discharged him.

5th. If any labourer should wish to purchase his discharge before the end of the time for which he ought to serve, and his employer refuse, it can still be done, and the special magistrate will tell the labourer how he is to act on the occasion.

6th. Labourers are to receive from their employers the same allowances of food, clothing and lodging as at present.

7th. The field (or prædial) apprenticed labourer, if above twelve years of age, is to have half an acre of land as a provision ground, not more than three miles from his dwelling, and for every child under that age the father shall have one quarter of an acre.

8th. Between the 1st July (after crop-time in each year) and the 1st of December, each field apprenticed labourer is to have time equal to 14 full working days, out of the 45 hours that he is required to work in each week.

9th. If land is not given to the labourer to raise provisions, he shall receive, if above ten years of age, a weekly allowance of seven quarts of corn meal or five quarts of rice or flour, or 20 pounds of yams, or 25 pounds of sweet potatoes, or 30 pounds of good plantains. A labourer under ten years to receive half that allowance.

10th. All provisions must be of good sound quality, and delivered on the same day in each week.

11th. No land given to an apprenticed labourer, can be taken from him until he has gathered the whole of the crop growing upon it, which is then to be his own property.

12th. If any labourer shall neglect to cultivate his provision ground, or allow his house to fall into decay, he shall pay his employer for putting it in order, by working an extra number of hours for him, as the magistrate shall direct.

13th. If the employer of any apprenticed labourer shall wilfully neglect or refuse to furnish the provisions, clothing, lodging, provision ground or other allowances, unless prevented by some sufficient cause, he shall pay a fine of 40*s*,; such part of the fine as the judge may think fit to be given to the apprentice complaining.

14th. There shall be a good and sufficient hospital upon every estate for the accommodation of the sick.

15th. Any labourer who may absent himself from his work improperly, shall be compelled to work double the time he may be so absent, provided the extra work does not exceed 15 hours in any one week.

16th. Any apprenticed labourer who may absent himself for more than seven hours and a half in any one week, shall be punished by sentence of imprisonment or by whipping with the cat, as the special justice shall think the case deserves. If he absent himself for a longer period, he will be punished with more severity according to his offence.

17th. Any labourer performing his work indolently or carelessly, shall, for the first offence, be sentenced to perform additional labour; for a second offence, confinement with hard labour; for a third offence, confinement, hard labour, and whipping if judged necessary.

18th. Any labourer guilty of drunkenness, or fighting or insolence, or insubordinate conduct to his employer, or persons set over him, shall be liable to imprisonment, with hard labour, or whipping not exceeding 15 stripes.

19th. Any labourer who by careless use of fire shall endanger his employer's property, or who shall wilfully ill-use the cattle, or by negligence expose his employer's property to damage of any sort, shall be liable to punishment according to the nature and extent of the offence.

20th. Any

20th. Any apprenticed labourer who being appointed a watchman, shall neglect his duty, shall be sentenced to three hours extra labour for each offence.

21st. No female apprenticed labourer shall be punished by whipplng or beating her person, but by confinement, hard labour and solitary confinement.

22d. Labourers who may be sentenced to punishment by whipping, shall not be punished with the cart-whip, but by a cat-o'-nine-tails, as used in the army.

23d. Any person who shall take upon himself to inflict punishment upon an apprenticed labourer, otherwise than by sentence of the special magistrates. or shall keep in confinement any apprenticed labourer, shall be prosecuted for the offence before the Judges in the King's Court.

24th. No labourer is to be compelled to work before six o'clock in the morning nor after six in the evening. Labourers to rest for breakfast from seven to eight o'clock, and from twelve till two, or the same rest may be allowed at any other period.

25th. A signal to be given by blowing a shell, ringing a bell, or in some other manner to mark the time of beginning and leaving off work,

26th. No labourer to be compelled to work on Sunday, except in works of necessity, or in domestic services, or in tending of cattle. Nor is any labourer to be prevented attending divine service at his free will on Sundays.

27th. If the employer of any apprenticed labourer shall cause him to work beyond the period allowed by this law, he shall be sentenced by the special magistrate to pay a fine of 1 s. for every hour's extra service to the labourer complaining.

28th. No labourer shall be compelled to undertake task-work without his own free consent; but if he consent, the special magistrate will explain what the law further requires.

29th. If the employer of any apprenticed labourer shall attempt to prevent him by force or threats from making a just complaint to the special magistrate, such employer shall be prosecuted for the same before the King's Court.

30th. The special justices to be appointed for this service, and none other, have power to hear complaints, and decide between apprenticed labourers and their employers.

31st. If an apprenticed labourer make a complaint against his employer, which the special justice shall consider frivolous or vexatious, he shall do extra work for his employer, not exceeding fifteen hours in the week. And if the employer shall make a frivolous complaint, he shall pay a fine not exceeding 30 s. to the party complaining.

32d. Any apprenticed labourer who shall make a malicious complaint against his employer, may be sentenced to hard labour on the tread-mill, for any time not exceeding a month; and if the employer make such complaint against his apprentice, he shall pay a fine not exceeding 5 l. for the benefit of the party accused.

33d. If apprenticed labourers have cause to make complaint to the special magistrate, they must upon no account leave the estate in gangs or large numbers for that purpose; not more than one in 20 must be chosen, and they must ask the manager or their employer for a pass, and if it is refused, they may then go without it. They must return to the estate to which they belong without loss of time, when dismissed by the magistrate, who will make inquiry into the complaint and decide accordingly.

34th. The special magistrate of each district will appoint six special constables, who will have the same power and authority as any other constables by whatever law appointed.

35th. The special justices may appoint one or more of the apprenticed labourers on each estate to act as constables, in maintaining the peace on such estate, under the direction of the proprietor or manager, or in apprehending any apprenticed labourer not employed on such estate, who may be found loitering thereon. Such constable may, under the direction of the manager, put in confinement for a space not exceeding 24 hours, any apprenticed labourer who may commit any offence or riot on the estate.

36th. If any three or more apprenticed labourers unite in any riot or tumultuous assemblage, and do not disperse in ten minutes, when ordered to do so by any magistrate, they shall be liable to imprisonment with hard labour for any period not exceeding 12 months.

37th. If any three or more apprenticed labourers shall agree together to resist the lawful commands of their employer, they shall be tried by the King's Court and be sentenced to confinement with hard labour for six months, with or without whipping.

38th. No apprenticed labourer shall reside beyond the limits of the estate to which he is attached, without the authority in writing of his employer.

39th. Any apprenticed labourer who shall harbour or conceal another, being a runaway, shall be liable to hard labour for 30 days, or receive any number of stripes, not exceeding 30, or both, as the nature of the case may justify.

40th. No apprenticed labourer, except mariners, to leave the Island without a passport from the Governor, granted on the written consent of his employer, under the penalty of imprisonment with or without hard labour for three months.

41st. Any labourers who shall habitually abandon and neglect to perform the duties imposed upon them by law, shall be sentenced to hard labour on the tread-mill, or to punishment by stripes (if a male) not exceeding 39.

42d. Any labourer who shall absent himself from his employer's service for seven days successively, shall be deemed a runaway, and be sentenced to imprisonment with hard labour, or to solitary confinement for three months, or (if a male) to whipping.

43d. Any labourer who shall absent himself from the service of his employer for any longer period, shall, if apprehended, make satisfaction to his employer after the expiration of his apprenticeship by serving for a longer period.

 44th. Any

TOBAGO.

44th. Any apprenticed labourer who may without lawful authority, take possession of any King's land, or land belonging to other persons, shall be dispossessed of the same, and the buildings and crops thereon be taken from him.

45th. Any apprenticed labourer who may have in his possession any guns, swords, pistols or other arms, without the knowledge and consent of his employer, shall be sentenced to hard labour for a month, or to 39 stripes, and the arms to be taken away from him.

46th. Apprenticed labourers may hold and own property of any description, except what is mentioned in the last article, and may sell, exchange or give away the same; but they must not keep on their employer's property without his consent, any hogs, goats or other animals.

47th. Persons entitled to the services of apprenticed labourers, may let them out or transfer their services to other persons.

48th. Apprenticed labourers cannot be compelled to serve in the militia, but may be employed as constables on the estate to which they are attached.

These are the principal laws by which you are to be governed until the end of your apprenticeship; and I hope you will be as well conducted under them, as you have been in a state of slavery. The special magistrates appointed by the King will explain all things that it may be necessary for you to know. Until those magistrates arrive, you must obey the gentlemen appointed by me to do their duty. I have only further to repeat my recommendation to you, to be obedient to your employers, be diligent and cheerful in the performance of your duty, and you will not fail, I hope, to be happy.

Copy of a DESPATCH from Mr. Secretary Spring Rice to Governor Sir Lionel Smith.

Sir, Colonial Office, 14 Oct. 1834.

I have received Lieutenant-Governor Darling's Despatch of the 22d of August, which I have laid before the King.

His Majesty has commanded me to express the extreme satisfaction he feels at the favourable report therein made of the state of the Island of Tobago, and of the propriety and good conduct evinced by all classes of His Majesty's subjects within that Colony.

It is alike gratifying to His Majesty to learn, that the Lieutenant-Governor has had the zealous co-operation of the parties interested in property within his government, in aiding him to carry into full effect the Act for the Abolition of Slavery, and that the apprenticed labourers have cheerfully continued their operations of industry.

His Majesty has been graciously pleased to command me to express, through you, to the Lieutenant-Governor, and to all those persons, whether in public situations or in private life, who have assisted in producing this happy result, his satisfaction with their conduct; and considering the extreme importance of the united exertions of all classes in promoting the industry of the slaves and the well-being of the Colony, His Majesty feels confident that the same wise and prudent measures, which must have been adopted in order to produce a state of things so very encouraging, will be steadily persevered in.

The new social system in Tobago has happily begun, and it is His Majesty's most earnest desire and hope that it may conduce to future prosperity and security, and that it may lead to internal tranquillity, to the promotion of industry, and to the general happiness of his subjects in Tobago.

It will be the Lieutenant-Governor's office in the future administration of the Abolition Law, to impress upon all parties that it imposes duties and creates rights equally affecting the employer and the labourer, and that it will be carried imperatively into effect for the benefit of both.

His Majesty further commands me to convey his approval of the proclamation which the Lieutenant-Governor felt it his duty to issue on the 25th of July.

I have, &c.

I HAVE the honour to transmit herewith, for His Majesty's gracious approval, the transcripts of two Acts of the Legislature of Tobago, respectively intituled, "An Act to establish certain Rules and Regulations for the classification of those persons, hereafter to become apprenticed Labourers, and for ascertaining to which class they shall respectively belong."

"An Act to authorize the temporary Appointment of Special Magistrates, for the purpose of giving effect to the provisions of an Act of the Legislature of this Island, intituled, 'An Act to carry into effect the provisions of an Act of the Imperial Parliament of Great Britain and Ireland, intituled, 'An Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies, &c.'"

EXTRACT of a DESPATCH from Lieutenant-Governor Darling to the Secreta y of State for the Colonies, dated Government House, Tobago, 31 Dec. 1834.

BEING aware that some anxiety has hitherto been usually felt in England at this season of the year, as to the conduct of the negroes in the West Indies, who, during the Christmas holidays, have been in the habit of receiving greater indulgence than at other periods, and considering that that feeling may be increased at present, in consequence of the late change in their condition, it may perhaps be excusable in me, if I address myself at once to you on this occasion, the mail-boat sailing direct to overtake the packet to-morrow.

It affords me the greatest satisfaction to report to you, that since the 1st of August last, the conduct of the apprenticed labourers throughout this Island has been most satisfactory, no alteration whatever having taken place in their behaviour since I had the honour to write on this subject, on the 22d August. The two holidays, the 25th and 26th of December, have passed in the usual recreations of feasting and dancing, but no instance of outrage or riot of any description has been reported to me. Saturday immediately following the 26th, and that day having been given to them in every week since the 1st of August, they appear in some instances to have thought it might reasonably have been added to their holidays; to this I believe many of the managers would have had no objection, but that Sunday coming after, making four successive holidays, it would have been somewhat imprudent to grant it, as affording the idly disposed inducement and opportunity to stay from the estates; they were therefore generally required to turn out on Saturday the 27th, more for the sake of roll-call than any thing else.

I am informed that their demonstrations of enjoyment on these holidays, have in some cases been of a less animated description than usual, owing probably to their having had throughout the year, a much greater proportion of time at their disposal than formerly, which has occasioned the contrast with the excessive indulgence, heretofore only granted at Christmas, to be the less striking. The managers may in some instances have thought themselves bound to curtail the customary gratifications of rum, &c. thus diminishing the stimulus to great hilarity. Be that as it may, the Island has been and is now in the most perfect state of tranquillity. There has arisen indeed some discussion as to the remuneration which the apprentices should receive for extra labour, during the crop season now commencing, but this has in general been settled with very little trouble. In many cases they have left it to the manager's liberality to reward them at the end of the period, in others, they have only stipulated for the usual quantities of hot liquor from the sugar, rum, and other like indulgences. If I might venture to form an opinion, on the experience of the five months that have elapsed since the extinction of slavery, I should say there is no reason whatever to apprehend any trouble or insubordination in this Island, under the system of apprenticeship; which notwithstanding occasional complaints of late turning out to work, will upon the whole prove as beneficial to the interests of the proprietor as the former system, and this too without reference to the greatly improved condition of the labourer.

YOU will have the goodness to express to Lieutenant-General Darling the great satisfaction felt by His Majesty's Government, at his reports of the demeanour of the apprentices during the period of the Christmas holidays.

No. 289.

EXTRACT of a DESPATCH from the Earl of Aberdeen to Governor Sir Lionel Smith, dated Downing-street, 1 April 1835.

I TRUST that it will be in my power to transmit to you by the next packet an Order of His Majesty in Council, leaving to their operation the Acts passed in the month of May last, by the Lieutenant-Governor, Council and Assembly of Tobago, for giving effect in that Island to the Act for the Abolition of Slavery. In anticipation of that order, I propose now to communicate to you such remarks as have been suggested to me by the perusal of the Acts in question.

In the enactments respecting the assignment of provision grounds to the apprenticed labourers, I observe the greatest distance from the abode of the cultivator, at which they may be apportioned to him, is three miles. It would demand a more exact topographical acquaintance with the Island of Tobago than is probably possessed by any persons in this kingdom, to determine whether this extreme limit might not be considerably narrowed. But it is sufficiently obvious that such a change, if really practicable, ought to be made; because the time lost, and the fatigue incurred in a daily walk of six miles, between the place of his residence and the place where his means of subsistence are to be procured, would be an unprofitable deduction from the leisure and repose of the labourer.

For the cultivation of the provision grounds, 14 days only in the year are allowed by this Act. By the Royal Order in Council, 40 days annually are assigned for the same purpose in Trinidad and St. Lucia, and although in those Islands there is a great extent of unoccupied and virgin soil in the immediate vicinity of almost all the plantations, yet even the allowance of 40 days appears to have been enlarged in St. Lucia, by a local ordinance passed during the existence of slavery there, to 52. It is incredible, therefore, that 14 days can suffice for this work in Tobago. The effect of so short an allowance must be, to cast on the cultivator of the soil the duty of maintaining himself by a deduction, not from the 45 weekly hours assigned to the employer, but from his own leisure. This, however, would be an infringement of the compact made with Colonies for the especial benefit of the emancipated slaves; and therefore the Council and Assembly of Tobago must be called upon to review and amend this enactment.

Compulsory labour on the provision grounds might seem unnecessary, since the urgent pressure of want will probably be a stimulus sufficient to quicken the most listless into that degree of activity which is requisite for procuring their daily food. The rule, however, if retained, should be qualified by two additions. The first, that the compulsion should never be used, except during the time deducted by law, for the purpose of cultivating these grounds, from the 45 hours of weekly labour. The second, that even during that time, an apprenticed labourer, who is earning his subsistence by honest industry in some other employment, should be left to pursue it without molestation.

The rules which forbid the apprenticed labourer to reside beyond the limits of the plantation, except by his employer's consent, or to quit it, even during his own leisure, except with a written pass from the employer, must prevent all free competition for wages, and must enable every planter to make his own terms with the labourers upon his estate for extra service. This, however, is opposed to the spirit of the Act of Parliament. It is necessary that power should be given to the special magistrate as well as to the employer to license the residence of the labourer beyond the limits of the plantation. The law must also be amended in such a manner as to leave the labourer at liberty to resort, during his own leisure, to any place in which he can obtain honest and profitable occupation; provided that it is not of such a nature or extent as to interfere with the performance of his prescribed duty on the eatate to which he may belong.

In

In the 30th section of this Act some words appear to have been transcribed, without due consideration, from the laws formerly in force in the Island, for preventing the abuse of the power of punishment, which, during the existence of slavery, belonged to the owner. Fine and imprisonment are denounced as the penalty of cruelty towards apprentices, and especially in cases of the wanton or cruel cutting, wounding, maiming or mutilation of their persons. But offences of this kind being generally the indications of a murderous design, carried into effect as far as the power of the assailant has extended, are very inadequately punished by fine and imprisonment. Even, however, if it were not desirable to exact any more severe penalty, still there would be no sufficient reason for introducing a special rule of law, applying to those cases only in which the apprenticed labourer is the immediate sufferer. It is an object of great importance that the whole colonial society should henceforth live under the same penal code, and that the growth of all invidious distinctions of this nature should be checked at their first appearance."

Sir, Downing-street, 29 July 1835.

AS the time approaches for carrying into effect the intentions of Parliament in regard to the distribution of the compensation money awarded to the Colonies under the Slavery Abolition Act, I am desirous of calling your attention to the Despatch which was addressed to you by my predecessor on the 1st of April last, respecting the revision and amendment of the Act passed by the Legislature of Tobago for giving effect in that Island to the provisions of the Imperial Act. Should no steps have been taken by the Legislature of Tobago before this reaches you for amending their Act, in conformity with the views entertained by His Majesty and by Parliament, you will lose no time in calling their attention to the subject, pointing out to them that until they shall comply with the requisitions contained in Lord Aberdeen's Despatch, they will not be entitled to participate in the compensation provided for the late slave proprietors.

I have, &c.

Extract of a DESPATCH from Lieutenant-Governor Sir George F. Hill, Bart. to Mr. Secretary Stanley, dated Trinidad, 12 October 1833.

I have had the honour of receiving your very important and very satisfactory Despatch, enclosing the Act of Parliament for the Abolition of Slavery.

The execution of this all-important measure has been provided for by Imperial legislation, the only effectual manner by which it could have been brought to so early a termination, or with uniform operation throughout the British Colonies.

I presume to make up a despatch bag addressed to you, by a merchant vessel, without waiting for the regular writing packet, conceiving that you will be pleased to learn that in this Colony no untoward circumstances in any manner interruptive of tranquillity have occurred.

The militia continues to increase in numbers and to improve in discipline, with a disposition of zeal on the part of the proprietors, far beyond my hope.

The public mind seems prepared to receive the measure of Abolition with serenity, and to give it fair play.

I immediately, on receipt of your Despatch, gave promulgation to His Majesty's Proclamation, as you will perceive by the enclosed gazette.

I have had some hundred copies of it printed and distributed in every part of the Colony.

TRINIDAD.

I being of opinion that careful explanation may be required to mark to the Black population the distinction between slavery and apprenticeship, I am preparing a letter of instruction for that purpose to assist persons I can depend upon in the different quarters of the Island, and when necessary I will personally join them to dispel misapprehension, and offer satisfactory information on every point, as well to proprietors as slaves.

I am warned of the instant departure of the vessel which takes charge of my despatch bag, but cannot conclude without offering you my sincere and hearty congratulations in having obtained the triumph of perfecting the most important measure that has borne on the interests of mankind for this past century.

Sir, Downing-street, 26th November 1833.

I HAVE had the honour to receive your Despatch of the 12th October, and I beg to express to you the gratification which His Majesty's Government have derived from the satisfactory account of the state of Trinidad, and of the reception of the measure for the Abolition of Slavery.

COPY of a DESPATCH from Lieutenant-Governor Sir G. F. Hill to Mr. Secretary Stanley.

Sir, Trinidad, 6th April 1834.

I HAVE the honour to state that I laid your Crown circular Despatch of the 19th of October last, and the model Guiana ordinance which accompanied it (suggesting the measures to be adopted for the purpose of giving effect to the Act for the Abolition of Slavery), before the Council of Government.

I had a sufficient number of this model ordinance printed for the use of the Council, inviting observations upon it.

It was discussed repeatedly at frequent meetings again and again of a committee of the Council, by whom every chapter was noted.

The observations of the committee were laid before the Council, who, after several meetings and much debate, resolved to avail themselves of the option you kindly gave them, and to proceed by report instead of ordinance (with one exception as explained in the inclosed document.)

That document is the final report of the Council of Government passed unanimously in its present form, offering their suggestions for your assistance in the laborious and responsible task you have obligingly and cheerfully proposed to undertake for them in framing the laws whereby the employers and apprenticed labourers are to be governed from and after the 1st of August next.

Pursuant to the spirit of your Despatch of the 19th of October, I encouraged and invited full and free discussion on every point of the model ordinance, and felt much gratification in witnessing the manifest disposition in all parts of the Council to co-operate and render the proposed measures as perfect as experience and foresight can make them.

I have, &c.

TRINIDAD.—The REPORT of the Lieutenant-Governor and Council of Government of the Island of Trinidad upon certain Measures proposed by His Majesty's Government to be enacted for the purpose of carrying into effect the Act for the Abolition of Slavery in the British Colonies, 3 & 4 William 4. c. 73.

WE the Lieutenant-Governor and Members of the Council of Government of this Colony, have weighed and considered with anxious, careful and studious attention the Circular Despatch of the Right honourable the Secretary of State for the Colonies, bearing date the nineteenth of October last, together with an abstract, containing the basis or outline outline of the various measures proposed by His Majesty's Government to be enacted for the purpose of carrying into effect the Slavery Abolition Act.

The details of this law will, we presume, be so nearly similar throughout the British possessions, that with the exception of one ordinance, which we have passed and herewith transmit, we have deemed it more advisable to avail ourselves of the option which His Majesty's Secretary of State has been pleased to afford us of proceeding by way of report to furnish to His Majesty's Government the local information we possess, and the various suggestions that have presented themselves to our view upon the different bearings of this momentous question, rather than to frame an ordinance applying exclusively to the Island of Trinidad.

We have given the preference to this mode of proceeding under the firm conviction that His Majesty's Government intend to provide and establish one general code of laws for the government of the whole of the Colonial possessions.

In the suggesions which we deem it our duty to offer, His Majesty's Government will observe that we have adopted nearly the whole of those contained in the draft outline, with a few modifications and additions.

With a view to perspicuity, we have throughout this Report followed the draft, observing its order both as to chapters and titles.

Chapter I.

On the Judicial and Ministerial Agency to be employed.

Two considerations, we submit, must be especially attended to in the regulations for carrying into effect the all-important object of this chapter:

First.—That the number of the special justices and of the police force placed under their charge should be so fixed, and the districts in which they are to act so situated, that they may be enabled effectually to perform their duties.

Second.—That the regulations under which the justices and police are to be governed should ensure the most strict and active attention to their duties.

By the 18th clause of the Slavery Abolition Act it is provided, that every description of offence or dispute arising out of the relation of master and apprentice shall be decided by the special justice.

The power of punishing slave offences and redressing slave complaints has been hitherto exercised either by the individual proprietor, or by the commandant of the quarter or by the magistrates.

Probably not less than 2,000 persons have been occasionally engaged in the performance of these duties, all which are now to devolve on the special justices alone; nor is there much reason to expect that the number of offences and complaints which were formerly settled and punished by the masters' authority will be in any way diminished; on the contrary, we are inclined to think that disputes respecting real or alleged idleness and indisposition to labour, as well as other offences arising from the relation of master and apprentice, will for some time after the establishment of the new system be much increased. We are, therefore, confident that at least ten special justices will be required for the performance of these duties. We are also of opinion, that the Governor of this Colony may find it necessary to recommend to His Majesty's Government to appoint additional special justices, unpaid.

Considerable inconvenience must, we think, arise unless some general and uniform system of superintendence be adopted to regulate the duties and guide the conduct of the special justices in the several districts.

Differences must and will arise as to the manner in which the duties of these officers are to be performed; and if they are to act independently of each other, and to be accountable only for wilful misconduct, the various districts may in several most important particulars be subject to different modes of proceeding.

The change of a special justice may in many cases produce a change of system, causing great confusion and inconvenience. On the other hand, we think that many important advantages will be obtained by placing the whole system under the direction and control of one superior special justice, corresponding with and acting under the immediate control and instruction of the Executive.

Under this chief special justice we recommend that an assistant chief special justice should be appointed. By this means the machinery of apprenticeship may be made to work uniformly, and the results be more immediately and accurately known.

Independent of this advantage, the prospect of promotion under such an institution will operate as a most useful incentive for the active and faithful discharge of the duties confided to the inferior justices: nor do we consider that such a measure is in any respect at variance with the provisions of the Emancipation Act.

We consider that the number of special justices to be allotted for each Colony must depend not merely on the numbers of the slaves in that Colony, but on the greater or less facility of access to its several districts.

Adopting the principles which we have before stated, we recommend that the Island of Trinidad should be made to consist of two divisions; the First or Metropolitan Division to include all the portions of the Island north of the quarter of Chaguanas, with all the settlements of the eastern coast from the north to the south; the Second Division to comprise all the other quarters of the Island.

TRINIDAD.

The First Division should, we think, be placed under the immediate and personal superintendence of the chief special justice, whose residence should be at the town of Port of Spain.

The Second Division should be under the immediate direction of a chief assistant special justice, residing at San Fernando, acting however under the general superintendence of the chief special justice, with whom his correspondence is to be carried on, and from whom he is to receive such general instructions for the performance of the duties of the special justices in his division as may from time to time be thought requisite.

The reason for proposing this arrangement is, that the town of Port of Spain is the seat of Government, and consequently the fittest place of residence for the chief special justice, who is to be in constant communication with the Executive.

The inhabitants of the quarters in the First Division, however distant, communicate with the town of Port of Spain directly by means of the high roads.

The quarters of the Second Division have only a water access with Port of Spain, whilst Cedros, Hicacos, Quemada, Moruga and Erin have a constant intermediate intercourse with San Fernando.

By means of this division, therefore, all the populous parts of the Colony will be within the distance of a day's journey of a superior justice, whereas a voyage to and from the southern quarters of Port of Spain cannot at some seasons be calculated to be made in less than a week.

In the subdivision of the Colony into districts, and the selection of spots for the police establishments, regard must be had as well to the nature as the extent of the population.

In the town of Port of Spain, for instance, the numbers of employers will almost equal that of the apprentices. In the quarter of South Naparima where the sugar plantations are very numerous, the same number of apprentices will be divided amongst very few employers.

It is desirable, for the sake of convenient access, that the police establishments should be formed in the most populous parts of the several districts.

We are therefore of opinion that the Colony should be made to consist of two parts or divisions.

The Port of Spain, Tacarigua, and eastern districts should constitute the Northern Division.

The Naparima and southern districts should constitute the Southern Division.

The divisions we have proposed should be separated into five judicial districts, and the Governor by proclamation should define, and, as occasion might require, should alter the limits of such districts.

First.—The First District to be called the Port of Spain District, and to comprise the town of Port of Spain, the districts of Tragarete, St. Ann's, Mucurapo, Diego Martin, Maraval, Carenage and Cuesa, Chaguaramas, Bocas, La Ventille, Cimaronero, Aricagua, town of St. Juan's, Santa Cruz, Maraccas, Maraccas Valley and Las Cuevas, St. Joseph and town of St. Joseph.

The number of apprentices in this extensive district would be very large, including all the domestics and tradesmen in Port of Spain, and as the number of employers would also be much larger, as compared with the number of apprentices, than any other district, it may be presumed that the labour of the special justices in this district will be proportionably increased.

The duties of this district could not be satisfactorily performed with a less number than four special justices; one, the chief special justice, and one special justice to reside at Port of Spain; one special justice at the village of St. Juan's, and the other at the Carenage.

Second.—The Second District should be called the Tacarigua District, and should comprise Caroni, Tacarigua and Aranca, Caura, Arima, Guanapo and Aripo.

Third.—The Third District should be called the Eastern District, and should comprise the eastern coast, the soldiers' settlements, Oropauche, Toco, Cumana, Mayaro and Guayaguayare.

This district will comprise but a small number of apprentices; but its extent, and the distance and difficulty of access from other parts of the Island, render it absolutely necessary that a special justice should be appointed for its exclusive superintendence, otherwise the inhabitants would be deprived of all benefit from these establishments.

Fourth.—The fourth should be called the Naparima District, and should comprise Chaguanas, Couva, Cas-cajal Carapachaima, Savonetta, Point à Pierre, North Naparima, South Naparima, Savanna Grande, Oropouche and Moruga.

The residence of the chief special justice, under whose immediate control this and the remaining districts should be placed, should be at San Fernando, where a police establishment should be formed. Two other police establishments should also be formed in this district; one at Cauva, and the other at South Naparima, near the Jordan Hill estate. This district will comprise the principal sugar quarters of the Island, about three-fourths of the sugar of the Island being made within its limits; it seems proper, therefore, that it should be subjected to the superintendence of a superior justice, who, residing in the town of San Fernando, the capital of this division, by continually visiting the police establishment at Cauva and South Naparima and occasionally that of the southern district, may render more effectual the working of the police machinery.

Fifth.

Fifth.—The fifth to be called the Southern District, and to comprise La Brea, Guapo, Irois, Cedros, Hicacos, Quemada and Erin.

The number of apprentices in this district is comparatively small; but its extent is great, and the difficulty of access to these parts considerable. One special justice may, but with much personal activity, be enabled to perform the duties required.

Under this arrangement, the number of special justices of the Island of Trinidad would be, one chief special justice, one assistant special justice, and eight special justices. There would be nine police establishments, at each of which one of the special justices would reside, viz.—

1st. Port of Spain.
2d. Carenage.
3d. St. Juans.
4th. Tacarigua.
5th. Mayaro.
6th. San Fernando.
7th. Couva.
8th. South Naparima.
9th. Irois.

The residence of the chief special justice and one special justice should be at Port of Spain, and that of the chief assistant at San Fernando, the two capitals of the northern and southern divisions of the Island.

It would seem desirable that the residences of the special justices should be the police establishments in the several districts, and those of the chief, special and chief assistant special justices in the towns.

Great as the expense of these establishments will be, it does not appear possible to form an efficient system of police for this Colony at less cost; and every sacrifice must be made to prevent the failure of an experiment upon which the hopes of our fellow colonists depend.

The following Tables exhibit the quarters comprised in the several districts, the number of apprentices, and the total number of inhabitants in each district and quarter, taken from the last returns; also the distance in English miles of the remotest part of each quarter from the nearest police establishment.

Having thus laid before His Majesty's Government a full detail of the locality, extent and population of the various districts we recommend to be established, and the distribution of the special justices therein, we now proceed to offer our suggestions on the extent of the police force, the time of service for which the individuals composing that force should be engaged, and the rate of pay to be allotted to them.

His Majesty's Government recommend that each police settlement should consist of one serjeant and ten privates.

In this suggestion we should be inclined to concur, did not our experience convince us that it would be impossible for the special justice or his serjeant to be constantly in personal attendance at the settlement.

The special justice will have his daily circuit visits to make. The serjeant may be on active out-door duty, and no responsible person (as an officer) will remain to superintend the settlement.

The variety of languages also spoken in Trinidad renders it necessary that some person of authority, who understands them, should always be present at the settlement to communicate at all hours and times with the numerous applicants.

We therefore recommend that a corporal should be added to the police force at each settlement. We also recommend that the privates at each settlement should receive pay at the the rate of 2*s.* 2*d.* sterling per diem, the corporal 3*s.* 3*d.*, and the serjeant 4*s.* 4*d.*, and that they should be engaged to serve for a period of not less than three years.

And lastly, we beg leave to suggest that the police in general may be authorized to act (in case of need) in adjoining or other districts.

With these observations we beg leave to express our concurrence in the various enactments proposed in this chapter.

Chapter II.

On the Procedure to be observed by the Special Justices in the exercise of their Jurisdiction.

We consider the regulations proposed by His Majesty's Government in this chapter, as admirably calculated to govern and guide the special justices in the exercise of their jurisdiction, and in the mode of procedure to be observed by them.

They appear to us to require very little alteration, and to admit of little improvement.

In addition to these, some few regulations will be required to be established for the guidance of the chief special justice and his assistant, and for a more summary mode of procedure in case of complaint, for the non or ill-performance of agricultural or other labour.

We therefore recommend the following Regulations to be added to those already laid down in this chapter.

First.—That the chief special justice should have general jurisdiction throughout the Colony.

Second.—That the assistant special justice should have the same authority throughout the Southern Division.

Third.—That the chief special justice should be bound to visit the police settlements as follows:—

Carenage, San Juan, and Tacarigua, at least once a month.

Mayaro, once in six months; and each settlement in the Southern Division once in six months.

That the assistant special justice should visit the settlements at Couva and South Naparima once every month, and Irois every two months.

Fourth.—That in their respective visits to the police settlements, it should be their duty to inspect the several journals and other books and papers belonging thereto, and to examine the police force, and to visit the houses of correction and the penal gang, and to ascertain whether the regulations of the police establishments are properly attended to and carried into effect.

That once in every six months the chief special justice should address a Report to the Governor on the state of the several police settlements, and the general working of the system, and therein specify the date of his several visits to the different police settlements since his last Report, and the result of his observations therein.

That the assistant special justice should make a similar Report to the chief special justice every three months.

That it be a misdemeanor for opposing the special justice, in discharge of his duty—penalty or imprisonment.

That at the end of each quarter, each special justice should transmit to the chief special justice a duplicate of his journal for the preceding quarter, with an affidavit thereto annexed (to be sworn before a magistrate) to the effect of section No. 6.

That the chief special justice should observe the same formalities as regards his own journal, and should transmit the whole number to the Governor.

That in all cases of complaints, for the non-performance or ill-performance of agricultural or other labour, they should be decided by the special justices on the spot in a summary manner, and that such decision should be immediately carried into effect.

That the complaint, decision, &c. should be entered in the journal of the special justice, in the same way as in other cases.

With respect to the penalties mentioned in the 18th and 19th sections, we beg leave to observe, that they are lower for the higher than the minor offences.

The 19th section subjects the apprenticed labourer to imprisonment for a month for a malicious complaint.

We respectfully submit, that the time thus lost to the master should be restored by the apprentice.

We crave reference to our observations on this subject in chapter 5th.

The draft states, that certain forms marked from A. to L. and M. respectively are annexed.

No such forms have accompanied the draft; but we presume they are prepared, and will be duly transmitted with the Order in Council.

With these suggestions, we recommend the adoption of chapter, No. 2.

Chapter III.

On the Division of Apprenticed Labourers into their respective Classes.

The Regulations proposed by His Majesty's Government under this head have been duly attended to, and, with a few trivial alterations, have been embodied into an Ordinance, which is herewith transmitted.

TRINIDAD.

Ordinance printed in the Appendix, No.

The object of this Ordinance, namely, the division of the apprenticed labourers into three classes, has been duly effected, the lists and affidavits required by the Ordinance having been duly delivered into the Registrar of Slave's Office.

These lists and affidavits amount in the whole to 1,945 returns, comprising all the slaves to be apprenticed.

It now remains with the Registrar to correct the lists, and to observe the various duties pointed out to him by the Ordinance.

Chapter IV.

On the Maintenance of the Apprenticed Labourers.

With reference to the details required to give effect to the object of this chapter, we request that they may be provided by the Secretary of State, with our recommendation that the apprentice shall be entitled to one-half acre of ground, with three hours per week to cultivate the same, and not to have salt fish or other provisions; or, half an acre of ground, with one hour and a half per week to cultivate the same, and three pounds of fish; and in case of not allowing either land or fish, the apprentice to be entitled to the quantity of provisions now allowed by law.

We also recommend that the employer shall have the liberty of allotting the time to be allowed to the apprentices for the cultivation of their grounds, either by any day or days in one week, or any number of days consecutively, at such period of the year as the employer may think proper, provided that not more than two consecutive days, or two days in one week be allotted for that purpose.

In adverting to the subject of the medical care of apprentices, we think it will be necessary that the employer should have the power of confining any apprentice in the hospital during the time he is under medical treatment, provided that this is recommended by the medical gentleman or the person in charge of the hospital.

Clothing as heretofore.

Chapter V.

On the Duties to be performed by the Apprenticed Labourers, and the Penalties for their non-performance.

We entirely concur in the justice of the principle laid down in this chapter, but are of opinion it may be carried into effect with more advantage to the interests of both the employer and the apprentice than has been therein suggested.

We respectfully submit that the wrong committed by the slave should in no case (in which the welfare of society does not demand it) prove a source of grievance or loss to the employer. The time of the apprentice, subject to certain limitations, is absolutely and bonâ fide the property of his employer. Every moment therefore abstracted from the time allotted to him by the Act of Parliament, whether by maronage, imprisonment, detention at the police establishment or otherwise, is so much positive and actual loss to the employer.

The object of this chapter is to punish the apprentice for his delinquencies; but if this proceeding involves an inconvenience or loss to the employer, the punishment of the apprentice, although an act of merited justice towards him, becomes one of unmerited hardship towards the employer.

To remedy so great a defect, we therefore recommend, that in every case in which the principle can be made applicable, whether the offence be comprehended under the character of desertion, vagabondage or maronage, that the special justices should have an accumulative power to sentence and compel the apprentice to work in the service of his employer, subject to the employer's consent, at the rate of 15 hours in every week, until the period of his sentence should expire. And in case an apprentice should refuse or neglect to labour, or should not undergo his sentence, that the special justice, upon due proof, should be authorized to sentence him to an extended period of hard labour on the settlement, and that the whole time lost to the master by reason of the apprentice not undergoing his first sentence, as well as the period of imprisonment for the second offence, should be made good to the employer by the apprentice, by extending the duration of his apprenticeship; and so toties quoties as he may repeat offences under similar circumstances.

These observations apply equally to sections 7, 8, 9, 10, 11 and 12.

We further recommend, that in all cases of conviction of female apprentices, solitary confinement should be substituted for the stocks; and in the event of any disturbance, breach of the peace, or other serious offence being committed on any estate, the employer to have the power of arresting and confining the offender in some place of confinement, previously to be approved of and set apart for such purpose by the special justice, where the offender is to be kept until taken before the special justice, which must be in 24 hours, unless a Sunday intervenes.

We recommend that a power should be given to the special justice, with the consent of the employer, to select out of the apprentices of good conduct and character one or more to act as constables on the estate.

The remaining clauses of this chapter approved.

Chapter VI.

On the Duties to be performed by the Employers towards their Apprenticed Labourers, and the Penalties for their non-performance.

The provisions made by His Majesty's Ministers under this head in the draft outline, seem to us generally well calculated to promote the objects of the Act of Parliament.

We

We perceive that the penalties for the non-performance of the several duties directed to be performed by this chapter, are made to fall only upon the employer.

We presume that it is the intention of His Majesty's Government, in the legislative enactments to be framed upon this draft, to extend those penalties to managers and all other persons in authority, over any apprenticed labourer.

This addition might, with great propriety, be made throughout the whole chapter, with the exception of that section which directs, that upon the conviction of any employer for cruelty, the labourer be discharged from his apprenticeship.

If it is intended that by reason of any cruelty inflicted on an apprentice by a manager, or other person in authority, over such apprentice, the employer or person beneficially entitled to the services of such apprentice, should be liable to be deprived of those services.

The unmerited injury that the malice of any manager might thus inflict upon his employer is so apparent, that we trust, that in the Order in Council to be framed, His Majesty's Ministers will shield the employer from the possible loss he might thus sustain from the revenge of a disappointed or malicious servant.

In addition to these remarks, we are of opinion that the provisions of the Order in Council of November 1831, regarding marriage and religious instruction, should, mutatis mutandis, form part of the new code.

We approve the other suggestions contained in this chapter.

Chapter VII.

On Offences which may be committed by the Apprenticed Labourer against the State, and the Punishment of such Offences.

The enactments proposed in this chapter will, we think, be sufficient to counteract the various dangers to which society will be exposed under the new relations about to be established.

We beg leave, however, to offer the following suggestions upon a few of its sections:

In section 3, the labourer is prohibited from residing beyond the limits of the district, in which he may be resident, unless either by the authority of his employer, or with the consent in writing of the special justice.

We do not consider that the special justice ought to have any power to interfere between employer and apprentice as to place of residence. The home of the employer (viz. his plantation), should be the residence of the apprentice.

We are therefore of opinion, and recommend that the word plantation should be substituted for district in this section, and that no interference should be permitted on the part of the special justice as to the place of residence of the apprentice.

In the next section, the apprentice is permitted to go beyond the limits of the district without a pass, provided he is on his way to or from market, or to or from some place of worship.

Unless this privilege be limited to market days, Sundays and festivals, we are of opinion that it may prove a source of continuous and unjust grievance to the employer, as the Protestant apprentices (particularly in the neighbourhood of town) might absent themselves from their labours on Wednesdays and Fridays in each week, and during the whole of Passion Week, on the pretext of going to church. Indeed the Roman Catholic, by far the most numerous class of apprentices, might urge this excuse daily.

We are therefore of opinion and recommend, that this privilege should be limited to Saturday (our established market day), and to Sundays and the four great festivals; viz. New Year's Day, Good Friday, Corpus Christi and Christmas Day.

In Trinidad, where Crown and other lands are so abundant, and the soil is so fertile, it becomes the especial duty of the Legislature to prevent apprentices from establishing themselves in distinct communities, by abstracting themselves from the ordinary services of their employers.

The inducements to the apprentice to withhold his services from his employers, whether arising from feelings of revenge, obstinacy, indolence or otherwise, are so manifold and manifest, that legislation cannot be too circumspectly or too strictly observed, upon a point of such vital importance to the well-being of our social system.

We would therefore suggest, that in cases such as are contemplated in sect. 6, that the habitations of the Maroons, and every description of cultivation, should be destroyed, and that if the Maroons should be found in arms and resisting the King's authority, that a severe and exemplary punishment should be provided.

In section 24, we do not consider alternative punishments equivalent.

We are of opinion that if the penalty be continued to fifty pounds (to which we do not object), that the imprisonment should be imprisonment not exceeding six months, and with or without hard labour.

We would also recommend that persons harbouring apprentices, or removing them from one district to another, without the consent in writing of the special justice or employer, should be liable to a penalty, to be recovered in a summary manner before any special justice, not exceeding twenty pounds sterling.

In concluding our remarks upon this chapter, we beg leave to observe, that in all cases of punishments to be awarded under the provisions of this order, we crave the attention of His Majesty's Ministers to our observations upon Chapter V.

TRINIDAD.

CHAPTER VIII.

On the Dissolution of the Apprenticeship by Contract or Appointment.

WE fully concur in the enactments proposed to be made by His Majesty's Government in this chapter.

CHAPTER IX.

On the Removal of prædial Apprenticed Labourers from one Plantation to another.

THESE enactments claim our fullest approbation.

CHAPTER X.

On the Apprenticeship of Children.

WE also approve of the enactments proposed in this chapter.

CHAPTER XI.

On the Alienation of Sale, Inheritance or Will of the Services of Apprenticed Labourers.

WE concur in the suggestions contained in this chapter.

CHAPTER XII.

On the Relation in which the Apprenticed Labourers will stand towards the State.

WE concur generally in the correctness of the observations made upon this chapter.

We beg leave, however, to recommend, that the apprentices should not be allowed to own, hold or retain fire-arms, or military weapons of any kind, or gunpowder or other ammunition, unless with the permission of the employer or the special justice; and that all such articles may be seized by the special justice or employer, where such permission shall not have been given. And also that apprentices may be capable of being appointed and of serving as constables, as recommended in Chapter V.

This document is respectfully submitted to the Right honourable E. G. Stanley, His Majesty's Secretary of State for the Colonies, by the Lieutenant-Governor of Trinidad, and the Council of Government, as their unanimous Report upon the important measures submitted to them for consideration.

COPY of a DESPATCH from Mr. Secretary Stanley to Lieutenant-Governor Sir G. F. Hill, Bart.

Sir, Downing-street, 24th May 1834.

I HAVE received your Despatch of the 6th April, enclosing the Report of the Council of Government, on the Model Draft transmitted to you with my Despatch of the 19th of October.

Having deferred the preparation of the Order in Council for the Colony of Trinidad, in the expectation of receiving this Report, I shall only be able to complete that instrument in time to forward it to you by the ensuing packet. I feel it due to the Council of Government to apprize you to what extent I have felt myself justified in acquiescing in the suggestions which are thrown out in the Report; and I am the more willing to adopt this course, as it will afford to the Council and yourself, an earlier opportunity of considering and commencing the necessary preliminary measures.

The interleaved copy of the Model Draft which accompanies this Despatch, will place you in possession of the modifications which in compliance with the Report I am prepared to recommend to be introduced into the Order in Council.

You will perceive that the intended alterations in the first chapter will admit of your establishing district divisions and police settlements in the manner proposed in the Report.

As far as the imperfections of the maps with which I am supplied enable me to judge, these divisions appear to be judiciously arranged and to meet the peculiar local difficulties of the Colony.

The

The Eastern District contains so small a number of apprentices, and those so widely separated, that I am disposed to think it advisable that this district should be confided to such voluntary special justices as you may be enabled to select, subject to visitation and inspection by one or more of the stipendiary justices.

With a view to enable you to confine the police settlement of this district within the narrowest limits, I have reduced the minimum number of policemen at each settlement, from ten to five, but this reduction will, of course, not prevent you from fixing upon a larger number for that or any other police settlement.

The Report strongly urges the appointment of a chief special magistrate for the Northern Division of the Colony, comprising the first three districts; and an inspector or deputy, for the Southern Division, comprising the two other districts. If, upon further consideration, the Council of Government should remain of this opinion, I am disposed to acquiesce in the arrangement: and with this view I have proposed to introduce into chapter 2, clauses which will admit of that object being accomplished.

If this plan should ultimately be decided on, it will be necessary for you to select for these offices, two of the stipendiary magistrates; and as they will be subject to a greater degree of responsibility, and possibly of labour, than would result from their ordinary duties, I shall not object to their receiving from the revenues of the Colony a moderate remuneration, not to exceed 200 l. sterling for the chief special magistrate, and 150 l. for the assistant, in addition to the discharge of the extra expenses which may thus be incurred by them. These salaries must however be granted to them, and to their successors, in case of vacancy, for the whole duration of the apprenticeship.

The Report notices an inconsistency in the penalties mentioned in the 18th and 19th sections of the second chapter. This accidental error I have corrected; and in both sections I propose to empower the special justice to adjudge corporal punishment, in order that the employer may not unnecessarily be deprived of the labour of his apprentice.

The forms referred to in the Model Draft will be transmitted with the Order in Council.

As regards chapter 10 which is to comprize the regulations for the maintenance of the apprenticed labourer, I have to make the following observations.

The Order in Council of 2d November 1831 established in Trinidad allowances of food, &c. taken from the jail allowances, settled by an Act of the Jamaica Legislature. By the order of the 6th November 1832 the Governor was authorized to substitute for that scale, any other which might be better adapted to the state of the Colony. Sir Lewis Grant accordingly issued a proclamation on the subject, dated 5th January 1833, establishing a new scale of allowances. These were in force in the Colony, and had the authority of law there, on the 28th of August last, when the Slavery Abolition Act was passed. By the 11th section of that Act, the employer of every labourer was required to supply him with such food, clothing and other allowances "as by any law now in force in the Colony to which such apprenticed labourer may belong, an owner is required to supply to and for any slave, being of the same age and sex as such apprenticed labourers shall be." I think it clear therefore that Sir Lewis Grant's scale of food must, during the apprenticeship, continue in force in Trinidad. Upon the subject of these allowances therefore it appears to me, that neither the local Legislature of Trinidad, nor His Majesty's Government have the power, even if it were desirable to exercise it, of diminishing the food and other allowances to which the slave was entitled, under the combined effect of the Orders in Council of November 1831 and November 1832, and the proclamation to which I have adverted.

As respects those prædial apprenticed labourers who may be maintained by provision grounds, I propose that they should be allowed for their cultivation, 26 days of nine hours each, out of the annual time, after the rate of 45 hours per week, during which they are bound by the Act for the Abolition of Slavery to work for their employers. The rules as to the apportionment of this time, I shall leave to the discretion of the Lieutenant-Governor and Council of Government.

As regards non-prædial apprenticed labourers, it is intended that they should, in all cases, be supported by an allowance of provisions.

Upon this part of the subject, the Report suggests that the employer should have the power of confining any apprentice in the hospital during the time he is under medical treatment, provided that this is recommended by the medical gentleman or person in charge of the hospital. I am disposed to approve of this suggestion, which I observe has also occurred to the Legislature of British Guiana.

TRINIDAD.

Upon the 5th chapter, the Council urge very forcibly the loss which the employer will sustain by the imprisonment of the apprentice; and it is suggested that the time of which the employer will thus be deprived, should be made good by a prolongation of the apprenticeship. It is evident however that such prolongation cannot lawfully be enacted by the local Legislature to which the Slavery Abolition Act applies, except in the particular case mentioned in section 20 of that Act.

The appointment of apprentices as constables, suggested by the Council, will be provided for by the additional clause to that effect, introduced into chapter 1. These constables, however, must, in the performance of their duties, act under the direction of the special justice, and not under that of the proprietor.

As respects chapter 6, you will perceive that by a very slight verbal alteration of the 13th and 14th clauses of that chapter, the observations which the Council have made upon the necessity of distinguishing the manager from the employer, in cases of cruelty, have been attended to.

In reference to this chapter, the Council propose that the provisions of the Order in Council of November 1831 regarding marriage and religious instruction, should, mutâtis mutandis, form part of the new code. It appears to me, however, that as the apprenticed labourer will have all the rights of a free person, subject only to the obligations incidental to apprenticeship, it is unnecessary to legislate specially for them on these points.

The additional restrictions which the Council in their observations on chapter 7 suggest, as proper to be imposed upon the apprenticed labourers, demand the following remarks:

The Council propose to authorize the apprentices to exercise the right of attending public worship only on Sundays, and on four specified festivals. It is to be remembered however, that in many societies of christians dissenting from the Church of England, it is required by the established discipline or practice, that their members should meet together for devotional exercises on the week-days. To interdict such observances to those who might wish to follow them, would, I think, be at variance with the policy and principles by which Parliament was guided in passing the Slavery Abolition Act.

The Council moreover propose to permit the apprenticed labourer to exercise the right of attending markets on Saturdays only. So far from approving this additional restriction, I have, upon more mature consideration, arrived at the conviction that the provision, even as originally framed, requires to be modified so as to afford the prædial apprenticed labourer a greater degree of liberty during those hours which are not to be devoted to his employer, and with this view I have proposed a considerable alteration in clause 4, chapter 7.

Whilst upon this branch of the subject, I must observe that I feel justified in adopting the views of the Council so far as to oblige prædial apprenticed labourers to reside upon the plantations to which they belong.

Having regard, on the one hand, to the importance of fixing the negro to a specified domicile, during the apprenticeship, and, on the other hand, to the provisions in the Slavery Abolition Act requiring the employer to supply the apprenticed labourer with lodging, medical attendance, and with provision grounds within a limited distance of such lodgings, I am satisfied that this restriction is expedient, and that it is not inconsistent with the intentions of Parliament.

Having thus noticed all the principal points contained in your Report, I wish to call your attention to the proposed modifications in chapter 1 and chapter 5 of the Model Draft, by which many of the details of this important measure are left to the decision of the Council of Government and yourself.

I feel justified in adopting this course, not only on account of the almost insuperable difficulty of definitively settling such details, without being actually on the spot, but also because I am satisfied that the Council of Government, and its individual members (amongst whom I must not omit to include Mr. Burnley) are prepared to address themselves to the consideration of these subjects, with a full sense of their importance, in a spirit of justice towards the apprenticed labourers, and with a sincere desire to carry into execution the measures incidental to the Abolition of Slavery, in the manner most likely to ensure the general prosperity of the community of Trinidad.

TO guard against a strike from work by the negroes on the 1st of August, which has been apprehended on many estates, I have deemed it expedient to explain by proclamation in English, French and Spanish, somewhat in detail, their duties and their employers' duties respectively towards each other; in truth, what was then to be their real situation.

I enclose copies of those documents, together with a copy of the letter of instruction to the commandants, to whom they were transmitted. No. 1.

Considering the moment to be propitious to invite the numerous runaways to return to their duty, I proposed to the Council of Government to pass an ordinance to secure from punishment those who might voluntarily surrender themselves. That measure has been adopted, and I have the honour to enclose the ordinance passed to give it effect for His Majesty's approval. No. 2.

A PROCLAMATION.

HIS Majesty the King, the Lords and the Commons, in the British Parliament assembled, have determined that slavery shall be abolished throughout the British Colonies, on, from and after the 1st of August 1834.

Those who are in the state of slavery must in the mean time distinctly understand, and by careful explanation be made to know, that the abolition of slavery does not discharge them from all kind of labour, or from the performance of work and duties to those who are to be their employers, and that they are not to quit the estates of their present masters, who are to become their employers, without permission, except to go to church or market as by law allowed.

To prevent ignorance or misapprehension of the new state in which the slaves are soon to be placed, and the evil consequences that might arise therefrom, it is necessary, in justice to themselves, that they should be accurately informed of the terms and conditions of the law by which the King and his Parliament have abolished slavery.

Therefore be it known, That on and after the 1st of August 1834, all those who now are in a state of slavery are to become and be called Apprenticed Labourers, with the following rights and privileges secured to them.

Those who have been heretofore slaves for life, usually employed in agriculture or in the manufacture of colonial produce, or otherwise upon lands and registered as prædial apprentices, are to serve their employers six years as apprentices, and then to be entirely free. During these six years, however, they are only to work 45 hours in each week for their employers, with food, clothing, medicine and hospital care as heretofore.

TRINIDAD.

If the employers require their apprentices to work during more hours than are herein specified, they must pay them for it upon bargain to be made. The extra hours beyond 45 in the week belong to the apprentices, which they may employ for their own benefit and profit.

The apprentices are not to be punished by their employers or managers, nor otherwise than by the decision of magistrates whom the King has ordered the Governor to commission, and some of whom His Majesty has sent here expressly from England to reside in the different districts of this Colony, with full authority and power to make the employers do justice to the apprentices, and to make the apprentices perform their work and duty to their employers.

These magistrates will hear all complaints of employers against apprentices, and of apprentices against employers; and these magistrates have alone the authority to punish. They will explain and secure to the apprentices all the rights, privileges and advantages the law has provided for them; and under the power and protection of the Governor and those magistrates, the apprentices may, by quiet and obedient conduct, ensure to themselves an easy and a happy time. But since His Majesty has been so indulgent to those who were until now slaves for life, he justly expects good conduct, submission and contentment from them as apprentices; and although he has appointed special magistrates on purpose to protect the apprentices, yet these magistrates are at the same time ordered to do justice to the employers, and in particular to punish those apprentices who neglect or imperfectly perform their work, who are guilty of insolence or insubordination, or who quit or run away from the service of their employers.

Those slaves, such as domestics, who have not before the 28th of August 1832, worked in the field or on lands or estates, are called non-prædial, and are to serve their employers as at present required, for only four years from the 1st of August 1834.

All children who shall be on the 1st of August 1834, under six years of age, shall be absolutely and entirely free; and those also who shall be born after that day, to be maintained at the expense of their parents, or to be apprenticed in case of inability on the part of the parents to support them; and measures are to be adopted to afford sufficient instruction to all those whose condition is thus to be changed, to fitly qualify them for the enjoyment of it.

Having thus described and proclaimed what is to be the improved situation of those who are to become apprenticed labourers compared with their former state of slavery, it now only remains to exhort them in the name of their King, and in the words of His Royal Proclamation given out in this Colony on the 11th of October last, to yield due obedience to this law, for His Majesty doth make known and declare his settled purpose and resolve to enforce obedience thereto by all the powers and authority in him vested, and to prevent, and if necessary to repress and punish all contraventions of the said law.

Given under my hand and the great seal of the Island, at Government-House, in the Town of Port of Spain, this 11th day of July 1834.

Sir, Government House, 12th July 1834.

I HAVE deemed it important to explain by proclamation to the slave population, the nature of the new state in which they will be placed on the 1st of August next, as contrasted with what has been their state of slavery.

I send you copies of my proclamation in English, French and Spanish. I most urgently request you to have the particulars of this proclamation explained and made known to every slave within your quarter. Let owners or managers have copies, and let due care be taken to divest the minds of the slaves from any erroneous impressions or misapprehension of the operation of the Abolition Slavery Act they may have imbibed.

AN ORDINANCE enacted by the Lieutenant-Governor of Trinidad, with the advice and consent of the Council of Government thereof, to induce Runaway Slaves to return to their Owners or Employers on or before the 31st day of July instant, and to relieve them from punishment.

WHEREAS there are many runaway slaves who are now absent from the service of their masters; and, for the purpose of inducing such runaway slaves to return to their masters, it is expedient that all such runaways who may voluntarily return to the service of their respective masters before the 1st day of August next, should be relieved and discharged from all punishment for or on account of their having so absented themselves as aforesaid:

Now, therefore, be it enacted by his Excellency the Right honourable Sir George Fitzgerald Hill, baronet, colonel of the Londonderry regiment of militia, Lieutenant-Governor and Commander-in-Chief in and over the said Island and its dependencies, by and with the advice advice and consent of the Council of Government thereof, and by the authority of the same, That from and after the promulgation of this ordinance, it shall not be lawful for any master or employer or other person having authority over any slave in this Colony who is now a runaway or absent from the service of his or her master or employer or other person having authority over him or her, to inflict any punishment on such slave by reason of, or by way of punishment for such his or her running away or absence from the service of his or her master or employer or other person aforesaid: Provided such slave shall, of his or her own free will and without compulsion, return to the estate or plantation to which he or she may belong, or to the house or residence of such his or her master, employer or other person aforesaid, and shall deliver himself or herself up, and place himself or herself under the direction or control of such his or her master or employer or other person having authority over him or her as aforesaid, at any time on or before the 31st day of July now instant.

A PROCLAMATION.

WHEREAS it hath been represented to me that some of the slaves of this Island have absconded from their master's service, and are now idling through the country:

And whereas His Majesty has been graciously pleased to declare by and with the advice and consent of Parliament, that slavery shall cease and determine on the 1st of August next, and that all those who are now slaves should on and after that day become apprenticed labourers for a limited period, with advantages not heretofore enjoyed by slaves:

And whereas many of such runaway slaves may be desirous of returning to their duty, and availing themselves of the advantages thus offered, but may be deterred from so doing by fear of punishment:

Now therefore, I the said Lieutenant-Governor do hereby proclaim, promise and declare, That all those runaway slaves who shall present themselves at the Protector's Office, Government House, shall receive a free pardon and a pass to return to their respective masters, or who shall return direct to their respective masters without coming to Government House, before the 1st of August next, shall be pardoned for having so absconded, and shall not receive any punishment whatever on account thereof.

And whereas it has been reported to me that many runaway slaves have been encouraged to quit their masters' service, and are harboured and employed in various districts of this Colony; Be it therefore known, That any person who shall after this Proclamation harbour, conceal or employ any runaway slave, such person shall most assuredly be prosecuted with the utmost rigour of the law. And I do hereby promise a suitable reward for such information as shall lead to the detection and conviction of any such offender.

Sir, Trinidad, 20th July 1834.

I HAVE had the honour to receive through Mr. Lefevre, some copies of the Order of His Majesty in Council of 5th June 1834, for carrying into effect the Act for the Abolition of Slavery.

I am now engaged with the Council of Government in making the necessary preparations for giving effect to the details of that Order in Council, so far as their co-operation is required.

I have to regret the non-arrival up to the present moment of any of the special justices.

There is an indispensable necessity to secure the due execution of the Act for the Abolition of Slavery and of the Order in Council of the 5th of June, which could not be effected but under the authority of special justices, who ought to be located in their respective districts before the 1st of August, on which day their jurisdiction commences operation. I have therefore consulted with the Council of Government as to the steps I ought to take, and in pursuance of the advice of that board, it is my intention to appoint a large number of unpaid special justices, under the 14th clause of the Act for the Abolition of Slavery.

In addition to the present commandants of quarters and their adjoints, I shall select the most respectable persons in the several quarters for this commission.

I trust that these appointments to carry the new system into effect will not dissatisfy the negroes, but the arrival of the magistrates from home, should they yet arrive in time to superintend its commencement, will be of the greatest importance, as I shall have infinite difficulty in accounting to the negroes for the absence of the officers whom they have been taught to expect would be sent from England by His Majesty expressly to see justice done.

Sir, Trinidad, 24 July 1834.

THE special justices for carrying into effect the provisions of the Act for the Abolition of Slavery, and Order in Council of 5 June 1834, not having arrived at this Colony, I have made the best arrangements that my judgment suggested to me for carrying those enactments into effect, without the immediate aid of the special justices from home.

In the report of the Governor and Council of Government upon the model Guiana ordinance, transmitted in my Despatch of 6th April, it was recommended that Trinidad should be divided into five districts, and that there should be nine police stations, with one special justice at each station.

Upon re-consideration, however, it has been deemed essentially necessary to divide the Island into nine districts, which has accordingly been done by proclamation, of which I have the honour to inclose a copy.

In each of the eight country districts I have selected the most respectable inhabitants residing in a central situation, to be the acting superintendent special justice until the arrival of the functionaries from England. Under these eight gentlemen I have appointed 92 special justices.

One other acting superintendent special justice and a due proportion of special justices have been appointed for the Port of Spain district.

This large number of special justices is required on account of the extent of the Island, and the necessity of dividing the duty as much as possible, so that no gentleman should be called upon for an unreasonable sacrifice of the time usually devoted to his own avocations.

I transmit a copy of the letter of instruction addressed to the acting superintending special justices, to the special justices and to commandants of quarters.

The form of commission adopted was that of which I had the honour to transmit a copy in my Despatch of the 20th instant.

You shall have a detailed report by the next packet of all proceedings here at this important crisis.

A PROCLAMATION.

WHEREAS by the Order of His Majesty in Council, bearing date the 5th day of June, 1834, it is amongst other things provided, that the Colony of Trinidad should be divided into judicial districts, and that the Lieutenant-Governor should by proclamation define the limits of such districts: Now, therefore, I do hereby order and proclaim as follows; that is to say, That for the purposes of the said Order of His Majesty in Council, the Island of Trinidad shall be divided into nine judicial districts:

That the first district shall be called the Port of Spain District, and shall comprise the town of Port of Spain, and the quarters of St. Ann's, Maraval, Mucurapo, and Tragarete:

That the second district shall be called the Western District, and comprise the quarters of Diego Martin, Carenage, and Cuesa, Chaguaramas and Bocas:

That the third district shall be called the St. Joseph's District, and comprise the quarters of La Ventille, Cimaronero, Aricagua, the town of San Juan, the quarters of Santa Cruz, Las Cuevas and Maracas, Maracas Valley, St. Joseph, and the town of St. Joseph:

That the fourth district shall be called the Tacarigua District, and shall comprise the quarters of Caroni, Tacarigua, and Arauca, Guanapo, Oropouche and Aripo:

That the fifth district shall be called the Eastern District, and comprise the quarters of Eastern Coast, Toco, Mayaro and Guayaguayare:

That the sixth district shall be called the Carapachaima District, and comprise the quarters of Chaguanas, Carapachaima, Savanetta:

That the seventh district shall be called the District of North Naparima, and comprise the quarters of Point-à-Pierre, North Naparima, Savana Grande, the town of San Fernando, and the quarter of Moruga:

That the eighth district shall be called the South Naparima District, and comprise the quarters of South Naparima and Oropuche:

That the ninth district shall be called the Southern District, and comprise the quarters of La Brea, Guapo, Irois, Cedros, Hicacos and Erin.

No. 2.

Sir, Colonial Secretary's Office, 22 July 1834.

I AM directed by his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor to forward to you your commission as acting superintending special justice of the —— district; at the same time I also enclose a copy of his Excellency's proclamation, dated this day, from which you will learn the limits of the district placed under your superintendence, and a copy of the Order in Council of the 5th of June 1834, by which you will be apprized of the general nature of the duties of the office to which you have been appointed.

His Excellency has also directed me to forward to you the commissions of the several special justices who have been appointed in your district, and the letter of instructions to them, a copy of which you will also find enclosed. It is his Excellency's desire that you should forthwith deliver these commissions to the several special justices, at the same time administering to them the oath, of which a form is also forwarded.

A letter has been addressed by his Excellency's directions, to the several commandants of the quarters comprised in the district placed under your superintendence, of which a copy is herewith enclosed. It is his Excellency's request and direction, that you will proceed to swear in as constables as many of the persons mentionsd in the lists, which will be furnished to you by the commandants as you may think necessary and proper to enable the special justices to carry into effect the laws respecting apprenticed labourers, with a due regard to the peace and tranquillity of the community.

The form of oath to be administered to them will be in the form herewith enclosed.

You are also requested to cause proper information to be given you respecting the places of confinement now existing within the district placed under your superintendence, and to license such places of safe custody and correction, situated at convenient distances therein as you may think needful, observing that no such license is to be given without a medical certificate of its being a proper and wholesome place for the purpose required.

To acting superintending Special Justice for ——— District.

Sir, Colonial Secretary's Office, 22 July 1834.

I am directed by his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor to request that you will, without delay, make out a list of every individual in the quarter of —— who may be fit and competent to perform the duties of constables, after the 1st of August, and to include therein such of the slaves who will on that day become apprentices, as may be specially recommended by their employers as intelligent and trustworthy subjects, likely to render themselves useful in that capacity. And his Excellency has further directed me to request that this list may be forwarded, as speedily as possible, to Mr. —— who has been appointed by his Excellency, the acting superintendent special justice in the —— district, in which the quarter of —— is comprised.

You will be pleased to understand that the appointment of these constables is not intended to supersede the regular police force to be appointed by his Excellency, but that their duty will be to obey the orders of the special justices (who are to carry the provisions of the Order in Council relating to apprenticed labourers into effect,) in the neighbourhood of the several estates in which these constables may be resident.

Copy of a DESPATCH from Mr. Secretary Spring Rice to Lieutenant-Governor Sir G. F. Hill, Bart.

Sir, Downing-street, 5 Sept. 1834.

I have had under my consideration your Letter of the 24th of July last, addressed to Mr. Lefevre, and your Despatch of the 20th of July, and I feel every disposition to place confidence in the arrangements which your local knowledge has induced you to make, for carrying into effect the provisions of the Act for the Abolition of Slavery, in consequence of the stipendiary magistrates not having arrived in the Colony.

I trust that proper care has been taken in the selection of the 92 magistrates who have been appointed to perform their duties in their absence, as well as in the superintendence to be exercised by yourself over their proceedings, to prevent any evil effects arising from local bias or personal interest.

As the whole number of special magistrates for Trinidad have been some time since appointed, I trust that they will have arrived and entered on their duties shortly after the date of your Despatch.

Copy of a DESPATCH from Lieutenant-Governor Sir George F. Hill, Bart., to Mr. Secretary Spring Rice.

Sir, Trinidad, 7 August 1834.

I avail myself of the opportunity afforded this day by the departure for England of a merchant ship, to report to you the occurrences that have taken place in this Colony since the 1st of August.

A strike from work on many of the estates having been expected, I issued a proclamation on the 11th July, explaining to the apprentices the principal features of the the change that was about to be made in their condition, of which proclamation I had the honour to transmit copies to you in my Despatch of the 20th ultimo.

Shortly after the promulgation of that proclamation, I visited in person that part of the Island where the apprentices are most numerous; and I made similar explanations to them in person, as reported in my Despatch of the 30th ultimo.

From the spirit of discontent which I then witnessed, I saw that it was necessary to take every precaution for preserving the peace of the country; and I did so by completing the equipment in arms and accoutrements of the country militia, and where there was no militia, by distributing arms to the respectable and well-disposed inhabitants.

Up to the 31st of July, the apprentices universally remained steady at their work; but large bodies of them left the estates on the night of that day, and flocked into town, when they repaired to Government House, and awaited my arrival in the morning.

I lost no time in meeting them at Government House, and summoned Mr. M'Kenzie and Captain Hay (the latter of whom had that moment arrived from England); and after presenting these gentlemen to the apprentices as being sent by His Majesty to superintend the execution of the law, I again explained to them in minute detail the nature of their actual situation, and exhorted them to return to their respective properties.

The two special justices referred to, then addressed them to the same effect, but they one and all refused positively to return to their work.

The whole day having thus been spent in explanation and exhortation, and night being near at hand, the special justices next notified the crowd that they were required to disperse; but the signal directed by the Order in Council of the 5th June 1834, cap. 7, sec. 1, having been made, and not the slightest attention paid to it, the police proceeded to take some of the most prominent characters into custody, and they were committed to prison.

From the large numbers who remained in the town, which numbers were constantly increasing by fresh arrivals from the country, it was thought prudent to establish strong guards of the militia in several parts of it.

The night passed off quietly; but on the following day hundreds of apprentices again assembled before Government House.

The justices proceeded in the trial of those who had been apprehended the preceding day, and the police continued to arrest the most turbulent and noisy of those who continued to congregate in the streets; but as these proceedings did not appear to produce the slightest effect, and the day being again nearly spent, the justices displayed the signal, and required the crowd to disperse, but without any attention being paid to them.

The militia were directed to clear the streets, which was effected without accident.

The inhabitants becoming alarmed at the determination evinced by the apprentices, and the total disregard by them of the requisitions and exhortations of the constituted authorities, sent numerous and respectable deputations to me, imploring that martial law might be proclaimed, as the only means of ensuring the security of life and property, and of compelling the apprentices to return to their duty.

I assembled the Council of Government, laid before them the state of the country, and the applications made to me for the proclamation of martial law. I found several of the members deeply impressed with the absolute necessity of resorting to that measure: others were opposed to it; and having announced my own determination under no present circumstances to have recourse to it, the Board were unanimous in the necessity of applying to the commander of the forces at Barbadoes for a reinforcement to the garrison of 200 men, and to the senior naval officer for a vessel of war.

It was also deemed to be a necessary example, that some of the most refractory apprentices who had persevered in exhibiting themselves prominently in the tumultuous assemblages, and had been sentenced by the special justices to corporal punishment, should receive it in the most public manner; in consequence, on Tuesday, the 5th instant, twenty-three apprentices received from fifteen to thirty-nine stripes each in the public square.

This measure produced an immediate effect. The apprentices dispersed, and many of them returned to the estates; and although several gangs subsequently came into town, they immediately returned.

By the exertions of the special justices in the country, who had been appointed by me in the absence of the special justices from England, order has been partially restored in many of the districts; but several were, by the last accounts received, still in a state of considerable insubordination; and although I not only hope, but feel confident, that by steady perseverance the law will be found sufficient to restore order, it is very perceptible that the negroes are sullen and discontented, and have only returned to their work because they have found that they would be compelled to do so.

They say they cannot comprehend that the King would call them "free," and yet compel them to work for any portion of time for their former owners; that they require no "apprenticeship," knowing their business perfectly at present; that if the King only intended to make them free at the expiration of six years, he would have done much better to have said nothing about it until the expiration of that time, and then to have declared them free at once.

They observed, that the slaves who had been condemned by the Court of Vice-Admiralty, and who were not such good subjects as themselves, were freed unconditionally; and they also pointed out that the gang of Government negroes had received a similar boon, and they could not comprehend why they were not to enjoy a like advantage.

It is evident from all this that mischievous agency has been employed. These arguments are used by the negroes in all parts of the Island, although there is but little communication between different districts of it.

The utmost pains have been taken to explain the several circumstances which they adduce in favour of their right or expectation of immediate freedom, and to remove from their minds the error under which they labour.

In the formation of the police, to aid the special justices, I have employed a considerable number of the disbanded men of the 3d West India regiment.

Captain Hay and Mr. M'Kenzie are the only special justices who have arrived from England.

The vessel which is to convey this Despatch is under weigh; I must therefore apologize for the haste in which it is written.

I have, &c.

EXTRACT of a DESPATCH from Mr. Secretary Spring Rice to Lieut.-Governor Sir G. F. Hill, Bart., dated Downing-street, 30th September 1834.

I HAVE received your Despatch of the 7th of August, giving an account of the events which have occurred in Trinidad subsequent to the 1st of that month.

I have laid your Despatch before the King, and am honoured by His Majesty's command to convey to you His Majesty's entire approval of the firm yet prudent course you have pursued in the exigency of affairs which has arisen within your government. The precautionary measures adopted under your authority have been such as the nature of the case pointed out as being the most expedient; and whilst His Majesty deeply regrets that any symptoms of insubordination and refusals to work should have manifested themselves, it is satisfactory to His Majesty to perceive that the decisive steps taken by you to enforce the law, to repress tumultuary meetings, and to punish delinquents, have been met by submission and obedience.

His Majesty also is pleased to approve of your conduct with respect to the applications made to you to proclaim martial law. At the period when that application was made, it does not appear that any acts of open violence had been committed; and whilst His Majesty is confident that you will not shrink from applying the most vigorous means for enforcing obedience to the laws, and defending the lives and properties of His Majesty's subjects if endangered, yet it is right that the resort to so extreme a remedy should be reserved for cases in which the necessity of such a measure is unquestionable.

Sir, Trinidad, 14th August 1834.

I HAVE the satisfaction to report that the apprentices throughout the Island with very few exceptions have returned to their work.

I feel assured that the civil power will be sufficient to preserve order.

I cannot avoid congratulating myself that I resisted the reiterated solicitations to proclaim martial law; a measure for the operation of which no defined provision is made or in reality comprehended. I am quite persuaded that scenes greatly to be deplored would have been the consequence of my compliance.

In dispensing with the permanent duty of the first division of the militia at their last parade, I addressed them in terms of approbation which they have well merited, of which I enclose a copy.

To guard against the events to be apprehended on and after the 1st of August in the most populous part of the Island, and with which at this season there is no communication from Port of Spain, but by water, I strengthened the important post of San Fernando, and with the consent of Lieutenant-Colonel Hardy, who commands the 19th regiment and the troops, I appointed Captain Burns of that regiment to be the superintending justice of that district, with a local commission of colonel, to give him rank and command over the officers of the country militia.

I now testify to you with pleasure and confidence the activity and judgment which he displayed in the North Naparima, South Naparima and the southern districts during the first days of this month, have contributed mainly to the speedy suppression of disorder in that extensive and important part of this Colony.

With a view to ensure to the apprentices throughout the Island the benefit of the superintendence of the two stipendiary justices who have arrived, I have divided the Colony into two grand divisions, and have issued a commission to Captain Hay, appointing him chief superintending special justice for the purposes expressed in the 26th clause of the 2d chapter of the Order of His Majesty in Council of 5th June 1834, over districts comprising about one-half of the Island, those districts and his duties being described in his commission; and I have issued a similar commission to Mr. M'Kenzie for the other half.

With these and other arrangements I do not feel any apprehension of effectually carrying into execution the laws and regulations applicable to the employers and their apprentices until the other special justices should arrive.

Adjutant-General's Office, 11th August 1834.

Enclosure in No. 305.

His Excellency the Right honourable Sir George Hill, Baronet, Governor and Commander-in-Chief, after having reviewed the First Division of Militia Forces yesterday, in Marine-square, addressed them as follows:—

Officers, Non-commissioned Officers and Privates of the Cavalry, Artillery, Royals and Loyals,

I address you on this occasion with pleasure and with pride.

This gratifying field display of militia force naturally impels me, although briefly, to contrast its present state with that in which I found it when I assumed the Government of this beautiful and interesting Island.

I made early inquiry, after my arrival, into the organization, discipline, and esprit du corps existing amongst the several militia regiments, which proved such relaxation to be found in these particulars as to require immediate remedy, and that this constitutional defence and necessary arm of authority should be restored to its former efficiency. I sought and happily acquired the confidence of many of the officers, and soon learnt that no want of loyalty to the King, or zeal for the interest of the country, or of a gallant spirit to defend both, had produced this regretted alteration in the militia.

Measures were successfully taken to remove erroneous impressions insidiously made, and jealousies mischievously excited, which, with conciliatory explanation and advice carefully given, have restored harmony and confidence, and produced this united phalanx of all castes, colours, and classes, in friendly and determined co-operation to secure the peace and defend the law of the land.

Diligent parades were resumed, and discipline gradually restored, when a crisis arrived to try the efficiency of these regiments I have now the honour to address, and the sincerity of that kind feeling and mutual respect with which all classes had professed to intermix in the service of their king and country.

Towards and during the first days of this month the tranquillity of the Colony was threatened and alarm generally excited.

I was urged and strongly pressed to supersede the civil and resort to martial law. I answered "No; I have ordered out the militia; they have with alacrity obeyed the call, and by them I will preserve the authority of the civil magistrates and secure the peace."

My friends, you have enabled me to fulfil that engagement. Your guards, picquets, and patroles, with all their attendant duties, have been zealously performed, but with due obedience to command and friendly co-operation with each other.

Your firm appearance, your soldier-like deportment, gave assurance of security to every family in this metropolis of the Colony, and have fixed dismay deep in the heart of every seditious agitator, of whom I hope, nay I believe, there are not many; but if they were tenfold in number, you have annihilated their power of doing mischief.

I delight further in stating, that not an act of insubordination or irregularity deserving even a reprimand has been reported to me.

In the name of your Sovereign and of your country, I return you thanks for valuable ervices so admirably well performed.

For myself personally, I assure you of my sincere gratitude. The cheerfulness with which you have attended to all my orders since I have had the honour of governing in this Colony has induced me to believe I possess your esteem and confidence.

I now offer to Colonel Bland, individually, the expression of my warm approbation of his conduct, and of the high estimation in which I hold the service he has rendered as commandant during the absence of General Peschier, who had been ordered to Carapichaima on special duty.

I shall for the present dispense with your permanent duty, and direct that you may recur to your monthly parades.

By command,

Henry Graham, Col., Dep. Adjt. Gen.

Sir, Downing-street, 8th October 1834.

I have received your Despatch of the 14th of August, and have submitted it to the King.

I am commanded by His Majesty to repeat to you his entire approbation of the firm and judicious course which you have pursued under circumstances of a very trying kind.

Cases too frequently arise in public affairs, in which measures prepared with care and prudence, may, from unexpected and disturbing causes, fail in their practical results, and may disappoint the full expectations of those who framed them. But in the mode in which you have acted in respect to the negro population of Trinidad

His

His Majesty is gratified to perceive that you have acted on sound principles, and that your measures appear to have been attended with the utmost success.

To adopt the extreme remedies of coercion, and punishment in every state of things short of an extreme case of violence and of crime, is no less reprehensible than it is dangerous. A government in thus misapplying the means at its command, by such ill-judged anticipation, deprives those ultimate powers and sanctions of their full force and authority, when their application becomes absolutely necessary. Your wise reluctance to proclaim martial law on the late occasion cannot lead to the inference that you would hesitate in resorting to the strongest measures, if property and life were really endangered; a contingency, however, which from your report of the state of Trinidad, His Majesty sees no reason to apprehend.

His Majesty has felt further gratification in being informed that the conduct of the militia of the Island has given you satisfaction; and I have received His Majesty's gracious commands to direct you to communicate His approval to the officers and men of that corps. You will not fail to persevere in those praiseworthy exertions which His Majesty has already had occasion to notice, by which the militia of Trinidad has been improved in discipline and in efficiency.

The arrangements made by you with respect to the military and magisterial authorities, appear to His Majesty to have been judicious and practical, and are such as to meet His Majesty's approbation. His Majesty commands me further to state, that he relies upon the exertions of all classes of his subjects in Trinidad, for the purpose of carrying into full effect the laws now in force, in respect to the apprenticed labourers. To make those laws effectual, care must be taken that the mutual obligations created under their provisions, shall be strictly fulfilled; and that whilst the labour of the apprentice is secured for the benefit of his employer, so his rights must also be secured, and his legal claims must be attended to with the strictest fidelity and justice. To ensure the faithful application of those principles, the cordial and earnest co-operation of all classes is required; and His Majesty feels confidence that you will not fail to secure such effectual co-operation, by all the means within your power.

Sir, Trinidad, 26 August 1834.

I have the honour and satisfaction of reporting to you the continued tranquillity of this Colony.

With reference, however, to the dispositions of the apprentices, they exhibit, on some estates, a sullen unwillingness to work, and perform their work slowly and badly.

I expect, and doubt not, a change very shortly in this conduct, towards cheerful compliance with their duty, for on many estates the tasks they have taken, in lieu of seven hours and a half labour, they complete before twelve o'clock, and hire themselves to work for good wages during their spare hours. Nay, one instance has been stated to me of an entire gang of apprentices of an estate, who, having finished their task, adjourned to the adjoining estate to work the remainder of the day, where they got a better price for their work than their owner had offered them.

The experience of money paid for spare time, will soon prove to them that the explanations given to them of this advantage were correct, which they did not at first credit, but of which the apprenticed population will soon generally avail themselves.

In consequence of a proposition made, and a resolution passed in Council on the 23d of June last, in reference to the necessity of engaging and preparing a police force, to be qualified to act on the 1st of August, and of which I enclose a copy, I am under the necessity of requesting to be instructed whether the whole or only a part of this expense is to be borne by Great Britain.

TRINIDAD.

The police houses, the stipendiary justices' residences, prisons and hospitals, will occasion additional expense, which the Council seem to expect from the debates and proceedings in Parliament, is to be made good to the Colony.

Whether to be supplied by the Mother Country or by the Colony, or in what proportions, I trust I need not assure you that every attention to economy shall be scrupulously observed.

Enclosure in No. 307.

Enclosure in No. 307.

Council of Government, 23 June 1834.

His Excellency brought under the consideration of the Board the subject of the new police force, and observed, that although he presumed the magistrates would arrive from England before the 1st of August, it would be indispensable that a portion at least of the police should be organized, and in readiness to aid the magistrates in the execution of their duty. He suggested that a sufficient force of serjeants and privates ought to be in readiness, to render the powers vested in the special magistrates efficient; and he thought that a proportion of the men might be procured from the disbanded West India regiment. To supply the serjeants, he hoped and believed the members of the Board would be enabled, from their intercourse with the various classes of society, to recommend individuals who might be known to them in point of character and qualification: in addition to good character, reading, writing and a capability of keeping accounts, must be required.

His Excellency was of opinion, that those persons should be embodied and disciplined for some time previous to their being separated and located in the respective districts, and therefore that it would be desirable to engage them as soon as possible. But his Excellency observed, that as a matter of course their pay must commence from the day they may be engaged, and that as he had not yet received instructions from His Majesty's Government from what fund this expense is to be supplied, he has deemed it not only advisable, but absolutely necessary to apply to the Council of Government to sanction the expenditure which will attend this proceeding, by an advance out of the Colonial funds, between this period and the 1st of August next, by which time, he had no doubt, he would be in receipt of explicit instructions upon the subject.

After a detailed explanation of the importance of the measure, and a full discussion on the proposition made by his Excellency, the Board came to the following resolution:

Resolved, That it is the opinion of this Board of Council, that it is imperatively necessary that immediate measures should be adopted for providing a police force in the several divisions and districts into which the Colony may be divided, so that the same may be made effective, and be ready to enter on the discharge of their duties on or before the 1st of August next; and that for this purpose it will be requisite that a number, not exceeding ten proper persons, should be forthwith engaged to act as serjeants of police, the pay not exceeding 4*s.* 4*d.* sterling per diem to each; and a number, not exceeding ninety, as privates of police, at the pay of 2*s.* 2*d.* sterling per day to each; and that all such persons to be engaged, either as serjeants or privates, should be armed and accoutred in such manner as his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor may direct. And that all such persons should be forthwith employed in such exercises as may best fit them to discharge the duties which they will have to perform on the 1st of August next, at such place and under such regulations and directions, as his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor shall think proper; and further, that the expenses to be incurred in carrying these measures into effect between this and the 1st of August, should, in consideration of the pressing necessity of having this force in readiness, and in the absence of any specific instructions to the Governor, be advanced by the Colonial Treasury, under the confident expectation that they will be repaid by His Majesty's Government, according to the 5th resolution of both Houses of the British Parliament.

Copy of a DESPATCH from Mr. Secretary Spring Rice, to Lieutenant-Governor Sir G. F. Hill, Bart.

Sir, Colonial Office, 9 October 1834.

I have received your Despatch of the 26th of August, announcing the continued tranquillity of the Island of Trinidad, which, it is gratifying to think, may, in a very considerable degree, be attributed to the firm but prudent measures adopted by you; and respecting which it has already been my duty to convey to you His Majesty's gracious and marked approbation.

Whilst I cannot but regret that on any estates there should continue a sullen unwillingness to work, on the part of the apprenticed labourers, I feel every reasonable hope that the progress of those natural causes, which you so clearly and ably describe, describe, will very soon lead to a development of a better feeling. The introduction of task work, contracted for on just and equitable terms, the application of the leisure hours of the labourers to work for money wages, cannot fail to impress upon the apprentices the value of industrious habits; and it may be anticipated, that under the operation of such a system, the productive industry of the Colony, and its wealth and resources, will suffer no diminution. I feel particularly gratified at the account you give me of the system of labour which is in progress; because it not only proves the good conduct of the labourer, but the humanity, prudence and discretion, with which the owners of those estates, to which your observations apply, are disposed to adapt their operations to the altered state of the law. TRINIDAD.

No engagement had been entered into, either by this office or by the British Legislature, with respect to police or gaol expenses. The payment of the stipendiary magistrates was alone provided for. It is true, that in the first proposition made by my predecessor, some assistance to the local police was involved. But when the proposed loan of 15,000,000 l. was converted into an absolute gift of 20,000,000 l. the other obligations of this country were limited and defined strictly as I have stated.

RULES and REGULATIONS framed and established by his Excellency the Lieutenant Governor, by and with the advice and consent of the Council of Government, in pursuance of the powers vested in them by the Order of His Majesty in Council of the fifth day of June, one thousand eight hundred and thirty-four, for fixing the time to be allowed to apprenticed Labourers for the cultivation of their grounds, and for apportioning their hours of labour.

WHEREAS by an Order of His Majesty in Council, bearing date the 5th day of June 1834, it was, amongst other things, ordered and provided, That it should be the duty of every employer of prædial apprenticed labourers, within the third week of the month of September of each year, to deliver or cause to be delivered to the special justice of the district in which such prædial apprenticed labourers are resident, a written declaration, specifying whether it is the intention of such employer, during the current year, to maintain his prædial apprenticed labourers by the cultivation of grounds to be to them appropriated for that purpose, or by an allowance of provisions; and also, that every prædial apprenticed labourer for or in respect of whom any ground should be appropriated and set apart for his support as therein mentioned, should, out of the annual time during which such prædial apprenticed labourer is by law required to labour after the rate of 45 hours per week as aforesaid, be allowed such number of hours not being fewer than four hours and a half per week, and not being more than seven hours and a half per week, as the Lieutenant-Governor, with the advice and consent of the Legislative Council, should, by rules to be framed for that purpose determine, which rules should be duly transmitted for His Majesty's approbation, and, until disallowed or altered, should remain in full force.

And whereas by the said Order of His Majesty in Council, it is further provided, that as regards the apportionment of the 45 hours per week, during which prædial apprenticed labourers are required by law to work for their employers, it should be lawful for the Lieutenant-

TRINIDAD.

Lieutenant-Governor, with the advice and consent of the Legislative Council, to make such regulations in respect thereof as might appear to them best adapted to promote the interests both of the apprenticed labourers and their employers, and to frame and publish rules and ordinances for that purpose, which should be duly transmitted for His Majesty's approbation, and which, until disallowed or altered, should remain in full force.

Now therefore I, the Right honourable Sir George Fitzgerald Hill, baronet, colonel of the Londonderry regiment of militia, Lieutenant-Governor and Commander-in-Chief in and over the said Island and its Dependencies, by and with the advice and consent of the Council of Government thereof, have made and established, for the purposes aforesaid, the rules and regulations following; that is to say,—

First.—That from and after the 15th day of September next ensuing, every prædial apprenticed labourer who, under the provisions of the said recited Order in Council, is to be supported wholly by the cultivation of land, shall be allowed, from and out of the time of 45 hours allotted to his employer, a portion of time for the cultivation thereof equivalent to four and a half hours per week, and such portion of time shall be allowed to each prædial apprenticed labourer either on any day or days in any one week, or by any number of days successively, at such period of the year as such employer may select: Provided always, That such number of hours so allowed to the prædial apprenticed labourer shall not at any time exceed 18 hours per week, unless with the consent of the prædial apprenticed labourer.

Second.—Every prædial apprenticed labourer who shall be maintained partly by an allowance of provisions and partly by an allotment of land, shall in each and every week receive from his employer three and a half pounds of dried salt or pickled fish, and shall have allotted to him a portion of land in all respects similar to that allotted to labourers wholly supported by such allotment; that is to say, One half acre of land, properly adapted for the growth of provisions, and not more than two miles distant from the place of residence of such apprenticed labourer, and shall be allowed for the cultivation thereof one half of the time allowed to labourers wholly supported by the allotment of land; that is to say, four and a half hours in each fortnight to be allowed by the employer in the same manner and under the like restrictions.

Third.—No prædial apprenticed labourer can be compelled to labour for his employer for more than 45 hours in any one week, equal to seven hours and a half per day, exclusive of Sundays.

Fourth.—The time at which the labour of the prædial apprenticed labourers is required, and the intervals to be allowed in its performance, shall be in the discretion of the employer, subject to the following regulations:—

That no apprenticed labourer shall be employed for more than 12 hours in any one day, to be reckoned from six o'clock in the morning to six o'clock in the following morning.

That proper intervals from labour of sufficient duration be allowed for the labourers' meals, and if any dispute should arise with respect to this regulation, the same may be decided by the special justice in a summary manner.

That the master or employer shall be bound to give previous intimation to the apprenticed labourer of the time and place at which and where his services will be required, and the number of hours during which his services will be required, on the following day, and of the intervals to be allowed for his meals.

That the employer shall also, by some signal to be distinctly audible or visible to the labourer, and explained to and understood by him or her, intimate the time of beginning and ending of the hours of labour and of the intervals to be allowed for meals.

That no prædial apprenticed labourer shall be compelled or compellable to labour on Sundays, except attending on the sick or as watchman, or in the tending and care of cattle or in the protection of property, or in duties of absolute necessity.

Passed in Council this 31st day of July 1834.

TRINIDAD. No. 2.

RULES and REGULATIONS framed and established by his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor, by and with the advice and consent of the Council of Government, in pursuance of the authority vested in them by the Order of His Majesty in Council of the 5th of June 1834, for the procedure of special Justices in cases of complaints for non-performance or mis-performance of work by apprenticed Labourers.

WHEREAS by the Order of His Majesty in Council, bearing date the 5th day of June 1834, certain provisions are made for regulating the procedure of the special justices therein named; and it is also thereby enacted and provided, that if it should be made to appear to the satisfaction of the Lieutenant-Governor and Legislative Council that the forms of proceeding hereinbefore prescribed, are needlessly burthensome upon the justices of the several districts within the Colony, or of any one or more of such districts, or that they impede or interfere with the prompt and effective execution of the law, the Lieutenant-Governor, with the advice and consent of the Legislative Council, should be entitled to suspend any part of the preceding Rules relating to such procedure, or to adapt the same to the circumstances of

of the case, so as more effectually to promote the punctual, orderly and effective execution of the law, and, for that purpose, to frame and publish rules and ordinances, which should be transmitted for His Majeety's confirmation, and which, until disallowed, should be in full force.

And whereas it has been made to appear, to the satisfaction of his Excellency the Lieutenant-Governor and the Council of Government of the said Island, that the forms of procedure prescribed by the said Order in Council will, in the cases hereinafter mentioned, be needlessly burthensome upon the justices in the several districts: Now therefore I, the Right honourable Sir George Fitzgerald Hill, baronet, colonel of the Londonderry regiment of militia, Lieutenant-Governor and Commander-in-Chief in and over the said Island and its Dependencies, by and with the advice and consent of the Council of Government of the said Island, have made and established the following Rules for regulating the procedure of the special justices in the said Order in Council mentioned, in the cases hereinafter mentioned; that is to say,

The special justices shall and may hear and determine in a summary manner all complaints of indolence and neglect of, or of the non-performance or imperfect performance of work by apprentices: in all such cases it shall be sufficient for him to examine the parties and the witnesses, and when necessary the work to be performed in a short and summary manner, and thereupon to give his decision, and cause the same to be carried into immediate execution.

In all such cases the special justice shall be bound to reduce into writing and to deposit with the other records of proceedings before him, the particulars of the complaint and the substance of the evidence, and of his decision and of the execution thereof within as short a time as possible, and at furthest within three days after the same has been decided, and shall enter the particulars thereof in his journal.

Passed in Council this 31st day of July 1834.

Sir, Trinidad, 3 September 1834.

THE reports made to me from most parts of this Colony announce a return to work by the apprentices, with contentment.

I enclose one of these reports from an intelligent gentleman, Mr. Schack, whom I had sent, as one of the appraisers, to the south-west coast, Cedros and Irois.

My expectation is, that in a short time all the labour will be performed by task, and the apprentices will have many extra hours to dispose of for wages.

Enclosure in No. 310.

Enclosure in No. 310.

Sir, Port of Spain, August 30th, 1834.

Your Excellency having been pleased to request that I should communicate in writing the condition in which I found the apprentices in the quarters which I recently had the honour to visit, I regret much that the very short stay made by me in each quarter will prevent my giving much information upon the subject.

Had I known that a report from me would have been matter of satisfaction, that stay, however short, would have been employed in making minute inquiry, so as to afford your Excellency more ample information than I am at present able to offer.

Such intelligence as I have acquired I now proceed to convey, it being no less my duty than it is gratifying to my feelings to meet your Excellency's wishes.

I left the town of Port of Spain, for the purpose of classing the apprentices of my district, in the evening of the 13th instant, landed at Irod at six o'clock in the morning of the 14th, and, after traversing the woods, reached the cane fields of the Chatham estate, in the quarter of Erin, at a few minutes after 10, when I saw the apprentices of that estate advancing towards their habitations. I inquired if they were going to their breakfast, and was informed that they had finished their task, and were then returning home to do whatever they pleased.

Of the correctness of this answer I am convinced, because I remained on the estate during the remainder of that day, and no more work was done. In addition to this, when I proposed that the apprentices should be assembled for the purpose of classification, the manager replied that he could not answer for the presence of the whole gang, as many had gone to their provision grounds, and others were off the estate to procure from their neighbours some articles they required.

TRINIDAD.

The next day I left the Chatham estate, and repaired to the quarter of Moruga, after classing the apprentices, Mr. Lumis, the commandant, requested that I would interpret and explain to them the Act of Parliament, as he had not yet received a copy; this I did in the Negro French dialect; after which they asked me various questions, in order that no misunderstanding might exist. I answered them, and they retired apparently well satisfied. In the evening they gave a grand Bel-Air Dance, to testify their joy upon the occasion, and the commandant, to assist them, gave a portion of his household provisions.

The only part which failed to please them was, that they would have to work on the Saturday, if they did not perform more than 7 ½ hours work on the other days of the week; however I told them that they might agree with their employers before a special justice to undertake task work, or probably arrange with him to labour nine hours a day during five days of the week.

I then left Moruga and proceeded to Cedros, where the apprentices appeared satisfied. On the Union Estate, the property of Messrs. Beque and Agarrat, they appeared content and happy; they have entered into an engagement with their employers, which I have read myself; I have heard it read to them, they understood it well, and it has been regularly executed.

The covenants are as follows:

1st. The apprentices are to do the same task work as heretofore, but only during five days of the week, the Saturday being allowed them throughout the year. The task being the weeding of 200 tufts of canes.

I have seen the apprentices return to their homes, after finishing the above task, between the hours of twelve and two o'clock, having commenced at about six in the morning.

2d. During the crop, the apprentices are to work also as heretofore; that is to say, they are to commence at about six o'clock in the morning, and furnish four or five coppers; this I am told does not occupy them after sunset.

3d. As the apprentices will be bound to work on the Saturday during the crop, the employers will pay them for that day at the following rate.

To cane cutters, persons employed about the mill, and crook boys, four bits each.

To the refiners, the captain of the crooks and the driver, five bits each.

Each person employed in cutting canes to deliver daily 20 mule loads, which the muleboys are bound to carry to the mill.

4th. The employers will, in addition to all that is allowed by law, supply the apprentices with as much land as they can cultivate, and twice a year each apprentice will receive three pounds and a half of salt pork or beef, two pounds of tobacco and pipes.

5th. The apprentices will receive daily, out of crop, one glass of rum, and during crop, two glasses.

6th. The free children of the female apprentices on the estate will be maintained at the expense of the proprietors.

Several more of these engagements I have seen ready to be executed as soon as a magistrate visited the estates. Many of the proprietors informed me it was their intention to enter into similar arrangements, with which the apprentices were perfectly satisfied.

This, your Excellency, is all the information I can furnish; I did not seek for it, but it presented itself to me. Appearances are certainly favourable. Every thing seemed perfectly quiet, and that they may continue so, no one can more sincerely hope than

Sir, your Excellency's most obedient and very humble servant,

EXTRACT of a DESPATCH from Mr. Secretary Spring Rice to Sir G. F. Hill, Bart. dated Colonial Office, 23 Oct. 1834.

I HAVE this day received your Despatch of the 3d of September.

I again resume the gratifying duty of expressing to you the extreme satisfaction which your reports of the tranquillity of Trinidad, and the industry of the labourer cannot fail to produce.

The system of task work, which you describe as extending in the Colony, is precisely the mode by which the new state of society may be rendered most advantageous and satisfactory to all parties; care being at all times taken that such contracts are equitable in themselves, and are carried steadily into effect.

EXTRACT of a DESPATCH from Lieutenant-Governor Sir G. F. Hill, Bart. to the Right honourable the Earl of Aberdeen, dated Trinidad, 3 March 1835.

I HAVE been occupied in diligent inquiry, both by personal investigation, and queries and correspondence by letter, into the state and disposition to work of the apprenticed labourers, and with sincere pleasure I have the honour to assure your Lordship, that in all the districts, with very small exception, the apprentices give their labour, so far as the crop has hitherto proceeded, with cheerfulness, and to the satisfaction of the planters.

But this general disposition to work I must consider attributable to the wages paid for extra labour, although on a few estates the apprentices will not, for any hire, work beyond the Parliamentary hours.

I have not the least doubt in this matter that a favourable change will take place.

The disposition of the apprentices I attribute to the abolition of party spirit between the different classes, to the exposure of the mischievous efforts of a few agitators, and to the readiness with which I had every complaint heard, and when just, redressed.

I HAVE had great satisfaction in learning from the latter part of your Despatch of the 3d March, that the apprenticed labourers of the Colony under your Government were at that time working with cheerfulness, and exhibiting a disposition, from which you were led to believe that the few exceptions which now exist to the willingness of the apprentices to work for wages in extra time, would not be of long continuance.

My Lord, Trinidad, 24 April 1835.

IN compliance with your Lordship's Despatch, dated the 16th ultimo, with the extract of an Order of the House of Commons, dated the 12th March instant, enclosed therein,—

I have the honour to transmit to your Lordship herewith a statement of the corporal punishment inflicted on the apprenticed negroes between the 1st of August and 31st of December 1834, the latest period to which it can be made up.

I have deemed it prudent to distinguish the punishments inflicted in the month of August, from those during the remaining four months of the year.

Upon contrasting the punishments in the former period of one month (when every species of insidious misrepresentation was used by a few desperate characters to mislead the apprentices), with the latter period of four months, I am induced to anticipate that progressively the necessity of corporal punishment will almost entirely cease.

I feel the more encouraged to indulge this pleasing prospect, by the reports I constantly receive from the different estates; in almost all of them the proprietors have exerted themselves (and with much success) to induce the apprentices to employ their extra hours in their service for wages.

The regularity of payment, coupled with the friendly advice of the local special magistrates, have generally inspired the apprentices with confidence, and will eventually produce that respect towards their employers from kind feeling, which heretofore was the result of fear.

EXTRACT of a DESPATCH from Lieutenant-Governor Sir G. F. Hill, Bart. to the Earl of Aberdeen, dated Trinidad, 22d May 1835.

AS I am aware of the anxiety of His Majesty's Government, to be occasionally informed of the conduct of the apprenticed labourers, I have felt it to be my duty to make strict inquiry from the special justices and intelligent persons in the different districts, in what manner labour is carried on, and with what degree of satisfaction to the planter and cheerfulness by the apprentices.

The sugar crop is now more than three-fourths finished; will produce (I expect) as much revenue as last year, and with general contentedness on the part of the apprentices.

I delight to remark that punishments have materially decreased; on some estates none have been inflicted since October last; and I entertain a strong belief that there is an advance towards a moral improvement, which, if carefully promoted, will realize the most sanguine hopes of the promoters of the important change effected on the 1st of August last.

After my next visit through the districts of the Colony, I will make a detailed Report on the condition of the population of the country.

IN your Despatch of the 24th July 1834 addressed to Mr. Lefevre, you reported as follows:—

"In each of the eight country districts, I have selected the most respectable inhabitant residing in a central situation to be the acting superintendent special justice, until the arrival of the functionaries from England; under these eight gentlemen I have appointed 92 special justices.

"One other acting superintendent special justice and a due proportion of special justices have been appointed for the Port of Spain district."

In the return which you have annexed to your Despatch of the 27th April, you state the number of unpaid special justices as 29.

My Lord, Trinidad, 18th July 1835.

IN obedience to your Lordship's Despatch, dated 15th ultimo, which requests me to state the cause of the difference between two statements which I made, the first on the 24th July 1834, wherein I reported that I had appointed 92 special justices, and the second on the 27th of April 1835, in which was contained a return of local magistrates, who had been appointed special magistrates, amounting to twenty-nine. My Despatch of July 1834 stated the number of special justices I had then appointed, with my reasons in detail for having appointed so many.

The Return forwarded in my Despatch dated 27th of April was made in strict conformity with the Order of the House of Commons, which required a return of local magistrates who had been appointed special magistrates.

I confined that return strictly to the terms of the Order, which I have hitherto found to be the most correct and convenient mode of compliance.

But to prevent misapprehension, I introduced a paragraph into that Despatch in the following words: "exclusive of the local magistrates, (viz. commandants and adjoint commandants) who were appointed special, there were others also named who have acted," alluding to those I had named in July 1834.

In conclusion of my Despatch of 27th April last, I state my intention of reducing the number of unpaid special magistrates to twenty-seven.

I trust this explanation may be satisfactory.

ST. LUCIA.
No. 321.

Sir, St. Lucia, 2 August 1833.

I do myself the honour of acknowledging the receipt of your circular Despatch of the 13th June last, enclosing a copy of a series of Resolutions by the House of Commons on the subject of the Abolition of Slavery in the British Colonies, which came to hand on the 14th ultimo.

Vide Papers printed by Parliament, 15 April 1835, Part I. No. 177, p. 5.

I have postponed acknowledging this Despatch till the day of the sailing of the packet, in order that I might be enabled to ascertain as far as possible, and report upon the feelings of all concerned in this important measure.

On the receipt of the Despatch mentioned I lost no time in transmitting to the Judges the extract therefrom in which they are principally concerned, and called upon them to "engage immediately in an inquiry by what enactments the existing law may be most conveniently adjusted to a state of society in which slavery will be unknown."

All the proprietors and managers of slaves in this Colony appear to me extremely anxious to learn the ultimate decision of both Houses of Parliament upon this momentous measure, to the wisdom of which they appear calmly resigned, in consequence, as I presume, of the fairness of so much of the conditions as have already transpired, and as far as I have been able to collect their sentiments and to enter into their feelings, they seem apprehensive only that the apprentices will not give them a sufficient quantity of labour to enable them to bring their crops to market.

On the other hand, I am happy in having to state, that, generally speaking, the slaves in this Colony have shown no insubordinate disposition since His Majesty's gracious intentions towards them have become publicly known, although upon some of the estates an evident relaxation in their labour did manifest itself amongst a few of each gang; in consequence of which I sent the Protector of Slaves to admonish those persons, which service he readily performed, and found the circumstances of so trivial a nature as to require no specific report. Nevertheless, in order to induce the slaves to continue their labours uninterruptedly, I published a notice, of which a copy accompanies this, apprising them of the bad consequences likely to result to themselves from any insubordinate or indolent conduct on their part.

Notwithstanding that I do not apprehend any serious opposition to the measures of His Majesty's Government on the part of either proprietors or slaves, I shall hold in readiness every means at my disposal, and use every personal exertion in enforcing the laws and maintaining the tranquillity of the Colony.

In consequence I assembled a Legislative Council this day, and laid before the members the said document for their most serious and deliberate consideration.

After both had been perused, the members were unanimously of opinion that it would be desirable they should weigh the matter in their minds for a few days, and requested a delay for that purpose, which I considered reasonable, and therefore directed that the Assembly should be convened on Monday the 2d December next, when I am inclined to hope that the members will apply themselves to the consideration of this important subject in a spirit of frank and cordial co-operation with the views of His Majesty's Government, the result of which I shall do myself the honour of transmitting to you by the earliest opportunity.

Enclosure in No. 324.

HIS Excellency the Governor having then brought before the Council the subject of the Crown circular Despatch, dated Downing-street, 19th October 1833, his Honour the Chief Justice moved, that the circular Despatch and its printed Enclosure be referred to a committee of the unofficial members of the Council, to report as to the alterations or amendments in the proposed enactments which it may be desirable to adopt in St. Lucia, with liberty to advise with such of the inhabitants and planters as they may think fit to call to their assistance, which, having been seconded by the Honourable Villiers Surtees, was agreed to.

His Excellency the Governor was then pleased to name the unofficial members to form such committee, of whom any three to be a quorum, and requested them to present their report this day three weeks.

23 December 1833.

The Honourable James Macfarlane brought up the report of the committee of the Legislative Council, named by his Excellency the Governor at the last sitting, for the purpose of taking into consideration the draft Order in Council referred to in the circular Despatch of the Right Honourable the Secretary of State for the Colonies, dated 19th October last, and to report as to the alterations or amendments which it may be desirable to adopt in St. Lucia. His Excellency was pleased to order the report to be read. It was read accordingly, as follows. (See document (B.) annexed.)

His Honour the Chief Justice then moved, that the report be taken into consideration at the next meeting of Council, which was seconded by the Honourable S. Villiers Surtees, and agreed to.

30 Dec. 1833.

The report of the committee of the Legislative Council on the draft Ordinance referred to in the Crown circular Despatch of the 19th October last was then taken into consideration.

The Honourable Villiers Surtees moved the following resolution, seconded by his Honour the Chief Justice:

Resolved, That the committee of this Board, to whom it was referred to make a report on the subject of the legislative enactments for this Island rendered necessary by the Act of Parliament abolishing slavery, not having offered any suggestions on the intended plan or modifications of its provisions, this Board considers it expedient that such enactments should emanate from home, and respectfully submits the whole matter to the discretion of His Majesty's Government.

St. Lucia, 23 Dec. 1833.

THE undersigned, members of the committee appointed by the Governor and Council to report as to the alterations or amendments which it might be desirable to adopt in St. Lucia in the draft Order in Council for British Guiana, referred to in the Crown circular Despatch of the 19th October 1833, having communicated with the planters, and having heard their observations and opinions thereon, have come to the following conclusion:

That as all legislation originating in the Colonies respecting the labourers is liable, in the present excited state of the British people, to be misconstrued or viewed with suspicion, the undersigned recommend that the legislative enactments for this Island should continue, as heretofore, to emanate from the mother country.

Such seems to be the wish of the inhabitants of this Colony, who appear prepared to give the enactments a fair and dispassionate trial; and in the event of such enactments not answering the expectations of the mother country, and occasioning the total loss of their property, they must throw themselves upon the mercy of the Imperial Parliament and British people for their support hereafter.

Copy of a DESPATCH from Mr. Secretary Stanley to the Officer administering the Government of St. Lucia.

Sir, Downing-street, 22 May 1834. No. 325.

Sir Dudley Hill, who will leave this country in a few days for St. Lucia, will take out with him an Order in Council for the Colony of St. Lucia, supplementary to the Act of the British Parliament for the Abolition of Slavery.

The intended provisions of this Order in Council are nearly the same as those which were contained in the model draft transmitted to your predecessor with my Despatch of the 19th October last, with the exception of a few modifications and alterations which have been introduced in consequence of the suggestions which I have received from some of the West India Colonies to which the same model draft was communicated.

Although I shall have an opportunity of giving full instructions to Sir D. Hill on this important subject, I think it right in the meantime to call your immediate attention to some points connected with the division of the Colony of St. Lucia into judicial districts, and with the establishment of a police, in order that you may, with the assistance of the Legislative Council, make some progress in the consideration of these preliminary measures before Sir D. Hill's arrival.

You are aware that the British Act for the Abolition of Slavery authorizes the appointment of special justices, but limits the number of those who are to receive the salaries granted by Parliament to 100. In the distribution of these stipendiary justices amongst the Colonies for whom they are intended, I find that I can only allot two for the Colony of St. Lucia. Although the Lieutenant-governor will be instructed to select from amongst the proprietors and others resident in the Colony a sufficient number of voluntary magistrates, and although I entertain no doubt of obtaining their assistance and co-operation, yet the principal share of the labour and superintendence must necessarily devolve upon the two who are remunerated for their services. It will, therefore, be desirable to divide the Colony of St. Lucia into two districts, placing one of them in the charge of each of the stipendiary magistrates. I think, however, from the size of the Colony and the difficulties of internal communication, that two police settlements will be necessary for each district. The stipendiary justice must of course reside at or near to one of these, which must be placed under his immediate charge. That at which he does not reside must be confided to one or more of the other special justices, subject to the general superintendence and frequent visitation of the stipendiary justice. As it will be impossible for some months to erect and complete the buildings necessary for police settlements, it is proposed that, as in most of the other Colonies, temporary arrangements should be made for the police, and for places of safe custody and correction, by hiring buildings which may be convenient for that purpose.

With regard to the police, I am disposed to consider it of much more importance that it should be composed of effective and competent persons, rather than that it should be numerous. Independent of the police necessary for the town of Castries, I should conceive that it would be sufficient to appoint seven or eight to each station, besides the serjeants. These, with the assistance of constables, whom it is proposed that the stipendiary magistrates should have the power of appointing from amongst the apprentices on the plantations, if necessary, will probably be found adequate for the enforcement of the law and the protection of property in ordinary cases.

I am well aware that the expenditure necessarily incidental to the formation and support of the police establishments will tend to increase the financial difficulties of the Colony of St. Lucia, and I regret that I cannot hold out any hope that these difficulties will be removed by pecuniary assistance from this country.

I can assure you, however, that it is my most anxious desire to afford to the Colony whatever relief can arise from the reduction of its expenditure to the furthest point which is attainable with a due regard to the performance of the public

public services which are necessary for the welfare of the Colony. I fear, however, that I shall not be able to give any definitive instructions on the subject of the finances of St. Lucia until I have received the Blue Book for the year 1833.

IN the unavoidable absence of Mr. Secretary Spring Rice, I have the honour to transmit to you an Order which has been passed by His Majesty in Council "for giving effect in the Island of St. Lucia to the Statute 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 73, for the Abolition of Slavery."

COPY of a DESPATCH from Lieutenant-governor Sir Dudley Hill to Mr. Secretary Spring Rice.

Sir, Government House, St. Lucia, 1 August 1834.

No. 327.

I HAVE the honour to acquaint you that I arrived here on the 12th of last month, and having first, with the usual formalities, been sworn into office on that day, assumed the government of the Colony.

Having learned that much anxious doubt existed in the minds of the proprietary body on the probability of their labourers continuing subordinate under the great change in their social condition which takes effect from this day, I judged it expedient to issue the enclosed Proclamation, marked No. 3, for the purpose of not only imparting confidence to holders of property, but also of apprizing the negroes that without loss of time they should from my own lips receive an authentic account of the nature and extent of the privileges for which they were looking, naturally enough, with the most intense interest; and I was of opinion that a personal communication with them, deriving efficacy from those full and repeated explanations of which an oral address admits, would be the most successful mode of satisfying their expectations; and accordingly my intention to visit them was announced in the above-mentioned Proclamation, which I have now the honour to transmit.

The proper order of the narrative of my proceedings since my arrival should lead me to mention to you here the various transactions in Council with which I was constantly occupied in the interval between the publication of the document and the fulfilment of the promise it contained to make a tour through the Island. Yet, knowing that the conduct of the labouring population at the moment of transition from slavery to freedom is a subject on which the attention of His Majesty's Government is fixed with deep anxiety, I hasten with the most heartfelt satisfaction to express my conviction that the visit has realized the views which urged me to undertake it, and that the most favourable anticipations may be indulged respecting the continuance of tranquil and orderly behaviour on the part of the negroes of this Island.

As the substance of my address to them appears to be correctly reported in the Island papers, I beg leave to forward one for your perusal; and I have only to add, that in the several districts of the Colony I had much reason to be satisfied with the manner in which it was received by all parties.

I have the honour also to forward two other Proclamations, which were made public at the time of my Address. The one marked No. 5 holds out pardon to absentees from the service of their masters, provided they return to their duty immediately, and warns them against incurring the prolonged term of apprenticeship to which their absence will subject them.

The

ST. LUCIA.

The other, marked No. 4, sets apart this day as sacred to the religious acknowledgment of the boon of freedom. The contents of both these Proclamations were hailed by the people with lively satisfaction and becoming feeling, and I trust they may also meet the honour of your approval.

I did not fail to avail myself of this opportunity minutely to inspect the whole of the militia, and I have used my best exertions to infuse a zealous spirit into both officers and men, and I am not without a sanguine hope that I shall shortly be able to place this force in a more respectable and efficient state than it is in at present.

I have already made application to Barbadoes for a partial supply of arms and accoutrements, of which they stand much in need, as also of clothing.

I now beg leave to advert to the proceedings of the Council, and to state that I have been under the necessity of making all the arrangements for the new system with more haste than I could have wished, but at the same time with a confident hope that they are the best of which existing circumstances and the urgency of the case would permit.

No stipendiary magistrates having arrived, I have named three gentlemen of the Colony to fill provisionally those offices, receiving the emoluments attached to them, and have also prevailed upon three others to accept the situation of voluntary magistrates under the superintendence of the stipendiaries.

I found it impossible, with any regard to the safe operation of the Act of Parliament, to divide the Colony into fewer than three districts, with three police stations in each district.

I have also the honour to state to you that these police stations are for the present to be occupied by men selected from the militia, for not only have I wanted time to organize the new police, but I have had to contend against a repugnance to enter into that service in consequence of the disrepute into which the ordinary police of the country seems to have fallen.

The present temporary police whom I have appointed consist of nine serjeants and 45 privates; and it may be as well to remark that their duties have been clearly defined to them as being of a civil and not of a military kind, and strictly confined to the description set forth in the King's Order in Council of 5th June last, and to the directions which, in pursuance of that Order, may be issued to them by the stipendiary magistrate.

To the Order in Council every publicity has been given, and all magistrates have been furnished with copies.

I have been under the necessity of detaining the mail-boat somewhat beyond her usual time of sailing, in order to send this Despatch, which, though hastily written, will I trust be acceptable to you as containing an assurance of the undisturbed tranquillity of the Island at this important crisis; and for any omissions in this communication, I must plead my very recent return from the country, the very great and harassing labour that has devolved upon me in consequence of the total absence, prior to my arrival, of any settled arrangements under the new system, and my actual employment in ushering in this day with the honours appropriate to the happy change of which it is the memorable epoch.

Enclosure 1, in No. 327.

His Majesty having been graciously pleased to appoint me to the distinguished situation of Lieutenant-governor of this Island, I embrace the earliest opportunity which has occurred since my arrival to announce my deep conviction that there can be no pursuit more closely connected with my public duty, and I will add, nor any more consonant to my own individual feelings, than that of devoting my best exertions to the promotion and security of peace, good order and happiness amongst all classes of His Majesty's subjects in this Island; and, fully sensible of the vital importance of obtaining the effectual aid of all parties to render the operation of the Act for the extinction of slavery beneficial to the proprietors and advantageous to the apprenticed labourers, it is my intention, in furtherance of this important object, to visit the several districts of the Colony at the earliest period at which the public service may permit of an absence from the seat of government, and then personally personally to give an assurance of my firm determination to vindicate, on every occasion, the supremacy of the law over us all, without distinction of colour or station; to repress with speed and vigour any attempt at insubordination; and especially to invite from the proprietary body their honest co-operation in guiding to a successful issue the changes which are about to take place in our social system, and to inculcate upon the labouring population the just right which the Imperial Parliament and our local Legislature have to demand from them, on principles of gratitude and duty, the most tranquil and orderly submission to such laws as may have been framed for their government in a state of industrious freedom.

Enclosure 2, in No. 327.

WHEREAS it is at all times our bounden duty to render thanks to Heaven for the mercies extended to us: and whereas at this period the greatest temporal blessing is conferred upon a large portion of the population of this Island by the Abolition of Slavery, and the consequent change, to the adult negro, from hereditary perpetual bondage to a system of moderate labour for a limited time, carrying with it to his offspring under six years of age, and to his children's children for ever, the enjoyment of unrestricted freedom:

I have thought fit to direct, by this my Proclamation, that Friday the 1st day of August next ensuing, be observed in all churches and chapels as a day of general thanksgiving to Almighty God, for having in his infinite wisdom visited the people of this land with so gracious a dispensation of his good providence, and likewise of humble intercession and fervent prayer that He may be pleased mercifully to further this important change to a peaceable and happy end.

And I do hereby request and enjoin that the said 1st of August next ensuing be observed by all classes with the same reverence that is due to a Sabbath-day.

WHEREAS it has been represented to me that there are at this present time many slaves absent without leave from the service of their masters, I have thought it fit to issue this my Proclamation, calling upon all such runaways to return forthwith to their duty, when an act of clemency will be extended towards them; otherwise they will be subjected to the prolonged term of apprenticeship provided for in the 20th clause of the Act intituled "An Act for the Abolition of Slavery," &c., which takes effect from the 1st of August next ensuing.

Enclosure 4, in No. 327.

My Friends,

Enclosure 4 in No. 327.

YOU are aware that I have recently arrived from England to be Governor of this Colony. You see I lose no time in coming amongst you, and my reason is, that I know you have been for a length of time past expecting some great benefit to be conferred upon you. I am come to tell you, you are right. The King and the people of England, with your masters in this country, have mutually made sacrifices in order that you should enjoy the blessings of freedom. On the 1st day of next month the name of slave is to be forgotten. No man is to call another a slave. You are no longer to be slaves. You are free; not idle free people, but industrious free people, bound to labour moderately for your masters, in return for allowances which your masters, as they have hitherto done, will be bound to furnish you. Now, my friends, attend to what I say; believe what I say. I am here in this country representing the great and good King of England, who, with his people, is your friend; therefore my duty is also to be your friend; for your own sakes, believe and trust to the words I speak.

ST. LUCIA.

The benefits which you are to have from the 1st of next month are very great. Whilst you are slaves, your children and your children's children are slaves; on the 1st of next month all your children under six years of age are free; all born after the 1st of next month are born free. As slaves, you had to work for your masters nine hours every day, or 54 hours every week; as free apprenticed labourers, you are to work 7½ hours per day, or 45 hours per week. As slaves, you were to work these nine hours every day of every week of your whole lives; after the 1st of next month, you are to work these 7½ hours per day for six years, or if you are domestics, for four years only. The domestics have the shorter term allotted to them because their services are without remission. You can release yourselves by purchase, at a fair valuation, from the service of your apprenticeship, in like manner as hitherto you had the right of buying your freedom from slavery. Yet during your apprenticeship you are to receive from your employers the same allowances as when they had from you your full time. As a slave, your master can order you to be punished; as a free apprenticed labourer, you are not subject to this authority. The King has appointed special justices to decide on all differences that may arise between you and your masters, with authority to prevent any wrong being done to you, and also to punish you when you do wrong; and he alone has this power. These officers have not yet arrived, but this gentleman, by my appointment, is to be your magistrate until the other does arrive. Obey him, respect him, for he has my authority.

Do not deceive yourselves: every man in this world must work; God, who made us all, has ordered that we should live by the sweat of our brow. Let me warn you against so great a mistake as supposing, because your master has no longer the power of punishing you, that therefore no punishment at all can happen to you. The magistrate has full power to punish you for every fault you commit; has full power to make you perform the 7½ hours of labour you owe to your master; has full power to punish you if you are lazy, careless, negligent, absent from work, impudent or disobedient. As the good things of which I have been before telling you are secured to you and your children, be sure you in your turn shall receive punishment if you do not honestly and fairly work for your masters the whole time to which by law he is entitled whilst the apprenticeship lasts. Some people tell me that perhaps you will try not to work at all. I cannot believe you to be such fools, or so ungrateful, or so wicked. Work you must, the moderate time required from you by law. If any of you dare to resist the law, and think that by combining together, you can evade or set it at defiance, be assured I shall instantly come amongst you, not as now, to do you good and advise you, but severely to punish the offenders. My duty is to have the laws obeyed; to protect all men and their properties. This duty, depend upon it, I will fully perform, if but one single act of general insubordination take place amongst you, whereby your master's property is endangered and the public peace disturbed. That moment I will be on the spot with the King's troops and other His Majesty's loyal subjects. But, my friends, I trust (and indeed, from the first moment of my coming amongst you, my confidence on that score is increased) that your conduct will not be such as to require my presence for any purpose of visiting the guilty.

From your magistrate, and from your masters too, you may learn many other things relating to your rights and to the duties you are to perform. There is but one other duty, and one other privilege which I shall now mention; the duty is a very sacred one, the penalty for its non-performance very severe. As your children are free, they must be supported as free children are supported, that is, by their parents; and for this, among other reasons, was the difference of labour between 7½ and nine hours per day granted you. If, however, your children are left destitute, they may by law be apprenticed, that is, bound to labour until they are 21 years of age.

The privilege of which I have to make mention is, that at your own free will and pleasure, without denial or interruption whatsoever, you may on every Sabbath-day perform religious worship at any church or chapel in the Island; and, my friends, not only when you may next meet at any place of worship, but when you leave this spot to-day and return to your domiciles, and are in the midst of your children, go down on your knees and thank the great God for the blessings of freedom, which I have told you are to be yours in part, and your children's altogether, after the 1st of next month.

Be grateful to the people of England, who have paid a great deal of money to make you free; be obedient to the laws; and on all occasions you shall have their protection.

Now, my friends, in conclusion, let me once more remind you of all the advantages you derive from this great measure:

1. That all grown-up persons are required to perform a moderate labour of 7½ hours per day, in lieu of nine hours per day as before, and these 7½ hours are for six years only, instead of for all your lives.

2. That in like manner as you could purchase freedom when you were slaves, so now you may purchase release from apprenticeship.

3. That children under six years of age, and all born after the 1st of next month, are free.

4. That the power of inflicting punishment is no longer arbitrary with your masters, but depends upon the decision of the magistrate.

5. That the most entire liberty is given to you to frequent on Sundays any place of worship you please.

And, my friends, I have to tell you that by proclamation I have appointed the 1st of next month, the day from which all these great things take effect, to be a day of general thanksgiving to God for all these blessings, which most heartily and sincerely I hope you may for ever enjoy in peace, content and happiness.

COPY of a DESPATCH from Lieut.-governor Sir Dudley Hill to Mr. Secretary Spring Rice.

Sir, St. Lucia, 1 August 1834.

No. 328. I HAVE the honour to forward herewith a Proclamation issued this morning to announce the abolition of slavery, in virtue of the Act of Parliament passed in the Session held in the 3d and 4th years of the reign of His present most gracious Majesty.

And it is my gratifying duty to inform you that the announcement, which took place in my presence, and in that of the principal inhabitants of the Island, was received with the most hearty and grateful expressions of loyalty, and that the public tranquillity remains most perfectly undisturbed at the late hour of the day at which I now have the honour to forward this Despatch.

PROCLAMATION,

By His Excellency Sir Dudley St. Ledger Hill, Lieut.-Governor, &c.

I DO hereby proclaim and make known, that by virtue of an Act of Parliament passed in the Session held in the 3d and 4th years of the reign of His most gracious Majesty King William the Fourth, slavery ceases on this present 1st day of August, and by virtue of the said Act, it is now abolished in this Colony henceforth and for ever. And I do further proclaim, that from and after this day prædial labourers are to become apprentices for six years, and non-prædial labourers for four years; and I do strictly exhort, enjoin and command all such apprenticed labourers as aforesaid to be obedient to their masters and those in authority, to be industrious in their habits, and submissive to the laws.

Given under my hand and the seal of the said Island, this 1st day of August, in the fifth year of His Majesty's reign, and the year of our Lord 1834.

COPY of a DESPATCH from Mr. Secretary Spring Rice to Lieutenant-governor Sir Dudley Hill.

Sir, Colonial Office, 6 Sept. 1834.

No. 329. I HAVE received your Despatches of the 1st August last, reporting the measures which you had taken to preserve tranquillity and subordination, and to give due effect to the Act for the Abolition of Slavery.

I have to convey to you His Majesty's approval of the three Proclamations which you had issued, the first dated the 5th of July, announcing your intention to visit the country districts; the second, dated the 25th of July, appointing the 1st of August to be a day of general thanksgiving; the third, dated also the 25th July, offering an indemnity to runaway negroes who should return to their masters forthwith, and warning them of the prolonged obligations of apprenticeship which they would incur by their continued absence.

It is also my duty to convey to you the expression of His Majesty's approbation of the active and judicious measures which you adopted to meet the difficulties which might have arisen on the Abolition Act first coming into operation. The address which you delivered to the negroes appears to me to have been well calculated to dispel any delusions which they may have laboured under, and the results of your exertions are gratifying.

The provisional appointment of stipendiary magistrates was indispensable, owing to the non-arrival of persons from this country to discharge the duties. I find, upon inquiring, that the delay in sending out such persons has arisen from the the difficulty of meeting with individuals willing to accept the situations and qualified for such an employment in a Colony where the language spoken is French; but I beg to assure you that the quota of magistrates for St. Lucia will be despatched to your assistance without further loss of time.

Sir, St. Lucia, 19 August 1834. No. 330.

I have the honour to forward herewith the following Public Acts, viz.:

No. 7. A Proclamation dividing the Island of St. Lucia into three judicial districts, and defining the limits of the said districts, dated 1st August 1834. Proclamation, No. 7, printed in the Appendix (B.), No. 57.

No. 4. An Ordinance enacted by the Lieut.-governor and the Legislative Council on the 1st August, for fixing and determining the number of hours per week which shall be allowed to prædial apprenticed labourers for the cultivation of their provision grounds, &c. Ordinance, No. 4, of the 1 Aug. 1834, printed in the Appendix (B.), No. 58.

No. 8. A Proclamation, issued in consequence of various false reports being prevalent respecting the state of the population in distant parts of the Island, and cautioning all persons against spreading reports calculated to mislead the public mind. Proclamation, No. 8, printed in the Appendix (B.), No. 59.

No. 5. An Ordinance passed by the Lieut.-governor and Legislative Council on the 18th August, for providing for the acquiescence of the minority of the prædial apprenticed labourers in the apportionment of task-work, &c. &c. Ordinance, No. 5, of the 18 Aug. 1834, printed in the Appendix (B.), No. 60.

— No. 332. —

EXTRACT of a DESPATCH from Lieut.-governor Sir Dudley Hill to Mr. Secretary Spring Rice, dated Government House, St. Lucia, 26th August 1834.

No. 332.

THE Despatches which I had the honour to transmit in the early part of this month will have apprized you that the abolition of slavery excited in this Island no other emotions amongst the parties most interested than those which so happy and great an event would naturally produce, nor did there result then, nor has there been exhibited since, any demonstration of public feeling which could give me serious uneasiness respecting the preservation of tranquillity throughout the Colony.

In announcing to you the continuance of this state of things, I think it right to glance at some of the measures adopted. I may safely mention as the first of these measures, (and as one to which my earliest and most strenuous exertions were directed) the dispelling from the minds of the proprietors an idea of the necessity or expediency of making a display of military force, with which they were so strongly impressed, that one influential party represented to me, in terms approaching to remonstrance, the impossibility of preserving peace unless the police should be supplied with fire-arms and ammunition.

I need hardly say that to such counsel my own judgment would have led me to object, even were it not, as I conceive it to be, opposed to the just and humane policy of His Majesty's Government; and to them it will no doubt be as gratifying to learn, as it is in the highest degree satisfactory to me to inform you, that the present orderly conduct of the labourers justifies the favourable opinion I entertain of their quiet and peaceable disposition.

I feel, however, that so necessary was it to disallow the spirit which would have induced many to secure the continuance of their labourers' industry, or as they would term it, the safety of the Colony, by an unusual display at this time of armed force; so necessary was it to discountenance the reports of general insubordination, nay, even of rebellion, which from distant parts of the Island were constantly pouring into the Government office, that had they not been counteracted on my part by a personal investigation into their accuracy, their exaggeration being undetected, steps would possibly have been taken against an imaginary danger, which might really have caused the very evil the reporters seemed to deprecate.

Having thus, then, by my earliest measures endeavoured to prevent any ill consequences from the unadvised conduct of one class of the population, my anxious attention was directed to the other, and in a second visit to the country districts, I had the pleasure to observe that there were no exceptions to the general good behaviour of the labourers, save those which, arising from simple misapprehension of their new rights, could be remedied gradually and temperately, and except also those breaches of discipline which amongst a large body of people would occur under any system of cumpulsory labour, and which were not less frequent under that just abolished.

For offences of the latter description the special magistracy might safely use their power, but for the former there was no better antidote than an unreserved communication from some unquestionable authority; this task I again undertook, and, as I have every reason to suppose, not unsuccessfully.

I feel indeed fully warranted by present appearances in allowing His Majesty's Government to entertain an expectation that St. Lucia will continue free from those commotions to which, I learn with regret, the tranquillity of Trinidad, St. Christopher, and other Islands, have been temporarily exposed, and I beg you to be assured that I shall not fail to devote all my energies to realize this expectation.

COPY of a DESPATCH from Mr. Secretary Spring Rice to Lieut.-governor Sir Dudley Hill.

Sir, Colonial Office, 11 October 1834.

I HAVE just received your very satisfactory Despatch of the 26th August, which I have lost no time in laying before the King. No. 333.

It is most gratifying to His Majesty's feelings to be informed that the Act for the Abolition of Slavery has been carried into effect in St. Lucia with the entire success so well described in your Despatch. His Majesty rejoices to learn that this great change has been effected without exciting any other emotion among the parties most interested than those which so important an improvement in their social condition would naturally produce, and that you entertain no serious apprehensions respecting the preservation of internal tranquillity.

You have acted with good sense and discretion in declining to make any display of military force, so long as the public peace was not disturbed. The interposition of the military authorities should be reserved for such exigencies only as render a recourse to that ultimate remedy unavoidable. To act upon other principles is not only to misapply the means of Government, but to impair, if not to destroy, the permanent efficiency of the civil power.

But the same discretion which induced you to decline resorting to such measures under the circumstances you have described, would I am sure have led you to apply all the means at your disposal, had the real interests of the Colony, or the lives and property of His Majesty's subjects, been exposed to real danger; I am however relieved by the satisfactory nature of your communication from the painful necessity of contemplating any such alternative.

A very important duty remains to be executed by you and all others conducting the functions of government in His Majesty's West-Indian Colonies. In carrying into effect the provisions of the Abolition Act, you will I am sure feel yourself called upon to assist the employers in obtaining from the apprentices the amount of labour to which by law they are entitled; and on the other hand you will apply your constant and most sedulous attention to secure to the labourer the full possession of every right and privilege conferred on him by law. By this union of firmness and strict impartiality, it is His Majesty's earnest hope that the new social system produced by the great change made in the condition of the apprenticed labourer may be matured and perfected, and the productive industry of the Colony and the pecuniary interests of the proprietors of land may also be secured.

His Majesty commands me to convey his gracious approval of your conduct to you; and to those who have co-operated with you, his gracious approbation.

Sir, St. Lucia, 28 November 1834.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Despatch dated 11th October last, in which you conveyed to me the highly gratifying announcement of His Majesty's most gracious approval of my conduct. No. 334.

I would respectfully take leave to express my deep sense of this honour, and to assure you that I shall sedulously study to give effect to those wise and just views which His Majesty has been pleased to express in relation as well to the legal claims of the employer on his apprentice as to the secure possession by the latter of the rights and privileges lately conferred on him.

I avail myself of the present occasion to report that I have this day completed a tour of the whole Island, which was undertaken to explain to the apprentices the apportionment that can by law be made during the season of crop of the 40 hours' labour per week to which the employer is entitled; and I have the pleasure to state, that in a very ample opportunity of learning the sentiments of the managers, I became acquainted with but very few complaints against their gangs, and was equally gratified, on special inquiry from the latter, to find this state of things to be reciprocal.

EXTRACT of a DESPATCH from Lieut.-governor Sir Dudley Hill to Mr. Secretary Spring Rice, dated St. Lucia, 3 Nov. 1834.

No. 335.

SINCE I had the honour of forwarding my last Despatches, an Ordinance has passed the Legislative Council, and is herewith transmitted:

Ordinance, No. 7, passed 23 October 1834; printed in the Appendix (B), No. 61.

No. 7, An Ordinance to abolish the office of Commissary Commandant, and to substitute in lieu thereof the title and jurisdiction of a Justice of the Peace; by which several objects of no little importance were effected.

The duties of the situation are defined and comprised in one law, instead of being derived from a mixture of ordinances, mandates from the Governor, and even from alleged usage; and some advantage is obtained by giving a designation to the appointment, which may serve as an indication of an approach to a system more nearly resembling that of the mother country.

I have included all the special justices in the general commission of the peace, which was issued on the promulgation of this ordinance; and I trust this extension of their authority over all persons indiscriminately will give increased efficacy to their exertions in behalf of that numerous class for whose protection they were at first specially appointed; and on the other hand, having increased the number of voluntary magistrates under the Order in Council of 5th June last, I fully expect that its provisions will receive no less watchful attention than formerly.

I beg to inform you that in the course of the present month it is my intention again to make a tour through the whole Island, for the purpose of explaining to the apprentices the second clause of the ordinance, No. 4, enacted on the 1st August last, and I trust by so doing to obviate any misapprehension they may entertain respecting the apportionment during crop of their legal hours of labour, which at that period may be distributed differently, though not in the aggregate exceeding the specified term of 40 hours per week.

It is with no ordinary satisfaction that I profit by this opportunity to inform you that the tranquil and orderly conduct of the apprenticed labourers fully justifies my giving you an assurance which cannot fail to be gratifying to His Majesty's Government, and that is, that the abolition of slavery has not up to this period interrupted the industry which was customary previously to that happy event; and I may be forgiven for adding, that in an unusually fine season and an escape from the desolating scourge which so fearfully visited the closely neighbouring Colony of Dominica, Providence has given to this Island additional and very marked motives for thankfulness.

It has afforded His Majesty's Government the highest satisfaction to receive from you the assurances contained in the last paragraph of your Despatch, that the quiet and orderly conduct and industrious habits of the apprenticed labourer are such as would justify you in anticipating the most happy results from the abolition of slavery in the Colony under your government.

No. 337. Ordinance, 1 Dec. 1834; printed in the Appendix (B.) No. 62.

I HAVE the honour to transmit herewith the following public Act, passed by the Legislative Council of this Colony, which I request you will be pleased to submit for His Majesty's approbation, viz.:

EXTRACT of a DESPATCH from the Earl of Aberdeen to Lieutenant-governor Sir Dudley Hill; dated Downing-street, 8 April 1835.

No. 338.

THE Ordinance passed by yourself and the Council of St. Lucia, in the month of December last, fixing the taxes for the service of the year 1835, imposes a poll-tax upon the apprenticed labourers, to be paid by themselves, except in the case of domestic servants. In anticipation of the probable disallowance of this enactment, it is provided that, in that contingency, the impost should be transferred from the apprenticed labourer to his employer. His Majesty has been pleased to disallow so much of this law as subjects the apprenticed labourer to any share of the burthen; the result will consequently be not to diminish the annual revenue, but to render the proprietary body liable to the payment of the whole.

Although described by the same name, no two sources of revenue can be more distinct in their principle, or in their effects, than a poll-tax, exigible indifferently from every adult member of the colonial society, and the poll-tax which was formerly payable by the owner of slaves, calculated upon the number which he might happen to possess. His Majesty cannot sanction an enactment in which due regard is not had to the distinctions between the rich and the poor, and between those who have and those who have not the bodily strength necessary for earning the means of payment. A still more weighty objection is founded on the inequality of an impost which confounds together, in one equal pecuniary liability to the State, those who have the entire command of their time and the choice of their own employment, and those who, during three-fourths at least of the working hours of every day, are bound by law to labour in the service of another, for a fixed remuneration, intended to supply their indispensable wants only.

The Ordinance establishing rules and regulations for the rural police contains a clause, numbered 12, of which the indirect effect would seem to be that of rendering it illegal for an apprenticed labourer to quit the plantation to which he may belong, without the consent of his employer. There is no objection to this rule, if properly qualified. No restraint should be placed on the apprentice proceeding to any place of public worship, or to the public market, or to his own place of abode, when beyond the limits of the estate, or to any neighbouring place where he may have engaged himself to labour for hire, it being carefully provided that none of these causes of absence should be available as a reason for the neglect of his appropriate duties during the 45 hours of weekly labour which are due by law to the employer. The Ordinance should be so far amended as to obviate this objection.

You will by this means be in more complete possession of the views of His Majesty's Government on the subject of the extinction of slavery, than if Mr. Stanley had written to you a separate Despatch applicable only to the peculiar circumstances of the Settlement which you superintend.

Upon this, the first announcement of the benevolent designs of His Majesty's Government, Mr. Stanley relies upon your adopting a line of conduct similar to that which is recommended in the Circular to the Governor to whom it is addressed; and upon your exertion of the decision, prudence and caution which the critical circumstances of the time may render peculiarly necessary.

Sir, Government House, Honduras, 17 July 1833.

No. 342.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 21st May, enclosing Mr. Secretary Stanley's Circular Despatch of the preceding day; in reference to both of which I beg you will assure Mr. Secretary Stanley that no exertion shall be wanting on my part to fulfil the instructions which have thus been transmitted to me. This Settlement I am happy to say is, and has been for some time past, perfectly quiet and tranquil; some anxiety certainly prevails, both on the part of the slaves and their owners, as to the result of the Bill which all parties are now fully aware is about to be brought before Parliament for laying the groundwork for the extinction of slavery; but I do not apprehend that any disturbance or insubordination will arise, provided the question is set at rest within a given time. Well disposed, however, as all parties in this Settlement now are, protracted anxiety might lead to dangerous excitement. I calculate our slave population to amount to 3,000; and would beg to call your attention to the fact, that the anomalous description of this place will exclude them from the benefit of the proposed Act for their relief, unless the Settlement of Honduras is specially alluded to therein. I would also observe, that it has long been the custom here to sell slaves for their freedom; that is, an owner wishing to do a service to the slave, binds himself, or sells the slave to another on condition to give him freedom after a limited number of years. Thus A sells a slave (worth perhaps 400*l.* currency) to B for 250*l.*, upon condition that said slave shall be entitled to his freedom at the end of seven years. Now, perhaps at the passing of the proposed Bill said slave will have served four years out of the seven; how then will the Bill affect him? Will he have a right to claim being apprenticed for the remaining three years? or, if he prefers the stipulations under which he was last sold to those of the proposed Bill, must he continue subject to the rigours of slavery for that period? There are very many cases of the above description now in this Settlement, and I am therefore the more anxious to receive instructions thereon. There is another point on which I would also request information: many slaves are too old and feeble to work at all; some are prevented from so doing by wounds or bodily infirmities, and others from mental incapacity; what is to become of these? Are their owners still bound to provide for them; can such claim to be apprenticed; and will any remuneration be allowed to the owners on their account? I also feel some doubt as to whether apprentices are to be considered as the property of their masters; that is, whether in the event of the death or insolvency of a master, the remainder of the service of an apprentice can be claimed by his heirs, or taken in execution by his creditors.

EXTRACT of a DESPATCH from Colonel Cockburn to Mr. Secretary Stanley; dated Government House, Honduras, 29 October 1833.

No. 344. I HAVE the honour to transmit herewith, for your perusal and consideration, a Memorial, drawn up by the principal slave owners and inhabitants of Honduras, in reference to the late Act for the Abolition of Slavery. To each of the statements this memorial contains I have given the utmost attention, and I consider it but justice on my part to bear testimony to the fairness and accuracy which prevails throughout. The fact so much dwelt upon, of the slaves and free labourers having been employed under the same rules and regulations, is beyond dispute. I have made it a point to visit the mahogany works, with a view to ascertaining the treatment experienced by the slaves, and a happier or more contented set of beings I have seldom seen. The description of their labour varies according to the seasons of the year, but at no period has an objection ever been raised on account of overwork. During the trucking or dry season, the cutter, of necessity, avails himself of the coolness of the night for getting out his wood; but so far from this being objectionable, I feel certain the slaves, were it left to their own option, would by no means wish it to be otherwise. I have witnessed this species of mahogany harvest-home with the greatest pleasure; a more enlivening scene cannot be imagined. The roads in many places over which the trucks must pass are cut through luxuriant palm groves; the cattle are of the finest description, the men in the highest spirits, and the whole scene most brilliantly illuminated by the numerous pitch-pine torches with which it is accompanied. On these, as on other occasions, the free labourer and slave work together; but though with the gangs for months together, it would be impossible to discover the one from the other, unless they were separately pointed out. It is true I have had occasion to notice some instances of cruelty and oppression towards the slaves, but this, as far as my experience goes, has invariably been confined to those employed for domestic purposes, and strange to say, in almost every instance, under the direction or at the instigation of females; but such cases, I am happy to say, have been very few, much fewer in proportion to our numbers, (and I say it to the honour of the Settlement,) than in any other part of the world where slavery has prevailed. The amount to be awarded by the Commissioners in remuneration for slaves in this Settlement will, I should think, under the stipulation of clause 45 of the Slave Bill, be of a higher amount than in any of the Colonies: 300 l. and 400 l. currency have been common prices for healthy active labourers, and females have borne a proportionate value: however, be the remuneration what it may, it is of vital importance to the welfare of the owners that they should receive the same with the least possible delay, and on this point I would respectfully solicit your particular attention to the last paragraph but one of the memorial. Slave property, as therein stated, is almost the only security on which it has been possible to raise money for years past, or on the faith of which advances in provisions, and other articles which cannot be dispensed with, are made by the merchants to the mahogany cutters. This resource is now at an end; for under the existing uncertainty, and the consequent depression in the value of slaves, this species of property could only be disposed of at a ruinous sacrifice. Persons employed in the Colonies are connected with houses in England, on which they can fall back in case of need; but not so in this Settlement: here the mahogany cutter depends on himself alone; he has no mortgagees with mutual interest to support his credit; the little he has is his own, but it is his all. I have gone into the point more at large, in the anxious hope that, as the 62d clause of the Bill vests the power of making all laws for this lace, relating to the emancipation of slaves, in His Majesty in Council, the angements for Honduras may be at once decided on; and believe me, Sir, cannot confer a greater boon on its inhabitants than by using your powerful in ce to this effect.

Sh l any reference be deemed expedient to either magistrates, public meeting or abitants, I feel satisfied that one and all will cordially and zealously endeavou fulfil the wishes of His Majesty's Government.

I cannot

I cannot conclude this letter without again referring to the loyalty and good feeling which prevails throughout this Settlement, and I am the more prompted in so doing by the conviction that it is the best means I can adopt of recommending the memorial now transmitted to your attention and favourable consideration.

Enclosure in No. 344.

Meeting of Inhabitants, Slave Proprietors, and Representatives of Absentees, held at the Court-house, Belize, Honduras, the 21st day of October 1833.

Enclosure in No. 344.

William Gentle, esq. was unanimously chosen chairman, and stated, "that this meeting, comprising the principal slave proprietors of the Settlement, and also representing the principal absentees, is convened for the purpose of taking into consideration the Bill passed by Parliament for the abolition of slavery; and conformable with the 44th clause thereof, to elicit an expression of the sentiments of the colonists thereon, and of calling on them for their aid in carrying the same into effect."

A deputation, consisting of the chairman, John S. August and George Hyde, esqrs., were then appointed to wait upon His Majesty's Superintendent, and having returned, the chairman stated that His Majesty's Superintendent had nothing particular to communicate to the meeting excepting the Bill, but that he would be ready to co-operate with the meeting in any measure for the welfare of the Settlement.

At the request of some of the members, sundry clauses of the Bill were read to the meeting.

The following Resolutions were read, and unanimously agreed to:

1st. Resolved, That it is the opinion of this meeting, that every facility should be given in carrying into effect the measures adopted by Parliament for the extinction of negro slavery, and that the members of this meeting are ready and willing to co-operate accordingly, so far as the peculiar local situation of the Settlement will admit, from the assurance of justice being done the proprietors of slaves in the appropriation of the compensation money voted by Parliament.

2dly. Resolved, That in consequence of the very high price of labour in this Settlement, a corresponding high value has always been placed upon slaves; the proprietors are therefore in justice entitled to a proportionate compensation.

3dly. Resolved, That by a long course of mild treatment, and a liberal portion of the fruits of their labour having been bestowed on them towards promoting their personal comfort, the slave population of this Settlement are brought to an advanced state of improvement; in proof thereof, the same regulations by which they are governed in the business of wood-cutting, which is here their only employment, is applied to the free labourers, who voluntarily place themselves under the same regulations and management in every respect.

4thly. Resolved, That in the detail of such regulations as may be made for the government of apprenticed labourers, should the same materially interfere with the present system of the slave and free labourer working in conjunction, it will be the means of rendering the services of the former class unavailable, and defeat the object of combining the welfare of the negro with the interest of the proprietors; for that, during two months of the year, or the trucking season, the business of wood-cutting cannot be carried on by limiting the labourers to a certain number of hours work per day; and if such is persisted in, wood-cutting by apprenticed labourers must be abandoned.

5thly. Resolved, That it is to be hoped the protecting arm of His Majesty's Government will be extended towards this Settlement, and by its especial care afford such salutary protection to the wood-cutters in the home market, so as to enable them to meet the additional expense to be incurred by the new order of things and to compete with foreigners, otherwise mahogany must cease to be an article of export from this Settlement.

6thly. Resolved, That in order to ascertain the rate at which slaves have been sold for the eight years previous to December 1830, agreeable to the Bill, the Committee hereafter to be named be requested to call upon all persons who may have sold as well as those who have purchased slaves within the specified time, to give in lists of sale or purchase, showing the names of the slaves and price, and to affix an affidavit to the same.

7thly. Resolved, That the members of the Supreme Court and magistrates shall form a joint committee for the purpose of carrying into effect the object of this meeting; and that a memorial be prepared to accompany these resolutions and founded thereon, be laid before his Excellency His Majesty's Superintendent, with a request that the same be laid before His Majesty's Government; and that when the committee assembles on business, five shall form a quorum.

8thly. Resolved, That a copy of the proceedings of this meeting be also forwarded to the agent for the Settlement.

The chairman then proposed that this meeting do adjourn until Saturday next, the 26th instant, which was unanimously agreed to.

HONDURAS.

Saturday, 26 October 1833.

The meeting adjourned from Monday the 21st instant, re-assembled this day; William Gentle, esq., in the chair.

The chairman then laid before the meeting the following Memorial to His Majesty's Superintendent, drawn up by the committee, according to the 7th Resolve of the 21st instant, which was ordered to be read, and was unanimously approved of and adopted by the meeting.

To his Excellency Colonel Cockburn, His Majesty's Superintendent, Commander-in-Chief, &c. &c. &c.

We the inhabitants of the British Settlement of Honduras, slave proprietors and representatives of absentees, in public meeting assembled, beg leave to approach your Excellency with feelings of the most profound respect.

In presenting your Excellency with these resolutions at this momentous crisis of colonial affairs, we rely with confidence on a continuance of that deep interest you have invariably manifested in promoting the welfare and interest of this Settlement; and we beg to assure your Excellency that these resolutions have been passed fully confiding in the justice and honour of His Majesty's Ministers, and in the firm belief that sufficient compensation will be given to us, the proprietors, for losses sustained by the alienation of property solemnly guaranteed by the British nation.

By placing before your Excellency a true and comprehensive statement of the actual condition of the slave population of this Settlement, we will best explain the resolutions of our meeting, and the reasons why a high value has always been placed upon our slaves, independent of the prices at which they have been actually sold; and from the knowledge your Excellency has acquired of the real state of that class of persons, by several years' residence amongst us, you will be able duly to appreciate its correctness.

In the first place, the slaves of this Settlement receive by custom the benefit of one sixth part of their labour, or one day in the week; for this they are paid by their master, whether sick or well, every six months, without any deduction, at the rate of 3*s.* 4*d.* per day, or 8*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.* per annum. They receive stipulated quantities of clothing yearly.

The slave and free labourer, whether in the mahogany works or at Belize, are provided with an equal weekly allowance of the best Irish mess pork, flour or plantains; the slave is regularly supplied with a proportion of spirits, tobacco, pipes, powder and shot, being in possession of fire arms: the above-mentioned articles, together with medical attendance, brings the expense incurred for the maintenance of each slave to 20*l.* sterling per annum.

The use of the cart-whip as a stimulus to labour, if ever in use, has entirely ceased, the present generation know nothing of its existence; as the best proof of this, the hired free labourer voluntarily submits to and is under the same management as the slave.

During nine months of the year labour is performed by task-work, both by the free labourer and slave, and this is generally finished in five and seldom exceeds six hours; the remaining part of the day is spent as the slave thinks fit.

It may not be improper to observe that there are no gangs at present employed in cutting mahogany exclusively composed of slaves, half of each gang being free labourers.

And while the freeman and slave labour together side by side, are subject to the same restraint and management in every respect, eat, drink and sleep together, it is surely not saying too much, that while slavery or compulsory labour exist under any shape as regards this Settlement, there can scarcely be a medium between its present condition and unqualified emancipation.

As regards female slaves, it may be observed, they are never employed in what may be termed field labour, their duties being entirely of a household or domestic nature.

The humanity thus shown by the inhabitants of this Settlement towards their slaves, by granting them so large a portion of their labour, and otherwise studying their comfort, has proportionably rendered them valuable when compared with those differently treated; it has at least brought them to that state of improvement, that they mix with and are governed in the mahogany works in the same manner as the free labourers.

It is however necessary to remark, that the free labourers alluded to are for the most part foreigners; few of the native free blacks possessing sufficient industry to induce them to engage as labourers in the cutting of mahogany, being satisfied with a mere animal existence, procured it is in indolence and idleness: a few instances to the contrary may be found, but the above is their general character, without the possibility of contradiction.

From the foregoing statement of the relative situations of the free and slave labourers, your Excellency will clearly perceive why so much anxiety has been evinced by the meeting in framing their 4th resolution, in which they have endeavoured to point out the impossibility of cutting mahogany by means of apprenticed labourers, with limited hours of labour, during a particular season of the year; for most assuredly during the dry season or trucking time, if the work is not carried on during the night, which is the part of the 24 hours in which the intense heat of the climate renders it absolutely necessary to drag out the wood, as the oxen employed in this work, if worked during the heat of the day, would be perfectly unable to endure the fatigue; any alteration therefore of limiting the hours of work of apprenticed labourers during the period above mentioned, will render it impossible to employ them in wood-cutting, the proprietors will be deprived of the benefit of their labour, and and thus be compelled to abandon them, in which case they will be driven to the necessity of cultivating small spots of ground, earning thereby a bare subsistence, and in fact retrograding into a state of almost savage barbarism. It is worthy of remark, as regards the work done in the night during the trucking season, whatever time it may occupy, more than an equal portion of time is granted to the freeman and slaves during the day.

In reference to the high price of labour in this Settlement, we have to point out to your Excellency, (as a belief may obtain that free labourers being easily procured, the loss sustained in being deprived of our slaves will be less felt,) that free labour has been employed in every possible way, and found of itself too expensive for wood-cutting to support.

In proof of this assertion, we have appended to this communication a correct statement of the expenses of a gang consisting of 36 free labourers; this, when compared with the expense incurred by the same number of slaves under similar circumstances, will show the consequent loss sustained by the employer of freemen only. To this we beg to refer your Excellency.

By the statement alluded to, you will perceive that there is a difference of 24 l. in favour of each slave annually, which is the true loss the proprietor sustains by the manumission of his slave.

It may be argued that the chances of mortality will make a considerable reduction in the number of slaves in the course of a certain number of years. To this we would answer, that in those establishments where the number of the sexes are nearly equal, it is a circumstance well known to every inhabitant of the Settlement that the natural increase more than compensates for the contingencies of mortality, and this to a degree that will bear comparison with many healthy situations in Europe. Such being the actual state of things, we trust your Excellency will perceive that our claim to more than ordinary compensation is founded in justice and equity.

We will still trespass upon your Excellency's time, in adverting to the great amount of the imports and exports of this Settlement (supported by slave labour), and the consequent consumption of British manufactured goods, which, when compared with the small number of inhabitants, is a strong argument why a higher scale of compensation should be used in awarding us payment for our slaves. We have further to say, our claim to more than ordinary compensation has been fully recognised by His Majesty's Government on a former occasion, when payment was made to the proprietors of certain slaves emancipated by Colonel Arthur.

Finally, that as slave property is the principal stock or capital available for the purposes of security for the payment of debts or advances made to the proprietors in their business of mahogany cutting, unless speedily compensated for the same, great inconvenience, if not ultimate ruin, will be entailed on the greater part of them.

We shall now conclude, with expressing a hope that your Excellency will be pleased to take into your serious consideration a subject of such vital importance to this Settlement; and at the same time we beg to assure you, that nothing but a wish that the great losses that must accrue to us may be fully known to His Majesty's Government has dictated this address, and in the firm assurance that your Excellency's best endeavours will be exercised in protecting the interests of those under your government.

Leaving a difference of 24 l., which a free labourer costs more than a slave, and which is the true loss the proprietor sustains annually by the emancipation of his slave. Thirty-six free labourers, at 69 l. each per annum, amounts to 2,484 l., and 36 slaves, at 45 l., according to the above statement, amounts to 1,620 l., leaving a balance of 864 l. in favour of slave labour for every gang composed of 36 hands, and which additional charge wood-cutting cannot support. There is a difference in the quantity of provisions allowed each class, which arises arises from the circumstance that the slave receives provisions for the whole year, including all lost time, the hired labourer only for the time he is employed.

Copy of a DESPATCH from Colonel Cockburn to Mr. Secretary Stanley.

Sir, Government House, Honduras, 10 Jan. 1834.

No. 345. Having duly received the copy of the Act of Parliament, 3 & 4 William 4, c. 73, for the Abolition of Slavery, as also the minute of a proposed Order in Council, dated 19th October, descriptive of those measures to be taken by the Governors, Council and General Assemblies in the Colonies possessing representative legislatures, or by the local legislatures in the Colonies subject to His Majesty's legislative authority, I lost no time in affording to the members of the Supreme Court, and to the Bench of Magistrates, an opportunity of perusing these documents; I also communicated to the same persons the substance of your circular Despatch of the same date as that of the Order in Council, and in conformity with their wish I subsequently called a public meeting for the purpose of making more generally known the contents of the Act of Parliament, and of the proposed Order in Council. A copy of the message I sent down to the meeting on the occasion is herewith enclosed.

The meeting (which assembled on the 13th Dec.) appeared to take great interest in the subject offered to consideration, and having appointed a committee to draw up such remarks as it might be deemed expedient to offer on the occasion, adjourned to the 31st December; having re-assembled on that day, they again adjourned to the 10th January (this day), and I have just been informed that a further adjournment has taken place until the 25th instant. There is every wish expressed by the leading persons, indeed I may say by all of this community, to meet to their utmost, and to be satisfied with, the views and intentions of His Majesty's Government; still, however, I cannot see any sufficient cause for the delay which has taken place, and I therefore feel the more anxious to receive your definite instructions, and the necessary authorities, as mentioned in the 72d clause for carrying the Act into effect in the settlement of Honduras. These once received, I shall anticipate no positive difficulty in our further proceedings. The authority first required is the Order of the King in Council for establishing a registry of slaves. The appointment of the Commissioners is also anxiously looked for. With respect to the special justices, I have stated in a former Despatch that two or three, making Belize their place of principal residence, would best answer all the purposes required of them. One police settlement of one sergeant and 10 privates, in my opinion, would also be quite sufficient, provided these men were also resident at Belize, and subject to the orders and disposal of the special justices, either as constables, or to act as boatmen, or in any other way their services might be required. Under the 3d clause of the Bill several persons have already claimed and received their freedom; there are, however, two points with respect to this clause on which I beg to solicit your further instructions; viz. if a slave arrives in England subsequent to the passing of the Act, and previous to the 1st August 1834, the day on which slaves will become prædial labourers, will such slave be excluded from the benefit of claiming freedom?

If a woman was in England many years ago, will the children that she has born subsequent to her return to this country, but previous to the passing of the Act, have any claim to freedom?

I have, &c.

Government House, Honduras, 18 December 1833. Enclosure in No. 345.

His Majesty's Superintendent has called the present special public meeting for the purpose of furnishing for its information two documents which have been officially transmitted to him by Mr. Secretary Stanley.

The first is a copy of the Act of Parliament, 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 73, for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies. The second is the minute of a proposed Order in Council indicative of the views of His Majesty's Government as respects the various legislative measures which remain to be taken in the Colonies for carrying into more detailed effect the provisions of the said Act.

These documents being thus generally made known, His Majesty's Superintendent has only to add, that should the public meeting wish to offer any remarks thereon as applicable to this Settlement, he shall most readily transmit the same for the information of the proper authorities at home.

— No. 346. —

Copy of a DESPATCH from Mr. Secretary Stanley to Colonel Cockburn.

Sir, Downing-street, 16 April 1834.

I have received your Despatch of the 10th January, requesting explanations on the following points; viz. No. 346.

1st. "If a slave arrives in England subsequent to the passing of the Act, and previous to the 1st August 1834, the day on which slaves will become prædial labourers, will such slave be excluded from the benefit of claiming freedom?"

2d. "If a woman was in England many years ago, will the children that she has born subsequent to her return to Honduras, but previously to the passing of the Act, have any claim to freedom?"

In answer to the 1st question, the 3d section of the Slavery Abolition Act, 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 73, declares absolutely free "all slaves who may at any time previous to the passing of this Act have been brought, with the consent of their possessors, and all apprenticed labourers who may hereafter, with the like consent, be brought into any part of the United Kingdom." Here is no reference to the case of a slave brought into this kingdom after the passing of this Act. As this section was introductory of a new, and not declaratory of an existing law, I think that persons in this predicament are not affected by it. The law as it stood before the Act did not render freedom the consequence of a temporary residence in this kingdom. My conclusion, therefore, is, that if between the 28th of August 1833, the date of the Act, and the 1st of August 1834, the time when slavery ceases, a slave should be brought by his owner from Honduras to England, and should then return from England to Honduras, such a slave would not be emancipated under the 3d section, but would till the 1st of August 1834 continue in slavery, and would then become an apprenticed labourer.

In answer to the 2d question, my opinion is, that if a woman who was formerly in this country returned to Honduras, and there resumed her servil condition, and in that condition became the mother of children, the mother herself would be emancipated by the 3d section of the Statute, but that the children would not. The ground of this conclusion has already been noticed. The clause in question confers the right, but does not recognise its antecedent existence. It is in the case supposed a statutory manumission of the mother, and nothing is more clear than that a mother may be manumitted and her children continue slaves. Had it been a statutory declaration that the mother's residence in England had the legal effect of an emancipation, it would have followed that from the commencement of that residence she could have born none but children of free condition.

I avail myself of this opportunity to notice your Despatch of the 17th July 1833, which I received from you in September last; and, with reference to the 1st question therein proposed, respecting the duration of the apprenticeship of those slaves who may already be entitled to freedom in expectancy, after a fixed term of years, I have to transmit to you a copy of a communication which I have HONDURAS. I have received on the subject from the Commissioners of West India Compensation, and to acquaint you with my concurrence in their opinion.

20 January. With regard to the maintenance of the negroes during the apprenticeship, and to the nature of the proprietary right to their services, upon which points you appear to have felt some doubt, I need only refer you to the 11th and 10th clauses of the Slavery Abolition Act. It is obvious, however, that after the expiration of the apprenticeship, the maintenance of the aged and infirm who are unable to support themselves will fall upon the Settlement generally.

Office of Commissioners of Compensation,
Sir, No. 25, Great George-street, 20 January 1834.

Enclosure in No. 346. We have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 14th instant, enclosing an extract from a Despatch from the Superintendent of Honduras, in order that we may take into consideration the questions arising out of it respecting persons held in slavery in that Settlement, under the peculiar circumstances therein stated.

These circumstances and questions are set forth in the extract as follows:

"It has long been the custom here to sell slaves for their freedom, that is, an owner wishing to do a service to the slave, binds himself, or sells the slave to another on condition to give him his freedom after a limited number of years. Thus A. sells a slave (worth perhaps 400 l. currency) to B. for 250 l., on condition that said slave shall be entitled to his freedom at the end of seven years. Now, perhaps, at the passing of the proposed Bill said slave will have served four years out of the seven; how then will the Bill affect him? Will he have a right to claim being apprenticed for the remaining three years? or if he prefers the stipulations under which he was last sold to those of the proposed Bill, must he continue subject to the rigours of slavery for that period?"

We have considered the very peculiar circumstances out of which those questions arise, and though they appear to us to be of a description hardly within our province, as relating rather to the legal position of the slave than to any claim of compensation for their value, we are of opinion that all such persons, being six years old or upwards, and registered as slaves at the time of the passing of the Act, do in fact, by the first clause of the Act, become apprenticed labourers.

We are further of opinion, that by the 2d clause of the Act, the party entitled to the services of the slave will enjoy the benefit of those services in the character of an apprenticed labourer during the remainder of the period of servitude stipulated between the parties distinguished as A. and B., and for which abridged time the owner A. has received a valuable consideration from the slave through B., but in no case can the stipulated time of servitude extend beyond the term of apprenticeship limited by the Act.

In this opinion our colleagues all concur.

We learn from good authority that the slaves in question do not amount to more than six or seven.

Copy of a DESPATCH from Colonel Cockburn to Mr. Secretary Stanley.

Sir, Government House, Honduras, 15 March 1834.

No. 348. In my Despatch of the 10th January last, I had the honour of reporting to you that I had submitted to the public meeting here the proposed Order in Council

HONDURAS.

Council of the 19th October, and which had been draughted as more immediately applicable to British Guiana, and that I had stated my readiness to forward any remarks thereon for your information which the meeting might wish to offer.

The meeting, which was in the first instance assembled on the 18th December, adjourned from period to period until the 25th January, and I now enclose the result of its deliberations.

I cannot say that I by any means agree with the meeting in the anticipation it has expressed of serious obstacles occurring to prevent the carrying the proposed measure into effect. The point most feared and objected to appears to be the appointment of special magistrates; an arrangement, in my opinion, of vital importance to the peace and tranquillity of the Colonies, and the best, indeed the only possible mode, of insuring justice alike to the owner and the apprentice.

Two special magistrates, I have already stated, will I think be sufficient for this Settlement, and I still think one police gang will suffice; but these I anxiously hope will be sent out before the 1st of August next. Having in my former Despatch alluded to this subject, I should not have troubled you upon it again, but that I have heard the agent of this Settlement (Mr. Hyde) has offered an opinion to Mr. Under-Secretary Lefevre unfavourable to the appointment of special magistrates here, because the conduct and treatment of slaves has been of a better description here than in other places, and I am therefore anxious that my opinion should be known and recorded as at variance in this respect with Mr. Hyde's.

I have already borne testimony to the general kindness and consideration with which slaves, particularly of late years, have been treated in this Settlement; but I should by no means feel warranted in recommending that the faults and omissions of apprenticed labourers, or the complaints made by them against their owners, should continue to be heard and decided upon by courts unavoidably composed, as the courts here must be, of persons who for so many years have been slave owners themselves.

Enclosure in No. 348.

Honduras, to wit. At a special public meeting, convened by order of His Majesty's Superintendent, and held at the Court House, Belize, Wednesday the 18th day of Dec. 1833, William Gentle, esq., was unanimously chosen chairman,

A deputation, consisting of the chairman, Charles Evans and James M'Donald, was appointed to wait upon His Majesty's Superintendent, for the purpose of acquainting him that the meeting had assembled.

The deputation having returned, the chairman informed the meeting that he had received a message from his Excellency, which was directed to be read to the meeting, as follows:

"Government House, Honduras, 18 Dec. 1833.

"His Majesty's Superintendent has called the present special public meeting for the purpose of furnishing, for its information, two documents, which have been officially transmitted to him by Mr. Secretary Stanley.

"The first is a copy of the Act of Parliament, 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 73, for the abolition of slavery throughout the British Colonies, &c. &c. &c.

"The second is the minute of a proposed Order in Council, indicative of the views of His Majesty's Government as respects the various legislative measures which remain to be taken in the Colonies, for carrying into more detailed effect the provisions of the said Act.

"These documents being thus generally made known, His Majesty's Superintendent has only to add, that should the public meeting wish to offer any remarks thereon as applicable to this settlement, he shall most readily transmit the same for the information of the proper authorities at home.

(signed) "Francis Cockburn."

The thanks of the meeting were unanimously voted to His Majesty's Superintendent for his gracious message of the day.

With respect to the two documents which His Majesty's Superintendent mentioned in his message as being transmitted to him by Mr. Secretary Stanley, and for the consideration of which he had been pleased to call the meeting together, the chairman stated that the contents tents of the former he supposed were well known to all present, but the latter was ordered to be read for their general information.

(Here follow the Act of Parliament and the Printed Regulations.)

Moved by John Samuel August, esq., and seconded by John Young, M. D., that a committee, to consist of the members of the Supreme Court and the magistrates, be appointed by this meeting to take into their immediate and serious consideration the foregoing draft of an Order in Council, with a view to reporting to this meeting in how far it may be necessary at this period to point out to the notice of His Majesty's Government what material changes may be required to adapt the enactments that may be framed for our guidance to the circumstances of the Settlement; and that the said committee do report thereon at an adjourned meeting, to be held on the 31st of December instant.

Carried unanimously; and the meeting adjourned accordingly.

(signed) William Gentle, Chairman.

31 December 1833.

The chairman stated, that it had escaped the observation of the meeting at the period of its adjournment, that the time and attention of the members of the committee would be necessarily engaged in other matter during the period of adjournment, and that the committee is not prepared to lay anything definitive before the meeting; it was therefore moved by George Hyde, and seconded by Alexander France, that the present meeting do stand adjourned till the 10th of January next.

Carried unanimously; and the meeting adjourned accordingly.

(signed) William Gentle, Chairman.

10 January 1834.

The report of the committee was laid upon the table and read.

Here followed the report which was withdrawn at a subsequent meeting.

The meeting having taken into consideration the report of the committee, approve of the same as far as it applies; and in consequence of the very great importance of the matter under consideration, resolve to adjourn until the 25th instant, that the committee may then report progress; and they add to the committee the names of Mr. Marshall Bennett and Mr. William H. Coffin.

And the meeting was adjourned accordingly.

25 January 1834.

The chairman informed the meeting, that the committee had agreed to this final report, which he would now cause to be read.

The following report was then read:

Report of the committee nominated at a public meeting of the inhabitants and slave proprietors in the British Settlement of Belize, to whom it was referred to consider further of certain enactments which had been framed by His Majesty's Government in reference to British Guiana, for the purpose of carrying into effect the Act of the Abolition of Slavery in the British West Indian Colonies.

The committee having read and considered with great attention the several chapters of the Order in Council relating to the British Guiana, have to observe, that as the public meeting at their sitting in October last did in their remarks on the same subject nearly embrace all the points contained in the Order in Council which can in any way apply to this Settlement, little has been left for them to do.

The committee, however, cannot refrain from saying, that the mode of government to be adopted towards the apprenticed labourer and his master, as laid down in the Order in Council, appears to them in itself so novel and difficult to be acted upon, that they anticipate serious obstacles in carrying its different measures into effect, especially as regards the duties of the stipendiary magistrates, in a Settlement where the apprenticed labourers will be necessarily scattered over an extensive tract of country, and the committee are further borne out on this question by the following facts:

1st. That in the few instances in which the slave has had occasion to complain of his owner, or vice versâ, either party appeals to the courts of judicature established in the Settlement.

2d. That crimes of a more serious nature, whether committed by the free man or slave, invariably have the same measure of justice, the offender being tried in the Supreme Criminal Court of the Settlement, at which His Majesty's Superintendent presides, the same being established under royal authority, and the whole of its proceedings conformable to the laws of England; consequently the same protection is afforded to the slave as the free, and that in minor cases in the inferior courts the same practice is always resorted to.

The committee having nothing further to add at this time, conclude with expressing an earnest and anxious hope, that His Majesty's Government will in their wisdom be pleased to direct that such regulations as they deem meet to frame for furthering the purposes of the Slavery Abolition Bill, being without the test of experience, that a suspending power be vested vested in the Governor to alter and amend such parts thereof as may, when put in practice, be found unsuitable and inapplicable.

(signed) William Gentle. Marshal Bennett.
J. M'Donald. John Young.
William Maskall. George Hyde.
Charles Evans. W. H. Coffin.

Moved by William H. Coffin, esq., and seconded by Richard C. Wardlaw, esq., that the report made by the committee to this meeting on the 10th January instant be withdrawn, and that the chairman of the committee be allowed to substitute in its place the report just now made.

Carried unanimously.

Resolved unanimously, that this meeting approve of the report of the committee now read, and adopt the same as their answer to his Excellency His Majesty's Superintendent's message of the 18th December 1833, and most respectfully request that his Excellency will be pleased to transmit the same to the proper authorities.

— No. 349. —

Copy of a DESPATCH from Mr. Under-Secretary Lefevre to Colonel Cockburn.

Sir, Downing-street, 6 June 1834.

No. 349.

In the absence of Mr. Secretary Spring Rice, but by his directions, I have the honour to transmit to you an order made on the 5th instant by His Majesty in Council, for regulating the condition of apprenticed labourers in His Majesty's Settlements at Honduras, in pursuance of the Statute of the 3d and 4th year of His Majesty's reign, for the Abolition of Slavery in the British Colonies.

Order in Council, 5 June 1834, printed in the Appendix (B), No. 65.

In framing the Bill which was submitted to Parliament in their last session, it did not escape the notice of His Majesty's Government, that both the political relations in which Honduras stands to this kingdom, and the many peculiarities by which the internal economy of that Settlement is distinguished from that of all the other British possessions to which the Act applies, might give rise to many difficulties in the pratical execution of it. To obviate questions arising from the political state of Honduras, the 62d section of the Statute placed beyond doubt the existence and extent of His Majesty's legislative authority. To escape as far as might be possible from those embarrassments which the peculiar employment of the slaves seemed likely to produce in the adaptation of the general system to the exigencies of the Settlement, I had the honour, by Mr. Stanley's direction, to apply for assistance to Mr. James Hyde, a gentleman well known to yourself and to the inhabitants at large, as long and intimately conversant with the employments, interests and habits of the different classes of the local population. From Mr. Hyde I accordingly received a letter replete with many valuable suggestions. Of that letter I enclose a copy for your information.

28 January.

In the absence of any specific advice from yourself for the guidance of His Majesty's Government in framing the necessary Order in Council, they have been induced to attach the greater weight to the counsels with which Mr. Hyde has favoured them; and which indeed had been strongly recommended by their inherent weight, and by their consistency with whatever could be learnt from other sources of intelligence.

The general result is, to show that the system introduced into the Colonies of British Guiana, Trinidad and St. Lucia, can be extended to Honduras but in a very partial and imperfect manner; and that in the adoption of any part of that system, it is necessary that there should always be on the spot resources sufficient for the correction of any errors or oversights into which persons residing in Europe must unavoidably fall in attempting such legislation. You will accordingly perceive, that while the Order in Council has laid down the general rule, that the Trinidad law on the subject of apprenticed labourers shall be transferred to Honduras, it at the same time authorizes you to introduce any exceptions to that general rule which you may think necessary, either by the subtraction of what may be redundant, or by the addition of what may be wanting. Your duty will therefore consist in maintaining the Trinidad order, as far as it may be found practicable; relaxing, abridging or enlarging it, to meet those circumstances which here it was not possible with much confidence to anticipate.

I limit myself to these general remarks. It is not impossible that Mr. Spring Rice may think it right, at some early period, to enter more at large into the subject.

I have, &c.

Enclosure in No. 349.

Sir, St. Michael's-alley, Cornhill, 28 January 1834.

Vide Parl. Papers, Part 1, printed 16 July 1835, No. 177, pages 16 to 24.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 20th instant, transmitting a copy of the heads of a proposed Order in Council, in furtherance of the Act for the Abolition of Slavery, and requesting from me such observations thereon as my experience as a merchant connected with Honduras enable me to offer, more especially as regards the effects of such an order in that Settlement; and, in reply, I beg leave to observe, that the regulations in the said proposed Order in Council being intended for British Guiana, are in most respects inapplicable to Honduras, which not being an agricultural Colony, the slaves hereafter to be apprenticed have not been in any way attached to the soil or to plantations, for during the principal part of their time the men have been, and must continue to be, dispersed in the woods of that extensive country, employed in cutting down and manufacturing mahogany and dye woods, the natural produce of the Settlement, (and to which they are restricted by the Convention Treaty with Spain of 1786), in the manner explained in the letter I had the honour to address to Mr. Secretary Stanley, on the 15th instant, and to which I beg leave to refer. The female slaves to be apprenticed have been, and must continue to be, employed as domestic servants, seamstresses, &c. And it appears to me that, in respect to the slaves to be apprenticed in Honduras under the Act, nothing further is or can be requisite or necessary than to place them in all respects on a footing with any white person under indentures for a certain term, except their being exempt from the civil and military services and offices, during their apprenticeship, provided against in the 12th clause of the Abolition Act. In this way the apprenticed labourer will have the same recourse to and protection from the court in the Settlement as any other of His Majesty's subjects; and the detailed regulations respecting special justices of the peace, and extra police establishments, would be avoided and rendered unnecessary. I have found, from a residence and experience of upwards of 30 years in the Settlement, that the labour got from the slaves was always in a great degree obtained through very great encouragement and conciliation, and this must continue to be the case, because the slaves, when they thought they were neglected or ill-used by their owners, were in the constant habit of crossing into the Spanish settlements contiguous to the British district, where they were as free, being beyond the reach of their masters; and as, on such occasions, they were sure to inveigle others to accompany them, the woodcutters in this way met with serious losses, which they could only hope to prevent by conciliating their slaves in every way in their power, and obtaining their attachment, and which has produced a degree of cordiality and familiarity between master and slave nowhere else known. And as the slaves to be apprenticed in Honduras are already on a far better footing in every respect than the Abolition Act will entitle them to claim during their apprenticeship, I would humbly suggest, the best thing that could be done for the apprenticed labourers would be to engage their employers to continue to them, during the period of their servitude, the same allowances and indulgences they received as slaves, and in return for the same quantum of labour as formerly, to be given according to the usage of the Settlement, as explained in my letter of the 15th, before referred to. The usual labour is within the number of hours per week allowed by the Act, although from necessity required partly during the night for five or six weeks in the year during the trucking season. Hitherto the slave has worked but five days in the week for his master, being always paid for his Saturday's labour at the rate of half a dollar a day, besides being fed; and on Sunday they never labour unless voluntarily, and in cases of necessity, and for which they are always so liberally paid that they are glad to be employed, and they have always about two weeks holidays at Christmas, and usually some time allowed them, in the middle of the year, to visit their friends in town.

I do not consider the appointment of a special justice of the peace for the purposes of the Act necessary; but, as the Act seems to render such an appointment indispensable, I apprehend that one such magistrate would be sufficient for the small number of apprenticed labourers, and that his residence must be at Belize, which is the principal Settlement, and where the largest number of apprenticed servants will always be collected, that he may be present to hear the complaints of the labourers of this class, on their return from their occupations in the woods, which usually happens twice in the year.

In my humble judgment, the judicial and ministerial agency contemplated in the proposed Order in Council, as stated in chapter 1, are altogether inapplicable and unnecessary for Honduras, where special justices of the peace are not necessary to protect, and still less an extra police establishment to coerce, the apprenticed labourers, at least none should be appointed until His Majesty's Superintendent felt it necessary to establish it. My opinion is that such a police establishment would do more harm than good, and that the present police of the Settlement is sufficient for every purpose of the Act, and that the duty of the special justice justice of the peace should be, at least in the first instance, to act in a great degree as a protector, and see that the same justice was exercised towards the apprenticed labourers by the courts of the Settlement, as to any other of His Majesty's subjects; and that all penalties for insubordination and non-performance of duty, shall be within the limits stated in the proposed Order in Council.

The procedure to be observed by the special magistrate in the exercise of his jurisdiction, as stated in chapter 2, could not be understood nor acted upon in Honduras, where there are no lawyers, and would be rendered altogether unnecessary if the labourers to be apprenticed under the Act are placed on a footing with white clerks and tradesmen who go out from this country under indenture to serve for a limited term, but without prejudice to the due fulfilment of their indentures under the Abolition Act.

I do not well understand the very detailed regulations for the division of apprenticed labourers into the classes as intended by the Act, and contained in chapter 3 of the proposed Order in Council; but in so small a community, where there are so few slaves, there can be no difficulty in obtaining and correcting returns with a just regard to the interest of both servant and employer.

In respect to the maintenance of labourers as proposed in chapter 4, I am persuaded the employer would not think of offering, nor would the apprenticed labourer in Honduras accept, or be at all satisfied with, a provision for his maintenance founded on the law of any other Colony: the manner in which they have been fed is pointed out in the documents I had the honour to transmit to the Colonial-office on the 15th instant.

I consider the regulations in chapter 5 proper for the guidance and restriction of the courts in the Settlement, and necessary to convince the apprentices of their obligation to serve their employers with the same diligence and fidelity as heretofore, until the end of their apprenticeship.

In reference to chapter 6, I would beg to observe, that the apprenticed labourer would, in the courts of Honduras, have a very simple, summary and effectual recourse upon his employer for payment due him for protracted labour extracted from him by force or fraud, or given voluntary, or for any other pecuniary claim; and I must at the same time point out the impossibility of any employer intimating to labourers dispersed in the woods the commencement or close of legal hours of labour, by any mode of signal visible or audible; but the necessity of this is obviated by task work always voluntarily undertaken by the labourers, from time to time, on the spot, upon viewing the trees to be cut down, and the nature of the ground upon which roads are to be formed. It will be evident that the remainder of the regulations of this chapter cannot be acted upon, as it respects gangs of free hired men and apprenticed labourers under the Act, working in the woods in Honduras; for these gangs being generally, for the greater part of the year, under the direction of a confidential and experienced slave, and where none can write, the agreements are necessarily verbal, and from day to day, for particular jobs. There is no difference made between free hired labourers and slaves or apprenticed labourers, in respect to task work, which is indeed always preferred by both parties; and there is little fear of one or other of these labourers undertaking a task they cannot very easily perform; in fact the performance of the task agreed upon cannot, from the desultory nature of the business, be looked after with anything like strictness; and on the whole, I am persuaded that any interference respecting the established modes of labour in Honduras would be as unacceptable to the apprenticed labourer as to his employer, and destructive to the good understanding which has always hitherto existed between them respecting work to be carried on.

I consider many of the enactments proposed in chapter 7 might be a useful guidance to the courts in Honduras; but the enactments 3 and 4 could not be acted upon, and are indeed rendered unnecessary by the enactment No. 5. On the subject of the enactment No. 8, I would observe, that the militia of the Settlement are under the command of the Governor for the time being, and can only be called out through him. And in respect to enactment No. 20, I believe all the vessels and crafts belonging to the Settlement are registered in the Governor's office at Belize; and I therefore consider the enactments Nos. 21, 22 and 23, as interfering with his department, and moreover, as superfluous and unnecessary.

Having never seen the Order in Council of November 1831, on the subject of slaves purchasing their freedom in British Guiana, referred to in chapter 8, I cannot judge how it would answer for Honduras; but the provision on this head, in the eighth clause of the Act for the Abolition of Slavery, seems to make a sufficient and equitable provision for apprenticed labourers purchasing their discharge on an appraisement.

Chapter 9 cannot in any way apply to Honduras, where the labourers, from the nature of their occupation as wood-cutters, are almost daily on the move from one spot to another, and periodically from one river to another, and any restriction of, or interference with, their necessary movements is impossible.

The enactments in chapters 10, 11 and 12, seem proper and necessary.

I have thus, in obedience to your desire, made such observations on the subject of the proposed Order in Council as my very long residence in and local knowledge of the Settlement of Honduras enable me to offer; and I shall be happy to give any additional information or explanations which may appear necessary in reference to the heads of the proposed Order in Council sent to me, and which document I return herewith, agreeably to your desire, although I should feel obliged by being favoured with a copy of it, to forward to the magistrates of Honduras.

EXTRACT of a LETTER from Colonel Cockburn to Mr. Under-Secretary Lefevre; dated Government House, Honduras, 24 July 1834.

No. 350. I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 6th June, transmitting the Order of the King in Council, of the day preceding, for carrying into effect in this Settlement the Act of the 3d and 4th of His Majesty, for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies; and I beg you will assure Mr. Secretary Rice, that in the exercise of the powers therein confided to me, all due caution and consideration shall be used. The discretionary authority with which I have been vested to introduce exceptions to the Trinidad law, when I may be satisfied of the necessity and propriety of so doing, cannot fail of being acceptable to the inhabitants of this Settlement; for it is in full concurrence with the request contained in their last memorial on the subject, forwarded with my Despatch of July 10 to Mr. Secretary Stanley.

I have attentively perused the letter addressed to you by Mr. Hyde on the 28th of January last; but I can by no means concur generally in the opinions it contains. My persuasion is directly at variance with his, as to the appointment of special magistrates and extra police establishments. He is of opinion that the courts of Honduras, as at present established, are fully competent to the duties of the one, and the present police of the Settlement to the duties of the other. On what grounds any one considering himself conversant with the actual and existing state of affairs in this Settlement could have formed such an opinion, I am at a loss to imagine. The duties of the magistrates to be specially appointed under the Slave Act will be very different, and ten times more burthensome than those devolving on the present bench. The latter are without any positive control over them. They go when and where they please; they stay from Belize or return to it as suits their convenience; nor in the event of their being wanted, would the knowing where to find them be by any means a matter of certainty. Would such practice and custom accord with the duties to be required from special magistrates? Again, the making the owners (which the magistrates generally are) judges with respect to their own conduct, as well as in that of their apprentices, when either the one or the other might be called in question, would be manifestly against the spirit of the Act of Parliament. With respect to the sufficiency of our present police establishment, I think Mr. Hyde must really have quite forgotten what it consists of. We have one police officer, who appoints and pays the expense of one constable (sworn in as such), to assist him. Mr. Hyde is of opinion that all the duties of the special magistracy can be performed in Belize. Here again I entirely differ with him; for were the apprentices once to imagine themselves, when in the mahogany woods, exempt from the visits of a superintending and controlling power, it would, I feel entirely convinced, operate as the greatest encouragement to idleness, profligacy and insubordination.

COPY of a DESPATCH from Colonel Cockburn to Mr. Secretary Stanley.

Sir, Government House, Honduras, 10 July 1834.

No. 351. I HAVE the honour to transmit herewith the proceedings of a public meeting which assembled on the 30th ult. Doubting whether the Orders of the King in Council would reach us before the 1st of August, I recommended to the meeting to pass a law of the Settlement, exempting apprenticed labourers from arrest for debt; considering that such a regulation might prevent much inconvenience both to the owner and to the apprentice. You will perceive that the meeting unhesitatingly adopted my suggestion, and concluded their proceedings by a renewal of their assurance to co-operate, in the fullest and most complete way, to carry into effect, as far as possible, all such regulations as His Majesty's Government may think necessary to make for the purposes of the Abolition Bill.

The

The memorial directed by the meeting to be addressed to His Majesty's Superintendent I have subsequently received, and a copy thereof is herewith enclosed. To every statement which it contains I can sincerely offer the strongest confirmation; and so fully am I aware that, if the regulation respecting the labour of apprentices was exclusively enforced, it would render the apprentices entirely useless, that, until further instructed by you, I shall take upon myself to sanction such an arrangement in this respect as may meet the views and interests of the mahogany cutters, and be in every respect unobjectionable to the apprentices.

Enclosure 1, in No. 351.

EXTRACT from the MINUTES OF PROCEEDING at a Public Meeting of the Inhabitants, held at the Court House, Belize, Honduras, on the 30th June 1834.

Message:

In reference to the 22d clause of the Slave Abolition Bill, His Majesty's Superintendent suggests to the meeting the expediency of a regulation being made in this Settlement, to prevent legal process being had against apprenticed labourers, for debts contracted by them; and rendering all civil contracts entered into by them null and void, unless previously sanctioned and approved of by a special magistrate. Enclosure 1, in No. 351.

The memorial drawn by a committee and approved of by the public meeting on the 25th January last, was transmitted to Mr. Secretary Stanley on the 5th March. No answer has yet been received, and His Majesty's Superintendent has nothing further on this head to submit for consideration. Should the meeting however, on its part, have any further suggestions to offer on any point connected with the emancipation of slaves, or the important change which is to take place respecting them on the 1st of August, such suggestions will be met on the part of His Majesty's Superintendent with all due consideration, and an anxious wish to fulfil the views and wishes of the public meeting, in this as in all other respects.

(signed) Francis Cockburn.

The thanks of the meeting were unanimously voted to his Excellency His Majesty's Superintendent, for his gracious message.

The meeting proceeded to take into consideration the clause of His Majesty's Superintendent's message, respecting the exemption of apprenticed labourers from being arrested for debt, when the following Resolution was moved by Jervis Harrison, and seconded by James Banks:

Whereas it appears by the 22d clause of an Act of the British Parliament, intituled "An Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies," that it may be expedient that apprenticed labourers should, during the period of such apprenticeship, be exempted from arrest for debt: Be it therefore enacted, by and with the consent of His Majesty's Superintendent, and it is hereby enacted by the authority of the same, that from and after the 1st of August 1834, no person or persons becoming apprenticed labourers by virtue or under the authority of the said Act, shall be subject to arrest or imprisonment for any debts, due or demand contracted during the continuance of such apprenticeship; and that no apprenticed labourer shall be subject to any civil suit, process or molestation whatever, in any of the courts of this Settlement, for any debts, dues or demands contracted during the period of such apprenticeship; provided always, that nothing contained in this Act shall be construed to interfere with the usual course of the criminal jurisprudence of the Settlement.

Carried unanimously.

With regard to the clause of His Majesty's Superintendent's message, it was moved by George Hyde, and seconded by George Adolphus, that this meeting having had reference to the minutes of a special meeting, held at Belize River's mouth, the 21st of October last, for the purpose of declaring their acceptance of, and their willingness to co-operate as far as possible in carrying into effect the Act of the British Parliament for the Abolition of Slavery, considered they had fully complied with what is required by the 44th clause of the Act, in providing for the same being carried into effect. That they can only now reiterate their former declaration made at the meeting aforesaid; and that this meeting pledges itself to co-operate in the fullest and most complete manner, to carry into effect, as far as possible, such regulations as His Majesty's Government may think necessary to make for the purpose of this Act.

Further, that this meeting do appoint a committee for the purpose of taking into consideration the various other subjects already referred to in the reports made to the public meetings of last year by their committee, and to which his Excellency states, that he has received no answer from the Secretary of State; and in particular, that the attention of the committee be drawn to the subject of what exceptions it may be necessary to recommend regarding the inapplicability inapplicability to this Settlement of that part of the Abolition Bill which restricts the period of the labour of the apprentices to 7½ hours per day, and 45 per week.

That the committee shall consist of the same persons who formed the previous committee on this subject; and that it shall be authorized to draw up a memorial to His Majesty's Superintendent on this subject.

Carried unanimously.

Enclosure 2, in No. 351.

Sir,

Enclosure 2, in No. 351.

THE undersigned members of a committee appointed by the legislative meeting, held at Belize River's mouth, on Monday the 30th of June 1834, for the purpose of drawing up an address to His Majesty's Superintendent on the subject of the 3d paragraph of his message to the meeting; having met, and after the most mature and deliberate consideration having been given to that important subject, beg leave in the first place to have reference to memorial of a public meeting held on Saturday the 26th October last, presented to your Excellency, for the purpose of being laid before His Majesty's Government; and also the report of a committee made at a special public meeting, held on the 25th January 1834, on the subject of a minute of a proposed Order in Council indicative of the views of His Majesty's Government, as respects the various legislative measures which remain to be taken in the Colonies, for carrying into more detailed effect the provisions of the said Act, leaving it to the meeting to offer any remarks thereon as applicable to this Settlement; by which memorial and report it was fully set forth and demonstrated that any material alteration in the number of hours of daily labour to be performed by apprenticed labourers, would render that class of persons altogether unavailable for the purposes of wood-cutting, and particularly for the following reasons:

First, that for three months of the year, or the trucking season, labour is performed for the most part during the night, as regards both the persons employed to load and drive the trucks; this does not arise from the whim or the caprice of the wood-cutter, but from causes over which he has no control, namely, the heat of the climate. The oxen employed for the purpose of dragging out mahogany are not so constituted as to work during the heat of the day; the great distance which wood has now to be brought to the river side, subject to the many casualties that may happen to cause detention, prevents any exact calculation from being made of the number of hours required for making a trip; your Excellency will therefore readily perceive, that it would be attended with the most fatal effect to the wood-cutters to employ persons who, at the expiration of seven-and-a-half hours labour, might, at any distance he might be from the river, say to himself, "my hours of labour have expired," and consequently abandon his charge, leaving his team of oxen to perish by being exposed to the heat of the sun, and for want of food and water.

Secondly, We also consider it of the highest importance to recal to your Excellency's consideration, what was set forth in our former memorial respecting free labour, that the free labourer in every respect performs the same duties as the slave in the business of wood-cutting, intermixed together, and, in fine, the one cannot be distinguished from the other but by personal knowledge; both generally perform their labour by task-work for nine months in the year; and while we can put it with confidence to your Excellency to say, if either freeman or slave ever complained of being overtasked, we humbly conceive we can with safety assert that the slaves of this country have heretofore never been overworked.

If apprenticed labourers could be employed exclusively by themselves, in the business of wood-cutting, their being restricted to a limited number of hours work daily would not be objectionable, at least for nine months in the year; seven-and-a-half hours being quite sufficient to perform the quantity of labour heretofore done, but the two classes cannot be separated; any alteration therefore affecting free labour cannot be carried into effect.

We can scarcely suppose, that with these facts authenticated by your Excellency, that His Majesty's Ministers, or the British nation, can have any insuperable objection that the apprenticed labourers in Honduras should be placed in the same condition regarding labour as freemen; we are the more assured of this, being convinced that the British Legislature never intended to render the labour of apprentices unavailing to their employers, but to prevent their being overworked.

Your Excellency may believe us when we express our deep regret at being constrained to advance so much difficulty in carrying into effect, according to its exact letter, the provisions of the Bill for the Abolition of Slavery, without such modification as to your Excellency may appear absolutely necessary. You will also, no doubt, readily perceive, that on the score of interest it would be preferable for the settlers to abandon the benefit to be derived from the apprenticed labourer, than to make such innovation and alteration in the present system of free labour; the slaves then, although unconditionally emancipated, could not be employed as wood-cutters, as we can scarcely contemplate the inconsistency of their engaging to perform as freemen the same quantum of labour as was objected to when apprenticed labourers; that class would therefore necessarily become a grade lower in the scale of society, by being compelled for subsistence to have recourse to that description of labour that merely yields animal existence. It will therefore be for your Excellency to modify that part of the Bill restricting to a limited number of hours labour, in such way as in your wisdom you may deem calculated to avert the consummation pointed out. As regards the non-arrival of any of the stipendiary magistrates, it may be necessary to observe, that the free labourer is stimulated to a performance of his engagement, from a knowledge of being mulct in part his wages for non-performance or neglect of duty; in like manner the slave has been stimulated to a performance of his duty from a desire to preserve his character, and a reluctance of incurring the displeasure of his owner, rather than from the dread of punishment. These stimulants have been found to act, on these different classes, in a similar way; but those ties of mutual benefit which bound the slave to his former master being cut asunder, the authority of the magistrate appointed for that purpose will no doubt be necessary to preserve orderly conduct, and to punish the apprenticed labourer for neglect of duty. We therefore contemplate with consternation and dismay the probability of so numerous a class of persons being cast loose on the Settlement in the course of a very few days, without any laws to govern their conduct; we are therefore under the imperious necessity, in behelf of ourselves and fellow settlers, to call upon your Excellency to adopt such measures as in your wisdom you may think fit, for the preservation of the lives and properties of His Majesty's subjects, as well as for the maintenance of the peace and tranquillity of the Settlement.

Sir, Colonial Office, 18 Sept. 1834.

No. 352.

I have to acknowledge the receipt of your Despatch of the 10th July, enclosing the proceedings of a public meeting held on the 30th of June at Belize; and with reference to the measure you recommended the meeting to adopt, in the absence of positive instructions from home, to meet the change in the condition of the negroes on the 1st of August last, I have only to express to you my hope that the Order of the King in Council, enclosed in Mr. Lefevre's Despatch to you of the 6th of June, will have enabled you to obviate the difficulty anticipated, in a manner consistent with the spirit of the Act. Under the impression that you will have been relieved from any embarrassment by the arrival of the Order, it appears to me unnecessary at the present moment to enter further into the contents of your Despatch.

In reference to my Despatch of the 24th July last, I have now the honour to enclose a copy of a document notified to the public here at the same time with the Orders in Council for Trinidad and Honduras; and by which you will perceive what alteration I have deemed it expedient to make in the regulations established for Trinidad, with a view to meeting the customs, habits and localities of this Settlement.

Document showing alterations made in the Trinidad Order in Council, 5 June 1834, by the Superintendent of Honduras; printed in the Appx. (B), No. 66.

It may be proper for me to add, in explanation of the alterations I have made from 2 to 15 inclusive, of the clauses contained in cap. 4, that the slaves in this Settlement received a ration doubly valuable compared with that laid down in the orders for Trinidad, and that they were paid for their Saturday's labour, which will still be the case.

Sir, Downing-street, 29 December 1834.

No. 354. Your Despatch of the 11th August last was duly received at this department, with the enclosed document, by which you notified to the settlers at Honduras the alterations which, in pursuance of the powers vested in you, have been made in His Majesty's Order in Council for regulating the condition of apprenticed labourers, in order to adapt that law to the peculiar circumstances of the Settlement.

I have to signify to you His Majesty's approbation of the substance of the measure which you adopted. The form, though very unusual, is recommended by so much practical convenience, and is at once so simple and intelligible, that an Act of far more artificial structure would probably have answered the purpose much less effectually. I do not, therefore, object to this innovation in this particular case, having regard to the reasons by which it was apparently dictated.

Sir, Government House, Honduras, 13 Aug. 1834.

No. 356. You will, I am sure, be anxious for information from all the Colonies as to the working of the Slave Abolition Bill. The period which has elapsed since the 31st July has been unattended here by any actual disturbance, though certainly much dissatisfaction has been evinced on the part of the manumitted slaves. They do not, nor can they easily be made to understand, the obligations attached to their freedom. Their idea is that the King has made them free, and therefore that the making them work for six years longer without pay, is an act of injustice. I have seen a great number of them, and endeavoured to explain to their comprehension the real state of the case. They do not dissent from what is told them; and they so far seem to comprehend it, that although several had avowed a disinclination to return to their work, yet more have persevered in a refusal so to do. It is, however, quite evident that the six years' apprenticeship has counterbalanced in their estimation all the ulterior advantages held out to them by the Bill; they look to the present only, and therefore, finding that they are not "to all intents and purposes set free, and discharged from all manner of slavery at once," they neither feel benefited nor gratified at what has been done for them. I shall not relax in my exertions to set them right; and in this respect feel confident of the cordial co-operation of the employers.

employers. Still I cannot but feel some apprehension that rather than meet the six years' apprenticeship, they will avail themselves of the facility which attends their quitting the Settlement, and proceeding to the neighbouring republics; such a result would be highly prejudicial; every precaution therefore, you may rely on it, shall be taken to prevent it. I shall continue to keep you informed on this interesting subject by succeeding opportunities.

Sir, Downing-street, 6 October 1834.

No. 357. I have to acknowledge the receipt of your letter to Mr. Lefevre, of the 13th August last. The misapprehensions which you describe as existing in the minds of the apprenticed labourers of Honduras have prevailed in other Colonies, and by advice and expostulation in many cases have been prevented from leading to any dangerous results. I have no doubt that your experience and prudence will devise and apply the best means of removing from the minds of the apprenticed labourers the impression, either that they are free from all restraint, or that there is no improvement in their social condition. I am quite aware that the position of the Settlement over which you preside is peculiar, and that cases may arise in which some of the negro population may abandon their homes for the territory of the neighbouring republics. But if the provisions of the new law are cordially and strictly carried into effect; if the rights and privileges secured to the apprentice are as firmly maintained as his obligations are on the other hand enforced, I cannot but entertain a confident expectation that desertions will not be numerous.

No. 358. The 18th and 19th clauses of the Slave Abolition Act confine the investigations of special magistrates to matters between employers and apprentices; and I therefore consider, that should an apprentice have cause of complaint against any other than his employer, or vice versâ, the matter must be referred to the court of the Settlement. I am however of opinion, that under the 11th and 24th clauses of the Order in Council, cap. 2d, special magistrates may require the attendance of any persons capable of giving evidence on any matter to be inquired into between an apprentice and employer. May I request to be informed whether my opinions in these respects are correct?

In addition to the information received from Mr. Maskall, I have reports from all parts of the Settlement, and I am fully justified justified in assuring you, that so far from receiving any complaints, the employers, on the one hand, express themselves fully satisfied with the labour performed for them by the apprentices, and the apprentices, on the other, declare themselves sensible of, and grateful for, the kind treatment they receive from their owners. At no period has labour been better, or more cheerfully performed; all parties are satisfied; and I trust I may say that the slave emancipation has answered, as far as this Settlement is concerned, the utmost wishes of its most sanguine supporters.

I HAVE the honour to transmit to your Excellency a journal of my tour up the River Belize, visiting all the mahogany and other establishments of apprenticed labourers, agreeably to your instructions; and it is most gratifying to me to relate, and I am certain it will be equally so to your Excellency to find, that during my route of three weeks I had but one solitary complaint, and that of a trivial nature, against a female; and I am fully justified in stating, that having frequently (during a residence in this Settlement for the last 18 years) had occasion to be with, and seen the management of various establishments, I have never witnessed more peace, good order and quietude than on the late occasion; and I am fully satisfied, that when the apprenticed labourers are away from Belize, and kept from those banes to society, grog-shops, and the idle and mischievous people in town, they are disposed to be civil, industrious and contented. Comfort and happiness are as much as possible studied by employer and apprenticed labourer, and every duty appears to be performed cheerfully and entirely satisfactory to both parties; inasmuch as I have observed, during my late visits in the establishments of Mr. Gentle and Mr. Anderson, in Roaring Creek, men who were very clamorous and noisy in your Excellency's presence, in the assemblage at the Government House, during last Christmas, have since that time behaved in a most exemplary manner; and their employers declared these labourers never behaved better, or so well before; and the labourers asserted their entire satisfaction with the employers during the late arduous undertaking of getting out mahogany, to the most minute scrutiny as to treatment; so much so, that the employers have declared to me, for such good conduct, it is their decided intention to reward them accordingly.

JOURNAL, 1835.

Enclosure 2, in No. 363.

26th May, Tuesday.—BEING directed by the King's Superintendent to proceed up the Belize River to visit the various establishments and mahogany works in said river, left town this morning, and proceeded as far as Burrell's Bank to-day. A few apprenticed labourers at various plantations, and at the latter place, but upon inquiry, no complaints from either employer or labourer.

27th May, Wednesday.—Proceeded upwards; called at Baker's and a few other establishments, where the apprenticed labourers are more numerous than in the journey of yesterday, but found all quiet; no complaints, except by Susannah Potts against her female apprenticed labourer; but as she was on the point of going to town, I referred her to Special Justice Grigg; arrived at Pattanet's Bank, above Black Creek, about three o'clock P. M.; issued the following notice, and held a session at four; no complaints.

"Copy of Notice proclaimed by Serjeant of Police, here and afterwards, at the several Mahogany Works during our Tour.

"I, William Maskall, one of the special justices in and for this Settlement, do hereby make known to all concerned, that I shall hold a session here this day, and therefore call upon all and every employer or employers of, or apprenticed labourers, having any complaints to make, now to come forward and they shall be heard.—God save the King."

28th May, Thursday.—This morning Mr. Robert Turnbull and part of his gang passed me for town; no complaints. Upwards, above the Great Falls; called at several small establishments on the way; no complaints.

29th May, Friday.—Visited the establishment of Mr. William M'Kay, Cochreco Bank; no complaints. Proceeded on to Mr. Robert Turnbull's Bank at Beaver Dam; all quiet; no complaints.

30th May, Saturday.—Visited Miss Mary Hume's gang at Rock Donda; no complaints. Onwards to Mr. George Hume's works at Mount Pleasant; found all perfectly quiet; no complaints. Slept at Orange Walk cattle pen.

31st May, Sunday.—Sabbath-day, rested.

1st June, Monday.—Went to Mr. William Gentle's mahogany works in Roaring Creek; flood in the same; all hands out driving wood.

2d June, Tuesday.—This morning held a session; no complaints; employer declared himself satisfied with labourers, and labourers with employer. Went to Mr. Richard Anderson's Bank above; hands all out at work.

3d June, Wednesday.—Held a session this morning; no complaints, employer and labourer declaring themselves quiet, contented, and perfectly satisfied as to all transactions during the late dry season. Returned back to Orange Walk; slept there.

4th June, Thursday.—Proceeded on to Mr. William Usher's Bank at Society Hall, above Monkey Falls; arrived about five o'clock; slept there.

5th June, Friday.—Held a session this morning; labourers assembled; no complaints by them or employer; onwards to Miss C. Paslow's cattle pen; met Mr. Samuel F. August and all his gang returning from the branch; no complaints.

6th June, Saturday.—Started early at branch mouth; about eight o'clock, A. M. entered the right-hand branch; visited Mr. Marshal Bennett's gang at the Hermitage Works; hands out at work; left notice with the captain that I shall call to see them early on Monday morning.

7th June, Sunday.—Sabbath; at Mr. Anderson's vacated bank, above the last works.

8th June, Monday.—Visited Mr. Marshal Bennett's gang at the Hermitage Works; held a session; no complaints. Rode over to Garbutt Falls, in left-hand branch; held a session at Mr. Marshal Bennett's establishment there; no complaints.

9th June, Tuesday.—Returned, calling at Miss Clarissa Paslow's establishments at Mountain Cow Fall; no complaints. Visited Mr. William Vaughan's works at Bamboo Bank in said branch; held a session; no complaints. Onwards to right-hand branch; proceeded downwards to Cakoow Run, in Main River, the bank of Mr. Samuel F. August; found he had moved to Mount Hope, at Cakoow Run. The police gang apprehended an apprenticed labourer named Jonathan Meighan, belonging to Mr. George Garnett, who has absented himself from his employer's service since the 1st of August last; kept him prisoner, complaint of bad conduct against him having been preferred in Belize by his employer previous to my departure.

10th June, Wednesday.—Visited Mr. Samuel August's gang in Barton Creek; held a session; no complaints. Returned to Mount Hope, the establishment of Mr. Samuel F. August.

11th June, Thursday.—This day held a session at Mount Hope; no complaints.

12th June, Friday.—Proceeded down the river to Beaver Dam.

13th June, Saturday.—Left the latter place; went up Labouring Creek; strong flood; got to Mr. Morris Cunningham's Bank about nine o'clock at night; found all quiet.

14th June, Sunday.—Rode to Mr. William St. Coffin's gang, above the latter bank; found all the people happy and contented. Being pressed for time, left their establishments, and returned down the creek. Slept immediately above the Great Falls.

15th June, Monday.—Downwards (flood in river) to Baker's.

16th June, Tuesday.—Returned to Belize; lodged prisoner, Jonathan Meighan, in gaol.

EXTRACT of a DESPATCH from Lieutenant-Governor Balfour to Mr. Secretary Stanley, dated Government House, Bahamas, 5th August 1833.

I HASTEN to remove any anxiety which you may feel about the reception, in this Colony, of the debates and resolutions about Slavery.

We had heard some time (nearly fourteen days before the arrival of the mail) of the debates on Monday night, the 10th of June; but later intelligence we had not until Sunday the 28th ult., when the mail of the 13th of June arrived.

I found, in the interim, that though they were perfectly quiet, there were among the slaves evident symptoms of anxiety, and a watchful desire to know what the news would be, and how their fate was to be decided.

I therefore wrote a short and simple address to them (suited to the capacity of their understandings) which was given to be printed early on the 29th; but fearful lest I should be too soon in the field, and thus excite when I intended to lull, I did not mean to have it published, and gave orders to that effect.

The printer, however, having given a few copies to some gentlemen, who were on the point of calling on me to request that I would issue something of the sort, I conceived that it would be worse to check the publication after it had thus begun, than to allow it to go forth. It was, therefore, published; and I have the honour to enclose a copy.

I am glad to say, that however anxious the slaves are, yet they are perfectly tranquil.

I called on the four clergymen here (our two parish rectors, the head of the Methodists and the Baptist missions) and explained to them what His Majesty was pleased to say, through you, regarding their duties; and I requested that the very first symptom of insubordination or impatience which came to their knowledge might be reported to me. I spoke also to one of the leading free coloured men, and to one or two other respectable persons, in the lower grade of life, to the same effect, and I am rejoiced to say that I have not received any communication from them.

In sending copies of the address to the Out-Islands, I directed a short circular to be forwarded to the magistracy, exhorting them to quiet vigilance, at the same time cautioning them against becoming alarmists; and my belief is, that in the Bahamas at least, this important moment will pass in peace.

I have called upon the Attorney General for his report how far material changes must take place in the Colonial Code, in consequence of the change in the character of the labourer. The matter is now under his consideration; and as slaves here are chattels, great part of the difficulty vanishes at once.

In this Colony there are few gangs of slaves, except in one or two of the Out-Islands, where there are salt-ponds. This is strongly in favour of the success of the plan proposed; but more will depend on the efficiency of the means by which the law will be enabled to assert its rights, and punish those who treat their apprentices badly, than on any sort of declaratory enactment.

If the Legislature here meets His Majesty's views cordially, a great deal will be done.

ADDRESS TO THE SLAVE POPULATION OF THE BAHAMA ISLANDS.

By His Excellency Blayney Townley Balfour, Esq. Lieutenant-Governor in and over the Bahama Islands, &c.

My Friends and Fellow Subjects,

You have heard that the Parliament of Great Britain is about to do something for you. I only heard yesterday what the House of Commons has agreed to do, and I hasten to let you know it, that you may not be led away by liars, or induced by ill-disposed persons to offer resistance or disobedience to your masters, nor in any way to disturb the public peace; for if you do, you will not only be severely punished, but you will prevent the Parliament from finishing what it has begun for you.

BAHAMAS.

The House of Commons (which is one great part of Parliament) has agreed to make a law, by which you will be free, but you all know that freedom does not mean that you must not work. You will be free, but you will be made apprentices to your masters for some years, and be obliged to work a certain number of hours every day for them.

In a few years afterwards, in six or seven perhaps, if you conduct yourselves well, you will be altogether free people, like those at Grant Town or Carmichael.

The House of Commons has not yet fixed when you are to begin to be apprentices, nor for how long you are to be so; do not believe any one therefore who says the change has yet begun, or that it will be immediate.

I am your friend; I will never deceive you: I will tell you whenever the time is fixed for slavery to end; that is, when you are to begin to become apprentices. But you must not forget that you are at present slaves, and that if you are disorderly or riotous I must punish you, and compel you to be quiet and obedient—so the King has ordered me, and so I will do. But I hope better things of you; I hope you will remain quiet, peaceable and obedient; if you are so, be assured that care will be taken of your interests, and better care than any exertions of your own can effect.

Vide Papers printed by Parl. 15th April 1835, Part I. No. 177, p. 8.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your circular Despatch of the 5th of September, by which I perceive that it is proposed to issue Orders in Council for the code of the Crown Colonies and the guidance of the Legislative Assemblies.

In this Colony however, from the consideration that there is not, among the various Colonial possessions of His Majesty, any one whose productions are like, or whose inhabitants are placed in circumstances similar to the Bahamians, and therefore that no Order in Council framed for another place could apply to the local peculiarities of these Islands, I have myself undertaken, with the assistance of the Attorney-General, to propose to the legislative bodies here, the necessary measures auxiliary to the Slave Abolition Law.

I trust, Sir, that you will not see in this proceeding, any ill-judged effort of zeal. It is evident that your object must be to have your measures carried into effect with unanimity and ease, and if I am guilty of anticipating or even evading your directions, it has only been done in order that I might consult the feelings of the assembly.

I proceeded, on Tuesday last, to meet the two Houses, and in a speech which I have the honour to enclose, communicated to them the plan which I intended to pursue.

The Bill which I caused to be presented to them, was to continue the existing, but about to expire, Slave Registry Law. This I propose to re-enact for fifteen months longer, with a Schedule, including in addition to the usual provisions, one column, descriptive of the occupation of each labourer for the 12 months preceding the 28th of August 1833.

I HAVE received your Despatch of the 18th November last, in which you intimate your intention of proposing to the Legislature of Bahamas the necessary measures auxiliary to the Slavery Abolition Law, without reference to the suggestions which were intended to be furnished to you by His Majesty's Government.

You will already have received my circular Despatch of the 19th October last, enclosing those suggestions, in the form of heads of an Order in Council for the Colony of British Guiana. I trust that in accordance with the instructions to that effect, you will have laid that document before the Legislature of the Bahamas for their consideration; for although some of the provisions contained in it, may, owing to the very peculiar physical and local circumstances of the Bahamas, be inapplicable to that Colony, yet I think that many of the suggested regulations, especially those relating to a system of police, and to the manner of procedure before the special justices, will be found extremely useful.

THERE is nothing of interest to communicate in the present state of the Colony; but I have, in the most earnest manner, to request that you will consider the extent of range in the Bahamas when apportioning the resident magistrates under the new law.

The separation into islets; the distances between them; the lengths of some of them, and the want of roads, and the little communication which the inhabitants have with each other, will altogether prove one of the greatest obstacles to the successful working of the new law in this Colony, for I am well aware that we ought reasonably to expect fewer magistrates than the other Colonies, if we are to be judged by our relative degrees of importance; but if considered by the quantity of ground which the whole group of the Bahamas covers, we should require more than many of them.

This is, however, a matter, Sir, entirely for your consideration.

I HAVE the honour to enclose the Colonial Slavery Abolition Law as assented to by me last week, and which I trust will be found to be such as His Majesty may be advised to approve.

Printed in the Appendix (B.) No 68.

It does not, however, contain any suspending clause, because it appeared to some gentlemen that as we can only have the expression of His Majesty's pleasure at the earliest by the July mail, if any unforeseen delay were to occur in transmitting it, we should have run the risk of being without any code for the government of apprenticed labourers, had we inserted a clause of this nature.

We have, however, by the last clause of the Act, done what will, I trust, be considered as a fair compensation for the want of a suspending clause.

A Registry Act calling on all persons to return a list of their slaves as on the 31st of July, and the way in which they have been occupied since the 28th of August 1832, has also been passed this session.

And the division of the Colony into districts for the stipendiary magistrates, with some arrangement for gaols and constables, would, I believe, have been effected, had we known how many we are to have.

The want of this knowledge has, however, been a complete obstacle to any Bill of this nature, and at present nothing of the kind has been proposed.

COPY of a DESPATCH from Mr. Secretary Spring Rice to Lieutenant-Governor Balfour.

Sir, Downing-street, 19 July 1834.

I HAVE had under my consideration your Despatch of the 19th February last, and the Act which it enclosed, intituled, "An Act auxiliary to an Act of the Imperial Parliament, intituled, 'An Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies; for promoting the industry of the manumitted Slaves, and for compensating the Persons hitherto entitled to the services of such Slaves.'"

It is a source of great regret to me, that I am unable to communicate to you His Majesty's unqualified approbation of this important Act; for I am fully satisfied that the Legislature of the Bahamas have endeavoured to perform the task assigned to them with fidelity, and with a sincere intention to carry into complete effect the measures contemplated by Parliament and His Majesty's Government.

It is under this conviction, and in the confidence that the Legislature will be desirous of completing the good work which they have thus commenced, and that they will unhesitatingly adopt the amendments which His Majesty's Government find it necessary to recommend, that I shall proceed to point out, with as much succinctness as circumstances will permit, the various defects which appear to exist exist in this Act, and the modifications and alterations which will consequently be requisite.

As the Act has been put together with but little attention to the orderly arrangement of the topics it embraces, I shall, with a view to perspicuity in the following observations, adhere to the division and method observed in the draft of the projected Order in Council, circulated for general information, and transmitted to you in my circular Despatch of the 19th October last.

Circular, printed in the First Part of the Parliamentary Paper, No. 177, p. 11.

1st,—The first chapter of that model draft corresponds with the 48th and 55th and five following sections of this Act: the subject is the judicial and ministerial agency to be employed. There is, however, little resemblance or conformity between the provisions suggested and those which have been actually adopted under this head.

The omission of the provisions relating to the division of the Islands into districts, and to the police establishments, is accounted for by the Legislature having passed a distinct Act on that subject, which I shall notice in a subsequent communication to you.

The provision made by the 48th clause of the Act now under consideration, for securing peace and good order on the plantations, although beneficial both to the employer and the apprentice, requires some alteration, in order to bring it within the scope and intention of the Act of Parliament for the Abolition of Slavery. It should be made clear that the constables who are by this clause directed to be appointed, are only to be armed with the authority of the law, and are to be responsible for the due exercise of that authority to the special magistrates, and not to the proprietors or managers of the plantations.

The right to confine for safe custody should, as regards apprentices belonging to the plantation, be limited to cases in which any others of His Majesty's subjects might be taken into custody by the ordinary constables, and to cases in which it is presumable that the apprentice having offended against the law established by this Act will attempt to escape.

Moreover, all buildings used as places of confinement, however temporary, should be regularly licensed, and visited by one or more of the special magistrates.

This same section 48, authorizes the whipping by the master, of boys under the age of fourteen, and of girls under the age of twelve, who it is said "may be moderately chastised by their employers, in the same manner as apprentices and other children and youths in England are or may be then lawfully chastised by their parents or guardians, masters or teachers, for idleness or other petty offences." Conceiving this provision to be at variance with the Act of Parliament, which makes no exception of this nature, I trust that the Assembly will perceive the necessity of repealing it.

In addition to this observation, I feel it my duty to state, that in questions of penal legislation, above all others, it is necessary that enactments should be clear and distinct, and not founded, as in this clause, upon a very loose analogy, open to misconception, and not conveying any sufficiently distinct idea to the minds of those who are to administer, or who may be subject to the law.

The 55th, 57th and 58th clauses establish tables of fees to be paid to the special justices not receiving stipends under the Act of Parliament, to the provost, marshals and constables, to jailers and workhouse-keepers, and to the colonial secretary. These fees appear to me to be of such an exorbitant amount, that I should anticipate the entire obstruction of the law, unless they are altogether abolished, or very greatly indeed reduced. In support of this remark, I will trace the expense incidental to the case of a complaint to a justice of the peace, terminating in the imprisonment of an apprenticed labourer. The justice would receive 2*s.* for the summons or warrant, 2*s.* for each written examination, and 8*s.* for his judgment. The provost-marshal, or constable, would have for his attendance 2*s.*; the same sum for each verbal or written summons; 4*s.* for the arrest, 2*s.* upon the commitment, and 6*d.* upon each mile he had to travel, both coming and returning. Then the jailer would charge 1*s.* 6*d.* for receiving the prisoner, and 1*s.* 6*d.* more on his discharge. If the prisoner should be confined in the stocks, the jailer is to have an additional profit of 1*s.*: each solitary confinement will yield him 2*s.*, with 6*d.* for every additional day; but if the prisoner is to be whipped, the jailer's remuneration is to amount to 3*s.* Thus, in a case in which there should be but one summons, one witness and one examination, the charge of bringing an offender to justice must amount to 25*s.* at the least; but if a multiplication of witnesses or of punishments be supposed, the charge for fees might be double the amount, or much more. These fees are in many cases to be paid by the party convicted, and in others by the prosecutor. There is little risk in predicting that such an enactment will prove the most effectual security which could be taken against the special magistrate having his powers called much into action. Employers will administer by their own assumed authority, domestic punishments to save the expense of invoking the magistrate. Labourers will submit to injustice rather than allow their little earnings to be devoured by these official fees.

Entertaining this opinion of the three clauses to which I have last adverted, it will be my duty to recommend His Majesty to disallow them, under the power given to him for that purpose in the 68th section of the Act.

I admit however that the question of remunerating the various parties, upon whom new official duties will be imposed under this Act, is one of considerable difficulty. With respect to the special magistrates, I am extremely unwilling that any of them should receive remuneration, except those for whom Parliament has provided a stipend. The peculiar local circumstances of the Bahamas, however, may render it impossible for you to find a sufficient number of individuals belonging to the Colony, able and willing to discharge the duties of special magistrates gratuitously. If this should be the case, and the Legislature of the Bahamas should think fit to assign a fixed annual remuneration to one or more additional stipendiary justices, not exceeding 300*l.* per annum each (the remuneration being definitively assigned to the office, and not to the individual holding it), I shall be prepared to sanction such an arrangement.

As regards the constables and other subordinate officers who cannot be expected to act gratuitously, I shall not object to their being reasonably remunerated by fixed annual stipends. As considerable expense will thus be thrown on the Colony, I should be disposed to recommend the addition of some adequate enactment, under which parties bringing forward groundless complaints should be compelled to pay certain reasonable fees or fines unto the Colonial Treasury.

2d,—The second chapter of the model draft regulate the procedure to be observed by the special magistrates, in the exercise of their jurisdiction; on that subject this Act is silent, except that the 62d clause authorizes the Governor in Council to establish forms for all summonses, writs, warrants and minutes of proceeding, to which the magistrates and others are required to conform. This delegation of authority avoids instead of encountering the difficulty, and is perhaps not made in terms of quite sufficient amplitude. Adverting however to the great peculiarities of the case of the Bahamas, I am not aware that any better method could have been taken than that which is supplied by the creation of this subordinate power of legislation.

3d,—The third chapter of the model draft provides for the division of apprenticed labourers into their respective classes. Although the sections of the Act which embraces this subject, and which are from the 2d to the 5th, from the 8th to the 10th and the 63d, might admit of simplification and improvement, I do not think it necessary to suggest any amendments upon them.

4th,—I might in like manner pass over the subject of the fourth chapter of the model draft, relating to the maintenance of the apprenticed labourers, and which in the Act before me is provided for by the sections 20 to 26; 41 & 65.

I am unwilling however to withhold the expression of my opinion, that these enactments provide amply and satisfactorily for the maintenance of an apprenticed labourer, and that having regard to the limited resources of the proprietors in the Bahamas, they deserve no small measure of praise for the humane and liberal spirit in which they have legislated both now and heretofore on this important subject.

5th,—The duties to be performed by the apprenticed labourers, and the penalties for their non-performance, constitute the subject of the fifth chapter of the model draft. In the Act under consideration, the same topic is comprised in the sections from 28 to 40, and sec. 46.

The correspondence is in general so well maintained, that this part of the law seems to me to require only the few following notices.

The 12th section of chapter five of the model draft, denounces punishments against labourers for drunkenness, fighting, insolence and insubordination. In substitution for these provisions, the 36th section of the Act authorizes the punishment of apprenticed labourers convicted before the special justices of "any offence against the person, property, just rights or character of his employer, or any other person or persons whatever." In other words, for any offence against any body, the apprenticed labourer may be whipped or imprisoned, or placed in the stocks by the order of any one special justice.

In so far as this provision extends to offences against any other person or persons whatever, besides the employer of the apprenticed labourer, it appears to me to be at variance with the Act of Parliament, which did not contemplate distinctions between apprenticed labourers and other free persons, except such as were necessarily connected with the obligations of the apprenticeship. Independently of this objection, I cannot but disapprove of the generality of the enactment which would render the apprenticed labourer liable to punishment for offences, not susceptible of any previous definition; some of which, as for instance, offences against the character of the employer, which would in fact involve all the difficulties incidental to the law of libel, certainly should be left to be disposed of by the ordinary legal tribunals of the Colony.

I hope, therefore, that the Legislature of the Bahamas will consider, whether it is not expedient to adopt the more definite provision contained in the model draft, for which this section has been substituted.

The 13th section of the fifth chapter of the model draft, forbids the use of stocks in the punishment of women, unless made after the model which the Governor shall have previously sanctioned. This provision is omitted in this Act, but as experience has shown that the omission may lead to many and serious mischiefs, you will not fail to draw the attention of the Legislature to it, and to urge its insertion.

6th,—The sixth chapter of the model draft pointed out the duties to be performed by the employers towards their apprenticed labourers, and the penalties for their non-performance. These topics are treated of in sections 16 and 19 and 27 of the Act.

The 16th and 19th sections which relate to task-work, and to contracts for hire only, render it necessary that agreements of this nature shall be made in the presence of one or more competent or literate witness or witnesses.

This enactment does not appear to me to be adequate to the protection of the apprenticed labourers, and I should therefore recommend an enactment, requiring that such arrangements and contracts as are contemplated in the 16th and 19th sections, should be entered in books to be kept on the respective plantations for that purpose; and that upon complaint made to the special justice by any apprentice labourer who may be a party to such arrangement or contract, the special justice shall be authorized to inquire whether the terms of any such arrangement or contract were distinctly understood by such apprenticed labourers entering into the same, or by such majority of labourers as are mentioned in the 16th section, and whether such labourers, or majority of labourers, entered such arrangement or contract, freely and voluntarily, and whether the same is reasonable and just, and to make such adjudication in the matter as the justice of the case may require.

In the 18th section of the Act, the employer is authorized to employ his apprenticed labourers on Sunday in carrying his stock to market by water carriage. Unless this provision is intended to be confined to cases of actual necessity, it would be a direct infringement of the 21st clause of the Act of Parliament. I should, therefore, recommend the omission of this part of the 18th section, and the insertion of an exception coincident with that of the Act of Parliament.

The observations which I have made upon the objectionable generality of the 36th section apply in a considerable degree to the 27th section of the Act, which provides, that on the conviction of any employer or other person "for any offence against the person, property or just rights of any apprenticed labourer," before any special justice or justices, the punishment of which by the Act is not otherwise particularly provided for, the party shall suffer fine and imprisonment, the fine not exceeding 20*l.* nor the imprisonment lasting more than 30 days. I think that, in amending this enactment care should be taken to confine its operation strictly to offences incidental to the relation been employer and apprenticed labourer.

7th,—The model draft next contained the chapter numbered 7, on offences which might be committed by the apprenticed labourers against the State, and the punishment of such offences.

These suggestions have been to a considerable extent followed from the 42d to the 45th, and in the 47th, 49th, 50th, 52d, 61st, 66th and 67th of this Act.

I regret, however, that I am unable to sanction several of these clauses.

The

The restrictions imposed on the apprenticed labourer by the 52d section appear to me to be objectionable in principle, and at variance both with the letter and the spirit of the Act of Parliament. To prevent the apprenticed labourer from quitting the limits of the plantation to which he is attached without the leave of his employer, would preclude the labourer from hiring out his leisure time to any one but his employer, not only is a species of monopoly of the labourer's voluntary services thus given to the employer, but the liberty of the labourer is still further infringed upon, and an additional impediment to the free exercise of his industry is created by the arbitrary regulations contained in this section, under which he is prevented from cultivating or even dealing in a great variety of articles.

I am disposed to believe that these provisions would go far to prevent the acquisition by the negro of those habits of voluntary industry which it was conceived by those who framed the system of apprenticeship would be gradually but certainly introduced, and upon the attainment of which the future prosperity of the Colony entirely depends.

It is enacted (cap. 49) that the marriages of the labourers may be solemnized by a minister of the Church of England or of Scotland, or of any known religious persuasion, or by any justice of the peace. By the 55th clause a fee of 2*s.* is to be paid on the marriage, and 2*s.* more for the registration of it; a charge which, light as it may seem, might yet I apprehend not seldom turn the scale in favour of concubinage and against matrimony. Declining as beside the present purpose the abstract question as to whether marriage ought ever to be solemnized as a mere civil contract, I apprehend that it is contrary to the scheme of Parliament and the whole policy of their measures, that on a subject so important any distinction should be made between apprenticed labourers and other persons of free condition. The dissenting minister and the justice of the peace ought, I conceive, to be at liberty either to celebrate all marriages or ought to be incompetent to celebrate any. Whatever tends to perpetuate the distinction of caste in the Slave Colonies, however trifling in itself, arises from that circumstance into serious importance.

It is provided in the 50th section, that no one shall produce an apprenticed labourer as a witness unless the party requiring his evidence shall "by affidavit satisfy the court, judge, magistrate or other authority that the evidence verily expected from the intended witness is material to the case to be tried or investigated, and that the presence of such witness is necessary to the purposes of justice." The object is, I presume, to prevent labourers from being withdrawn too frequently from the plantations to give evidence. Without denying the possibility of some such inconvenience (which is not however peculiar to the Bahamas, but is felt from the same cause wherever courts of justice exist), I apprehend that the precaution taken by this Act will practically go far to exclude their evidence altogether. Such an affidavit as the Act requires could scarcely ever be made by the public prosecutor, still more rarely could it be taken by the litigant in a private suit or action. If, before issuing a writ or summons for the attendance of a witness, the court must be satisfied of the materiality and necessity of his testimony, they must hear the cause by anticipation, and supply by conjecture the evidence to be then given. The prosecutor and the suitor must publicly disclose the whole course of the evidence they propose to give, often to the utter defeat of justice, and endless delays must be interposed in the administration of the law. The adoption of this enactment would go very far to reinstate one of the most indefensible parts of the slave code, viz. the rejection of slave evidence.

It is enacted in the same clause, that no labourer shall be competent to give evidence to any fact committed before the 1st August 1834, and to which while in a state of slavery he would have been an incompetent witness. I can perceive no ground for supposing that the veracity of a free man, though worthy of trust as to what happens when he is free, is entitled to no confidence at all as to what may have happened when he was a slave; and I cannot but think that, to close the lips of the future free man in all courts of justice upon every occurrence antecedent to his manumission, would be to keep alive for no imaginable good purpose an opprobrious memorial of his former servile condition.

For the reasons which I have already stated, it will become my duty to recommend the disallowance of sections 52, 49 and 50.

I think, nevertheless, that in case the attendance of an apprenticed labourer is required as a witness before the ordinary tribunals of the Colony, the employer is entitled to a fair remuneration for the loss of the labourer's services occasioned to him him by such attendance, and I shall not object to a provision for effecting that object.

The 8th chapter of the model draft related to the dissolution of the apprenticeship by contract or purchase. The 11th, 12th and 13th sections of the Act under consideration embrace this subject. This part of the Act appears to be open to considerable objection; the enactments on this subject are ambiguously and unsatisfactorily expressed, and they contain no provision for the security and apportionment of the money to be paid for the discharge of the apprentice. These points are however of minor importance compared with the principle upon which the appraisement of the apprentice's service is to be made.

In assessing the price to be paid to the employer for the discharge of the apprentice when effected, not by contract between the parties, but invito domino, the appraisers are required to take into account (sec. 12.) "not only the general value of the interest" to be bought and sold, "but also any particular circumstances attending the particular case submitted, taking into consideration any special damages, loss or inconvenience to which the party entitled as aforesaid may be exposed by reason of his, her or their being deprived of the service of such apprentice as aforesaid."

This enactment appears to have been borrowed from a corresponding provision in the law for the compulsory manumission of slaves, which was repeatedly condemned by the King in Council as unjust and inconvenient. The slave holder, not satisfied to obtain by appraisement the market price of his slave, insisted on having an estimate made of all his own losses and incommodities, present or future, certain or contingent, which might arise from the manumission. For example, the loss of a head driver, if not replaced by the purchase of another before crop time, might diminish the crop by one-tenth in amount; therefore, in addition to the price which would probably be given for the substituted driver, if such a one could be found, the owner demanded compensation for the risk he run of losing one-tenth of his crop. I am satisfied that such a mode of appraisement is not only unjust in principle, and inconsistent with the intention of the Imperial Parliament, but that it would throw many and almost insuperable difficulties in the way of that class of apprenticed labourers, who would in general be the most desirous of purchasing their discharge, the most likely to furnish the means of effecting such purchase, and the best fitted for the performance of the duties and obligations of free citizens. I earnestly hope, therefore, that the Legislature of the Bahamas will amend this part of the Act, so as to remove the objections which I have felt it my duty to notice.

The removal of prædial apprentice labourers from one plantation to another is the subject to which the 9th chapter of the model draft, and the 15th section of this Act are devoted.

The Act of Parliament, sec. 9, forbids any such removal until it should have been ascertained that the transfer would not have the effect of separating the labourer from his or her wife or husband, parent or child. The Act under consideration requires that the child to be so separated from his parents shall not be under the age of 14 years. This deviation from the terms of the British Statute may be pronounced contrary to law.

If any person shall remove an apprentice without the consent of the special magistrates, or if, on applying for such consent, he shall be guilty of any concealment or misrepresentation to the justices, whereby an unlawful separation shall take place then it is said, "the person so guilty, on being duly convicted of such concealment or misrepresentation, shall pay a fine varying from 10*l.* to 20*l.*" Here two offences are supposed, into one of which only concealment or misrepresentation must enter as an ingredient; yet the proof of such concealment or misrepresentation is required in order to the conviction in both cases. I have no doubt that this is a mere grammatical inaccuracy, but it would be material in practice.

The apprenticeship of children is regulated by the 10th chapter of the model draft, and the 61st section of the Act under consideration. Under this head I perceive nothing requiring notice.

Chapter 11th of the model draft relates to the alienation by sale, inheritance or will, of the services of apprenticed labourers; the 11th section of the Act relates to the same topic.

This clause authorizes the separation from their parents of children above the age of 14 years, a provision which I have before had occasion to note as illegal.

It

It provides that the interest of the employer shall not be subject to execution or sale under a judicial process. This appears to me perfectly unreasonable towards the creditor. If indeed execution sales were hereafter to be accompanied or followed, as hitherto they have been, by the seizure and imprisonment of the unoffending labourer, or by his forcible separation from his home or his kindred, there would be good reason why he should no longer be the subject of such legal process. But as those abuses are prohibited, this question is now to be debated merely between the creditor on the one hand and the debtor on the other. In that light it is of great and general importance.

In the Bahama Islands cultivation is carried on upon borrowed capital to a far less extent than in the West Indies properly so called. Yet there are not wanting in the Bahama Islands many mortgages; and if there the mortgagee be excluded from enforcing his demand against the services of the labourers, a precedent will be established for imitation in Jamaica and Trinidad. The result of it would be that the mortgagee could never enforce for the next six years his remedies for his debt. Should he seize the plantation without thereby entitling himself to services of the labourers, he must make with the mortgagor such terms as he could for obtaining those services. When the debtor had his creditor at this disadvantage it is needless to say what would be the consequence.

The last subject treated of in the proposed model draft is the relation in which the apprenticed labourers will stand to the State. Upon that topic corresponding provisions are to be found in the 14th, 23d and 51st sections of the Act. The words of disqualification for civil and military offices, employed in the 51st section, appear to me unnecessarily rigid. They forbid any apprenticed labourer from serving on any arbitration, appraisement or the like. I am unable to discover why such a person, if chosen as an umpire or appraiser, should be forbidden from discharging that duty, always assuming that the employment was performed in his own leisure and not in his master's time. He is also forbidden from holding any elective or other office or situation in His Majesty's service or otherwise, in or under His Government. These expressions are large enough to reach the case of a schoolmaster, a parish clerk, toll-keeper, and the like. Now the principle on which Parliament sanctioned the exclusion of the apprenticed labourers, I apprehend to have been, that while in that condition they could not safely be entrusted either with political authority or with military power. To carry the interdict any further would seem very bad policy, as it prevents men from rendering themselves fit for those higher stations which in the lapse of a few years they will be called to fill. To obliterate the memory and the feeling of caste, and to teach the apprentices to think of themselves as integral parts of the society to which they belong, partaking in its advantages and interested in its welfare, is the obvious policy by which all legislation on this subject should be directed.

I cannot conclude these observations without expressing my satisfaction that the Legislature of the Bahamas did not insert a suspending clause in this Act; and that they sanctioned the introduction of an enactment by which His Majesty is enabled to disallow any section or sections of it.

The course which they thus thought proper to adopt was well calculated to prevent, and will have actually prevented the serious inconveniences which might have ensued in the Colony, in case no law for the regulation of apprenticed labourers had been in actual operation on the 1st of August, or in case His Majesty had been under the necessity of disallowing the whole Act in consequence of the impossibility of sanctioning some particular sections thereof.

EXTRACT of a DESPATCH from Lieutenant-Governor Balfour to Mr. Secretary Stanley, dated Government House, Nassau, 14 July 1834.

I HAVE the honour to inform you that I have called together the General Assembly of these Islands, and that I this day opened the Session in a speech, of which I inclose a copy.

You will perceive, Sir, that I allude in it to some symptoms of insubordination among the negroes, and in my language on this head, I regret to say that I have, from prudential motives, rather understated my feelings. I fear, from accounts which have reached me within the last three weeks, that the slaves in some of the Islands are resolved not to work after August 1st, on the plea that the King has made them free, and that I, in concert with their masters, am endeavouring to cheat them of this boon. This feeling is, I find, most general among the slaves at Exuma and Eleuthera, where the largest gangs are, (excepting Turk's Islands, to which I shall hereafter allude), and the non-arrival of the special justices has made my situation more embarrassing, for, in the fullest confidence that they would have been here long since, I had not, till very lately, issued any address or proclamation to the slaves.

My reasons for this hope, were founded both on the nature of this Colony, (which I have had the honour to explain to you fully), and on the fact that in Jamaica some of these gentlemen arrived last year; I thought therefore that the three destined for the Bahamas, would probably have been sent out in sufficient time to enable them to reach their respective stations, make their arrangements, learn the nature of their local position, &c. &c., and take, if necessary, the proper precautions against any breach of the peace, before the 1st of August, which I now fear is hopeless. As, however, I had not heard of the approach of the special justices, I caused an address to be printed a few weeks ago, and about 14 days since, I engaged a vessel to take my private secretary round some of the Islands, that he might read it aloud to the chief gangs, and explain to them the real truth. In fact I am pretty well aware that their asserted ignorance of their approaching situation is unreal, and only assumed in order to furnish them with an excuse hereafter.

I also made use of the good terms on which I have ever been with the dissenting clergy here, to enlist them on my side; and as they have, from their habits and the tenor of their useful lives, no slight weight among the lower orders, I augur well from their exertions in favour of peace.

With reference to my address, which has, I am sorry to find, given some offence here to the masters, it was written with the express view of impressing on the slaves the exact truth of their position. I deem it both prudent and wise, in our present state, to take care that those, from whom alone I apprehend any insubordination, should know perfectly, both the rights which the law has given to them, and the duties which it requires from them.

Enclosure in No. 372.

Enclosure in No. 372.

EXTRACT of Lieutenant-Governor Balfour's Speech to the General Assembly.

I HAVE learned from the Secretary of State, that he has desired three special justices to proceed to this Colony; a proportion larger perhaps than strict reasoning would have led us to expect, when we reflect on the whole number furnished by England, and the smallness of our slave population, as compared with that of the other Colonies, among whom these magistrates are to be distributed; but at the same time so inadequate to the demand, caused by the natural position and local peculiarities of our Islands, that it would be vain for us to expect from them any thing like proper efficiency or power. If, therefore, the system of apprenticeship is to be maintained in full integrity, and with a proper regard to the peace of the community, and the welfare of employer and servant, it appears to me that we must supply, from among ourselves, a sufficient number of special justices. This consequence is, indeed, so clear to me, that I have sent to the Out-Islands, to 16 gentlemen, to entreat them to accept special commissions; which number, with the three from England, and one whom I mean to appoint in Nassau, will make up the whole allowed by law.

Mr. Speaker and Gentlemen of the House of Assembly,

It is evident that the duties imposed on the special justices, are neither light nor pleasing. I cannot, therefore, expect that these gentlemen will act without some remuneration, and for the means of affording it, I look to your liberality. At the same time you will have to recollect, that the small sum now allowed by law to each magistrate for house rent and the payment

payment of constables, weighs heavily, in the aggregate, upon the Colonial finances. You will, therefore, have to consider how far the present taxes will enable us to meet the expenditure thus called for, and if inadequate to that end, how they may be most easily augmented.

Mr. President and Gentlemen of the Council,

Mr. Speaker and Gentlemen of the House of Assembly,

The accounts which I have received from the Out-Islands, are not exactly such as I would wish, although I cannot say that they ought to inspire any considerable uneasiness. There appears to be prevalent among some of the negro population, a wilful, or if not a wilful, at least an unfortunate misconception of their approaching condition. To meet and dissipate this, I have done all in my power, and have, with this view, lately sent a friend round many of the Islands, for the purpose of clearly explaining the truth; and I have considerable reliance on the effect which his efforts will produce. At the same time I think, that the propriety of enabling me to call out the militia, if I think it necessary, may well enter into the subject matter of your deliberations.

I feel confident that, with the blessing of Providence, our counsels will be so guided, as to lead the Colony safely through the coming change; and I trust that I shall not be supposed to depart from the proper limits of an address of this nature, if I entreat you all, in your private as well as in your public characters, to seize every fit occasion of inculcating on all ranks and all colours, the stern necessity of maintaining a scrupulous and guarded obedience to the laws. Such, we know, ought at all times to be kept up, but in moments like the present, when we cannot expect the minds of men to be in their habitual repose, it is peculiarly incumbent on every good subject to take especial care, that he avoid all kind of provocation, for, if any excitement be given, it is beyond the power of man to calculate how far its consequences may be extended, by either ignorance or malevolence, or how they may affect the well-being and happiness of society.

Council Chamber, 14 July 1834. (signed) B. T. Balfour.

ADDRESS TO THE POPULATION OF THE BAHAMAS.

By his Excellency Blayney Townley Balfour, esquire, Lieutenant-Governor, &c. &c. &c.

Fellow Subjects and Friends,

In a few weeks slavery will be at an end, and I therefore address you, that you may all know the chief points in the new system, and that you may not offend the laws through ignorance.

Masters, remember that you must feed and clothe your apprentices, and otherwise provide them according to law. Remember, that you have no right to strike or imprison an apprentice, but if he deserves punishment you must take him to a special justice.

Slaves, you will on the 1st of August lose this name, and become free; but as I told you last year, you will not be altogether free, but for a few years you will have to work for your masters as apprentices; that is to say as free servants, who receive food and clothes, and house, instead of wages in money.

Now what is the difference between a slave and an apprentice? It is great: a master may flog a slave; he may not, dare not, strike an apprentice, or he will be punished.

A master may imprison a slave in the workhouse; he may not imprison an apprentice.

A master may make a slave work every day in his plantation; he may only make an apprentice work five days in each week, and only nine hours each day; and the master must feed his apprentice every day, and find him a house and clothing.

But some of you are sailors, and some are house servants, and of course those must work every day, and perhaps for more than nine hours. But then, in return, the law says that those who work every day shall be entirely free in four years, and those who work in the fields cannot be entirely free until the end of six years.

When you become entirely free, you will have to pay for the house and food and clothes, and medicine, which your masters are now obliged to give.

If you are idle or insolent to your masters, they will complain to the justice, and you will be punished. If your masters treat you badly or strike you, or imprison you, you may complain, and they will be punished.

And now farewell; be obedient and quiet, and the law will protect you; but if you are not so, remember the law can and will punish you.

Given under my hand and seal at arms, at Nassau, in the Island of New Providence, this twenty-seventh day of June, in the year of Lord one thousand eight hundred and thirty-four, and in the fifth year of His Majesty's reign.

EXTRACT of a DESPATCH from Mr. Secretary Spring Rice to Lieutenant-Governor Balfour, dated Downing-street, 1 September 1834.

I HAVE received your Despatch of the 14th July, reporting the measures which you had adopted, and the communications which had taken place between yourself and the Council and Assembly, in reference to the then approaching change in the condition of the negroes.

I trust that long before this Despatch reaches you, the three special magistrates sent out by my predecessor will have arrived in the Bahamas.

The representation which you make of the inadequacy of their numbers to give effect to the apprenticeship system, in a population scattered through the numerous islands, which constitute the Colony under your government, is so forcible as to be entitled to my most serious consideration. But as the total number of special magistrates has been communicated to Parliament by my predecessor, and as the provision for their support is limited by the vote of the House of Commons, it will be necessary that I should submit the case to the other members of His Majesty's Government, before I can convey to you a final decision upon it. I feel every confidence, however, that in my next I shall be enabled, to a certain limited extent, to meet your views.

Whilst I regret the difficulties to which you were exposed, by the delay which appears to have accidentally arisen in sending out three special magistrates, who were appointed by my predecessor, it affords me much satisfaction to perceive that your own efforts were very actively and judiciously employed, to make the transition from slavery to apprenticeship as safe and auspicious as possible. Your communications to the Assembly, and your address to all classes of the inhabitants, appear to me to have been well-judged; and the measure of sending your secretary round to the islands, to read the Address to the slaves, was the best that could be adopted under circumstances by which you were yourself necessarily detained at the seat of Government.

COPY of a DESPATCH from Lieutenant-Governor Balfour to Mr. Secretary Spring Rice.

Sir, Government House, Bahamas, 10 September 1834.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Despatch of the 19th of July.

As the Legislature meet on Saturday, after an adjournment of a few weeks, I shall then have an opportunity of laying your sentiments before them. I shall, nevertheless, venture on one or two remarks, in order to defend myself from the imputation of carelessness, in assenting to an Act of so important a nature, which appears to have so many failings.

The clauses containing the fees appeared to me at the time to be faulty in principle; but, as far as the apprentice was concerned, I conceive that the 59th clause amply defended him. I am, however, glad to say, that they have been already repealed by a law lately passed, intituled, "An Act to provide for the payment of Salaries to certain special Magistrates," &c., a copy of which I enclose.

Act printed in the Appendix (B.) No. 68 & No. 70.

The procedure to be observed by the special magistrates was not included in our Act on principle; it was felt that the Governor could impose whatever rules he thought fit over men, supposed to be removeable at his pleasure, or at least under his direct control; and as we did not anticipate that we should have so very few special justices, it was deemed safer to leave them as much discretionary power as possible, subject to the control only of the Governor.

In your remarks on the generality of the 36th clause of our Act, you have expressed a desire that some of the offences should be left to the ordinary tribunals of the Colony; on general principles, where the impartiality of the judiciary is necessarily supposed, this could not be disputed; but in this Colony, I fear the interests of the apprentice would have been much better guarded by the special justices, checked by their monthly report to the Governor, than by any higher tribunal.

The

The water-carriage allowed on Sunday applies only to vessels arriving from other islands, and, as the voyages are of uncertain length, it is impossible to prevent it.

There is no other water-carriage known here, so that it is in fact consistent with the clause in the Act of Parliament, but the language might have been more precise.

In the limitations of the fruits and vegetables cultivated by the labourer, in the 52d clause, I confess I fully concurred; and I regret that it does not meet with your sanction.

Experience has shown, that where no restrictions exist of this kind, the proprietor is plundered and the industrious labourer not always benefited: for instance, it may happen that A. an industrious and honest man, has Indian corn growing in his own grounds; B. an idle vagabond, buys some from him, and steals the same quantity from his master's plantation, sending it off to the market for sale. If suspected, he proves that he bought some about the time of the robbery; and thus the honest labour of the one causes, perhaps, suspicion to fall on several, gives a cloak to robbery, or rather to pilfering, and is eventually of little value to the labourer, to whom, by the same 52d clause, the permission is continued of cultivating almost every article that free negroes are in the habit of raising. With reference to the marriages of apprenticed labourers, the only addition to the existing law was the permission given to dissenting ministers to perform the ceremony, obviously meant for the benefit of the labourer. Justices of the peace have always performed such ceremonies on the islands here, where no resident clergymen are (that is to say, in all except Turk's Islands and New Providence), between people of every condition; and although I believe such marriages to be illegal, yet the Legislature refused lately either to legalize or to check the practice.

I am certain, therefore, that the negro will consider the proposed change as anything but a benefit, for his feelings of shame at having been a slave are much less acute than can be supposed; I doubt, indeed, if he feels it at all.

With respect to the remarks on the enactment, that the interest of the employer should not be liable to judicial process or execution, I beg leave to state this was entirely a boon to the labourer, not indeed to the prædial attached, but to the others, who, when the clause is altered, will be liable to be taken, if families are not separated, and removed from their homes and masters at the will of any creditor.

And as to mortgages, I do not, nor do any of my Council know of one in the Colony. There have been, in some cases, bonds given with warrants to satisfy judgment, in which certain slaves were named as the property to be forfeited in default of payment; and in these cases I know that the compensation-money is regarded by the creditor as the only property to be attached.

I cannot conclude these few remarks without expressing my own satisfaction that the only clause suggested directly by myself, being the last in the Act, has met with your approbation; although, as it was in direct opposition to the instructions which I received, I was in some doubt as to the propriety of proposing it.

I have, &c.

I rejoice to state that our community is perfectly quiet; that the punishments, under the new system, are few in number, and although in general slight, yet appear sufficient to ensure the attention of the negroes, and that in the Returns for the past month from the special justices, I find, in two districts, the Returns nil. In the others, very few lashes have been inflicted, a few hours' confinement in the stocks, or of labour on the Saturday, being all which the magistrates ordered.

I am also glad to say that there have not been any complaints from masters or labourers against the conduct of the magistrates in any one instance.

In conclusion, Sir, I cannot refrain from acknowledging most gratefully the view which you have been pleased to take of my conduct during the anxious moments of the past summer.

EXTRACT of a DESPATCH from the Marquess of Sligo to the Right Honourable Thomas Spring Rice, dated the King's House, St. Jago de la Vega, 12th August 1834.

THE very peculiar state of the Caymanas is in the anomalous position of being without laws of any sort, without any form of government, without any person with any title to pre-eminence; and which, though it willingly admits itself to be a dependency of Jamaica, is not so by any enactment, has given me some uneasiness. On intimation which I have by this packet received from Mr. Lefevre in a private letter, that he had been unable to bring the state of those Islands under your consideration, combined with a paragraph in Mr. Burge's letter to the Committee of Correspondence, wherein he states that nothing is to be done about them till he can hear in reply to that letter from this Island, has induced me to determine at once on sending there a stipendiary magistrate; and as in the present state of this Island, when its tranquillity, I think, in a great measure depends upon the exertions of these gentlemen, I could not spare one, I have appointed Dr. Hulme, a Nottinghamshire gentleman, who came out here as a physician, but who, finding the ground completely occupied, was about to return home again. He will go there in a vessel of war on Monday next. I have mentioned to him that I could in no way lead him to imagine that he would be confirmed; but that I would recommend that he should be continued. In the mean time I have directed that his pay should be issued by the Commissary General. There is no physician resident in the Island, and the place is of so wretched a description, inhabited principally by turtle catchers, that it would be difficult to induce any person to reside there on the present magisterial allowance, without the hope of making something in some other way. He hopes, as a physician, so to do; on the other hand, it would be difficult to induce a physician to live there without some other consideration. I hope, therefore, that you will be pleased to confirm the appointment. I deemed it impossible to leave the apprentices in that Island without some protection. I have also applied to Sir Amos Norcott to send a subaltern and 20 men of the West India regiment there, in order to support the magistrate in the execution of the laws. Mr. Lefevre, in his letter to me, written I fancy just as you were on the point of assuming office, directing me to use a large discretion, has induced me to take these steps. I trust that you will not think that I have exceeded the due limits of that discretion in what I have done.

Sir, King's House, Jamaica, 3d Nov. 1834.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Despatch, relative to the apprentices of the Caymanas, wherein you express considerable doubts whether they are not free subjects, and in consequence of their non-registration, absolutely relieved from the apprenticeship. In reply, I have to say, that I trust the law may not be so interpreted eventually. In the first place, there having been no law in force in that Island to render registration necessary, it appears hard that a decree of the British Parliament should, without any fault of their own, deprive them of that very valuable property, the apprenticeship. Their valuation, though not registered, appears to me to place them in precisely the same situation as if they had been registered.

Besides the apparent injustice to the proprietors of these apprentices, it strikes me that much danger would arise to this and the other West India Islands from the discontent which would be occasioned when the negroes hear that their comrades at the Caymanas have become absolutely free; they would, I fear, consider that similar advantages had been conceded to them, and concealed from them by their proprietors. The consequences of such an idea becoming prevalent, I need not say, would be most extensively injurious. Should, however, the law be decisive on the point, and that the apprentices are free subjects, I will of course immediately recall Dr. Hulme from the Caymanas, and employ him in this Island, where he is much required.

GRAND CAYMANAS.

There is another case in this Island of a nature not precisely the same, but very similar. The Maroons are holders of many slaves, and have never registered them; but regular returns of their numbers, names, age and sex, have been sent in, as a matter of course, each session to the Assembly. The Board has directed the valuators to make a separate return of these individuals, detailing the peculiar circumstances of the case, in order that the matter may be considered by the Central Board at home.

With regard to the pensioners as serjeants of police, our experience here has shown us, that no persons are to be had here fit for those commissions, excepting old soldiers; the very good pay which they receive has induced several persons from the regiments quartered here, and entitled to their discharge, to apply for it and join the police. Where I have not been able to procure these persons, we are very badly off indeed for serjeants qualified to drill the men, or keep up any sort of discipline.

Copy of a DESPATCH from the Earl of Aberdeen to the Marquess of Sligo.

My Lord, Downing-street, 16th Feb. 1835.

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Despatch of the 3d Nov. last, respecting the apprentices in the Grand Caymanas.

The doubt which had been expressed by my predecessor, whether these negroes are not free subjects, and in consequence of their non-registration, relieved from the apprenticeship, involves considerations of such importance to the negroes themselves, as well as to their masters, who derive so valuable a property from the apprenticeship, that I felt it my duty to call for the opinion of the law officers of the Crown upon the question, Whether under the Slavery Abolition Act, the unregistered slaves in the Caymanas, as well as those belonging to the Maroons in the Island of Jamaica, whom you state to be in effect similarly circumstanced in regard to non-registry, could be lawfully employed as apprenticed labourers, from the 1st August last, or whether such bodies of slaves, or either of them, did on that day become entitled to the unqualified enjoyment of their personal freedom.

The report which has been received from the law officers of the Crown, has fully justified the view which was taken upon this subject by my predecessor. They are of opinion that the unregistered slaves, as well in the Grand Caymanas as in Jamaica, could not be lawfully treated as apprenticed labourers from the 1st August last, from which day they became absolutely manumitted.

In making this decision known to your Lordship, it is hardly necessary that I should advert to the course which will be necessary to adopt in consequence. It is a duty incumbent on His Majesty's Government to see the letter of the Abolition Act carried into full effect; and however inconveniently such a course may operate upon private interests, or those of the community, it is incumbent upon them, in a case of this nature, to adopt the law as it stands, without question or qualification. I am not insensible to the apparent injustice inflicted on the proprietors of the negroes by this construction of the law, nor of the injury they will sustain, by being deprived of the services of their apprentices. It may fairly be inferred, that the Act of the British Parliament did not intend that any distinction should be drawn between one slave owner and another, to the detriment of any party. But if from accidental circumstances there be cases which do not come within the scope and tenor of the enactment, His Majesty's Government have no power to interpose. It will be for Parliament itself to provide a remedy, and to decide how far those affected by the omission may be entitled to compensation for the loss unintentionally inflicted upon them.

It is no doubt a point which requires most serious deliberation in what manner this decision should be promulgated. I am not unmindful of the discontent which may be expected to arise amongst the apprentices when they find that there are those amongst them who enjoy at once unqualified freedom, whilst they are exposed to a temporary servitude, and how difficult it will be to convince them that this is a legal distinction, and not one of preference or partiality. But the present is one of those cases in which, with every desire to relieve the local government from responsibility, no specific instructions can be given for their guidance. I must, therefore, leave it to your Lordship's discretion to adopt the necessary measures for carrying this decision into effect; and I feel the greatest confidence that the course you will take will be that best calculated to prevent future embarrassment.

GRAND CAYMANAS.

In connexion with this subject, I have further to acquaint your Lordship, that upon the receipt of your Despatch, I caused a copy of it to be forwarded to the Commissioners of Compensation for their opinion, whether any claims against the compensation fund could be allowed in respect to the non-registered slaves at the Caymanas, or to the slaves in Jamaica, the property of Maroons, who are stated never to have been registered. I enclose, for your Lordship's information, a copy of the reply which has been received to this reference, from which it appears that the Commissioners (for reasons which are stated at length in their letter) consider the Caymanas as entitled to share in the compensation fund according to the interests of the respective owners in these Islands, and that in regard to the unregistered slaves in Jamaica belonging to Maroons, they are inclined to hold that the regular annual returns to the Assembly of these Maroons' slaves might be deemed, when properly authenticated, to satisfy the rule proposed by the Commissioners, that a certificate of registration should accompany the claim, and entitle the owners to compensation.

20th January 1835.

Your Lordship will observe, that the decision of the Commissioners is general, and is capable of reference to all slaves not illegally held in slavery.

I have, &c.

Enclosure in No. 387.

Office of Commissioners of Compensation, No. 25, Great George-street,
Sir, Westminster, 20th January 1835.

WE have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Letter, transmitting, by the direction of the Earl of Aberdeen, a copy of a Despatch from the Marquess of Sligo, relative to a question which has arisen, whether the negroes at the Caymanas are not free subjects, and in consequence of their non-registration, absolutely relieved from the apprenticeship; and requesting that we should give Lord Aberdeen our opinion whether any claims against the compensation fund can be allowed in respect to the unregistered slaves at the Caymanas, or to the slaves in Jamaica, the property of Maroons, who are stated by Lord Sligo never to have been registered.

With respect to the compensation for slaves at the Caymanas, we beg to state that the situation of those Islands, as dependencies of Jamaica, became a subject for the consideration of the Commissioners in the beginning of their proceedings; and in their letter of instructions (signed by all the then Commissioners), of the 4th November 1833, to the Assistant Commissioners of Jamaica, upon the first head of inquiry for making the inter-colonial apportionment of the compensation money, they were directed to appoint an agent to proceed from Jamaica to the Caymanas, under the authority of the Assistant Commissioners, to procure a return of the number of slaves belonging to or settled in those Islands, and to ascertain the value or price of slaves therein, for eight years ending on the 31st December 1830. With these Islands, although dependencies of Jamaica, there is little or no communication, from their distant situation to leeward of Jamaica; they are governed by their own usages and customs, and the laws of the Jamaica Legislature do not necessarily extend to them. Not being included in the Registry Acts of that Island, the owners were under no legal obligation, and had no opportunity of registering their slaves. As, however, under the last clause of the Abolition Act, Islands dependent upon Colonies, were to be deemed part thereof for the purposes of the Act, such a return was required by our letter of instructions of the 4th November 1833, as supplementary to the registration of the slaves in Jamaica. A very complete return has accordingly been made, containing a registry of the names, numbers, ages and ownership of all the slaves in the Caymanas, upon the oaths of the respective owners; and we have continued to consider the Caymanas, in all subsequent proceedings, in every respect as an appendage to Jamaica, and entitled to share in the compensation fund, according to the interests of the respective owners in those Islands.

With respect to the claim for compensation for unregistered slaves in Jamaica belonging to Maroons, we beg to state that we have as yet received no return or communication upon this subject from the Assistant Commissioners of Jamaica; and that the question is now for the first time proposed to us.

We think, however, that according to the liberal and manifest interpretation of the Abolition Act, it was intended to give the compensation for all the slaves, not illegally held in slavery. And although the Registry Act of Jamaica would oblige all holders of slaves within the Colony to register them under a penalty, yet it does not make the omission to register work a forfeiture of property. We should be inclined, therefore, to hold, that the regular annual returns to the Assembly of the slaves belonging to the Maroons, as mentioned by Lord Sligo, might be deemed, when properly authenticated, to satisfy the rule, proposed by the Commissioners, that a certificate of registration should accompany the claim, and entitle the owners to compensation.

EXTRACT of a DESPATCH from the Marquess of Sligo to the Earl of Aberdeen, dated Highgate, Jamaica, 27th April 1835.

I HAVE the honour to state for your information that I have deemed it expedient to postpone carrying into effect your orders with regard to the Caymanas apprentices, until this packet now in harbour should have arrived, and that as she has come in, it is my intention to proceed to sea on Wednesday evening, in the Forte frigate, for that purpose.

The Island of Grand Caymanas being very unhealthy in consequence of the marshes not being drained, and the incredible accumulation of vegetable matter, owing, I presume, to the fertility of the soil, I did not wish to leave any white troops quartered there. Indeed the want of barracks or any other species of accommodation there would have prevented me from so doing; I therefore was anxious to post 100 of the West India regiment there for about a month or six weeks, in order to support the laws. On consulting Major-General Sir Amos Norcott, he assented to my sending up to the Bahamas for these men, but at the same time added, that the numbers there were below the usual complement. Upon turning this in my mind, and the expense it would occasion to bring so many men so far, and then send them back again, I determined on adopting a different course, and one which I trust you will approve of. I applied to Commodore Pell, of whose readiness to meet my wishes in all possible ways and to afford me every assistance in his power it is impossible for me to speak in too high terms, to let me embark 25 men and a captain of the 84th on board the Serpent sloop of war, and to direct her to remain at that Island for a month or six weeks, in order to see that matters remained quiet between the two parties in the Island, the proprietors and the apprentices. He assented at once to my doing so, and the Serpent will accordingly accompany the Forte on her voyage. I propose to send her on, being a very fast sailer, to request that the custos, magistrates and principal inhabitants of the Island should come on board the Forte as soon as she shall have anchored at George Town, in order that I may communicate to them some important business. I propose to state the fact to them, that the law pronounces their apprentices to be absolutely free from all servitude. I have prepared a proclamation and an address to the people, copies of which I enclose herewith, which I will show to them, and will then act according to circumstances, as to making public the object of my mission to that Island. I propose to leave Dr. Thompson, and the black detachment already there, till the Serpent leaves the Island, and then to withdraw them all until I shall have heard your Lordship's decision as to the maintenance of a regular garrison there. I have calculated that Captain Pack, of the 84th, with his 25 men, the marines and small-arm men, which can be landed from the Serpent, and the 20 men of the black corps now stationed there, will amount to a force of 75 men, which will be quite sufficient to keep the peace there in case of any outbreak. There are 180 white militia in the Island, and in order to place them completely under the command of Captain Pack, I purpose to give him the commission of colonel in chief of the militia of the Grand Caymanas. I hope that all these arrangements will be attended with success, and will meet with your approbation; but I am bound to say that I am not at all easy at what may be the result. I trust that your Lordship will have represented the utter ruin which will be brought on these Caymanas proprietors, to Parliament, in order to procure them some additional compensation. What may be the effect on the apprentices of Jamaica, however, causes me much more consideration; every thing appears now to be going on so perfectly well, they are all so contented, the managers are relaxing down from their vexatious and teasing attacks upon the comforts of the negroes, finding from experience that they have not now the same sort of people to deal with that they had before, I fear much, least their minds should be unsettled by the setting free of these people, and of the Maroon apprentices. I fear that the loyalty of the Maroons may be shaken, by what, in their ignorance, they will attribute to a partiality against their colour. It is, however, my duty to obey the instructions I have received, and do the best I can to make them as little injurious to my government as possible. I cannot conclude this Despatch without adding how sensibly I feel the considerate confidence which has induced your Lordship to leave the details and manner of my carrying into effect your instructions so entirely at my own discretion. I trust that you will not have reason to think that confidence misplaced.

Jamaica, ss. A PROCLAMATION.

By his Excellency the Most Noble Howe Peter, Marquess of Sligo, Knight of the most illustrious Order of Saint Patrick, and member of His Majesty's most Honourable Privy Councils in England and Ireland, Captain-general and Governor in Chief of His Majesty's Island of Jamaica, and the Territories thereon depending in America, Chancellor and Vice-Admiral of the same.

Whereas the situation of the inhabitants of the Grand Caymanas having engaged the particular attention of His Majesty's Government, more especially as to the effect the recent changes under the laws of the Imperial Parliament have upon the structure of society in those Islands belonging to Great Britain, were slavery formerly existed; and the opinion of the law officers of the Crown having been obtained; I have received His Majesty's commands forthwith to communicate the decision at which they have arrived upon the question.

The Slavery Abolition Act having declared that all persons of the age of six or upwards, who, on or before the first of August one thousand eight hundred and thirty-four, had been duly registered as slaves, should become and be apprenticed labourers, and such registration not having been adopted as respects the Islands of the Caymanas, previous to the passing thereof, such unregistered slaves have in consequence become entitled to the unqualified enjoyment of their personal freedom: And whereas it is incumbent on His Majesty's Government to see the letter of the Slavery Abolition Act carried into full effect, I do hereby, under the directions of His Majesty's Government, declare and make known, that all such unregistered slaves at the Islands of the Caymanas, have become absolutely manumitted, and can no longer be lawfully treated as apprenticed labourers.

Fully alive, however, to the inconvenience which the course I am commanded to pursue must entail upon the private interests or those of the community of this Island, and the apparent injustice inflicted on the proprietors of negroes by this construction of the law, owing to the injury which they will sustain in being deprived of the services of their apprentices, still His Majesty's Government have no power to interpose, and it will be for Parliament itself to provide a remedy, and to decide how far those affected by the omission may be entitled to compensation for the loss unintentionally inflicted upon them. On this subject a most earnest representation will be made to the King. And I have the satisfaction in the mean time to make known that the Commissioners for Compensation in England consider the Caymanas as an appendage to Jamaica, and entitled to share in the compensation fund, according to the interests of the respective owners in those Islands.

Given under my hand and seal at arms, at Saint Jago de la Vega, the day of in the fifth year of His Majesty's reign, annoque Domini 1835.

By His Excellency's command.

TO THE INHABITANTS OF THE GRAND CAYMANAS.

The Proclamation which I have this day made will have informed you of the state of the law with respect to this Island. To you who have heretofore been slave owners, do I at first address myself. That there is an apparent hardship in the case, as far as your not having the same advantage as to the service as apprentices of your former slaves, I freely admit; I also admit that the non-registration of these slaves was no culpable neglect of your own, as the law did not prescribe the necessity of your so doing; still however the undoubted construction of the Abolition Act is, that all unregistered slaves shall become absolutely and unconditionally free, and that you have no further claim upon those who were your slaves, for any services as apprentices. It will remain, therefore, for you to submit with decorum and patience to the law as it stands, and make an energetic but humble representation of the hardship of your being placed in a worse situation than other slave owners, in the shape of petitions to the two Houses of Parliament. That they will be most attentively considered, I am certain; and though it is impossible for me to do more than form my own idea of what their decision may be, I do feel assured that they will in this instance act with their accustomed regard to the rights of individuals. Should they provide His Majesty, my most gracious Master, with the necessary means, I can safely assure you that he will most favourably consider your claims, dependent as your Island is on Jamaica, which he has been pleased always to connect with his earliest recollections and most partial consideration. Should you intrust these petitions to my care, I can promise you all the support, private and public, that my position or influence can command; should you otherwise dispose of them, you will be equally certain of my ardent exertions in your behalf.

You who have been slaves and lately acting as apprentices, are by this decision made absolutely and unconditionally free; I trust you will show your gratitude to that nation which has made such great personal and pecuniary sacrifices to ensure your freedom, by your loyalty to your common Monarch, and by the willing and anxious obedience you will pay to the laws of the land. New duties devolve upon you with the new position you now occupy; and I hope that by the steadiness of your conduct, and your peaceable demeanour, you will prove that this greatest of all earthly boons has not been unworthily bestowed upon you; you must now entirely depend upon your own industry for your support. You must recollect that you have now no person to feed you, no person to clothe you, no person to give you medical assistance if you are ill. You must depend upon your own exertions for all these things; you have no houses or grounds of your own; those you have heretofore occupied occupied must now be given up to their owners, your former masters, whose property they are; all belong to him excepting your furniture, clothes and the crops you have now in the ground; these you have a right to remove to where you may please to go, if you mean to do so; but I trust that a sense of what is so decidedly your own interests will induce you to offer to your former masters such equivalent, either in labour or money, as will induce him to leave you in the quiet occupation of your grounds and homes. Though he who was your master is no longer so, recollect of what service he may be to you. Do not imagine that because you are now free you are independent of one another; no class of the community can be independent of the other. All experience has shown how one hangs on the other. Those of you who have been well treated, recollect that it is now in your power to show your gratitude for past kindnesses; those who think that your masters have occasionally felt harshly towards you, recollect that probably you gave great provocation, and show that if they have been in the wrong, that will not now justify your acting improperly. I trust that on my next visit to this Island, I shall hear that your improved habits of industry, your quiet demeanour, and your increased and increasing wealth will show your obedience to the laws, and that you deserve this great benefit which you now receive.

Copy of a DESPATCH from Lord Glenelg to the Marquess of Sligo.

My Lord, Colonial Office, Downing-street, 15 June 1835.

I have received your Lordship's Despatch, dated the 27th April last, reporting the proceedings which you intended to adopt, and covering copies of the proclamation and address which you proposed to issue upon announcing to the inhabitants of the Grand Caymanas the immediate and entire liberation of the emancipated slaves of that Island from the duty of labouring as apprentices under the Slavery Abolition Act.

Your Lordship's arrangements for preventing, or, if necessary, repressing any breach of the public peace, appear to me entirely judicious and unexceptionable. I also approve of the proclamation and address. I must, however, qualify this statement by the remark, that if the people of the Caymanas shall be encouraged by your Lordship's language to anticipate any further Parliamentary grant as a compensation for their losses, such hopes will almost inevitably issue in disappointment. It would be vain to expect that any further charge will be undertaken by the House of Commons on this account. It would not, perhaps, be difficult to justify the distinction which has been drawn between the compensation made to the owners of registered and unregistered slaves; but I am not aware that any advantage could be expected from engaging at present in that discussion.

I trust that your Lordship's misgivings as to the excitement which will be produced in the minds of the inhabitants of the Caymanas, will not be verified; for I am well convinced, that on your own part nothing will be wanting to avert or to remedy such evils which can be effected by activity and an enlightened zeal for the welfare of all classes of His Majesty's subjects who live under your Lordship's government.

I have, &c.

Extract of a DESPATCH from the Marquess of Sligo to the Earl of Aberdeen, dated Highgate, Jamaica, 14th May 1835.

I have the honour to state for your information, in reference to my Despatch announcing my intentions, that on Thursday morning the 30th April, I sailed from Port Royal for the Grand Caymanas, in His Majesty's ship Forte, Commodore Pell, accompanied by His Majesty's sloop Serpent, Commander Sweny, with Captain Pack, Lieutenant Hodgson, and 25 of the 84th regiment on board.

The Serpent being considered the fastest vessel on the station, I requested Captain Sweny to make the best of his way to our destination, to warn all the magistrates and principal inhabitants to meet me on our arrival in George Town, in order that I might make to them a particular communication. My object in so doing was to consult them, and find out their feelings as to my present most unpleasant duty, and then to make arrangements for as speedy a return to Jamaica as might be possible, in order that I should be on the spot, prepared for any consequences which might arise on the news of what had taken place at the Caymanas reaching the apprentices on that Island. I arrived at George Town about three o'clock on the 2d May, and almost immediately Mr. Drayton, the custos, Dr. Thompson, the special justice, Lieutenant Williams, commanding the detachment of the 2d West India regiment stationed there, and about 25 of the principal inhabitants, came off. Having received them all in the Forte's cabin, I opened to them the object of my most painful mission. I need not say how thunderstruck they were when they heard the announcement I made to them; but I must add, that I did not conceive it possible that such a severe visitation could have been received in so patient and decorous a manner. They inquired whether any memorial could effect a postponement of the threatened evil. I then informed them, that I had long since received from the late Government a notification of this view of the subject having been entertained by them, and that I had remonstrated in the strongest terms, but that after long consideration and much consultation with the law officers of the Crown, the British Government had found that no choice was left them, and that I was ordered in consequence to see the law strictly and accurately carried into effect. I then continued to inform them, that I had come down for that purpose, and to express to them the deep sympathy I felt for them, and my readiness to forward for them to the Government any representation which they should consider might be of service to them, and support it with the best influence, public or private, which I could command. At first they appeared anxious for some delay, in order to make preparations for the change, but before I announced to them that this was impossible, I succeeded in persuading them that it was not desirable for themselves. They all agreed that I should land the following morning at seven o'clock, and make public the proclamation. I then dismissed them, praying that, as accommodation was difficult to be had in the Island away from their own homes, those who lived at a distance should not think of waiting for the morning, but that I should request those who were resident at George Town to meet me at that hour, as the occasion was most solemn. They at once replied, that as I had done them the honour of coming down from Jamaica to make the communication easier to them, they thought the least they could do would be to pay me the compliment of attending me. I explained to them all the arrangements I had made with respect to the Serpent remaining there with her troops on board, and that Commodore Pell had kindly promised to relieve her with another vessel at the conclusion of a month, in case the state of the Island should be at that time such as to make it desirable. They declared that it added much to their gratification to see so much consideration paid to them, but that they felt confident there could be no disturbance and no annoyance. I pointed out to them the necessity of my reaching Jamaica before the news of what occurred there should reach it, to which they acceded.

On the following morning, the 3d May, I landed, as arranged, at seven o'clock, under a salute, and was met by almost all the gentlemen I had seen the day before, and some others in addition. Captain Pack read the proclamation, and I then read my written advice to them, and gave copies of both to be stuck up in the most conspicuous parts of the Island, and explained to the people by Captain Pack and Dr. Thompson. Besides that address, I made to the assembled negroes some remarks which I considered advisable as to their liability to taxation, they having no longer any right to any houses or grounds given to them by their masters, and many matters which I considered it expedient that they should be made aware of. One of them stepped forward, and declared the change could be no change to him, as he would remain all his life with his master, who had always behaved so well to him. The rest of the apprentices did not seem to have any feeling on the occasion, or to know the extent of the blessing they were then receiving. I was then accompanied to the water-side by the gentlemen, and the custos, who just as I was on the point of embarkation addressed me in the name of the Island, humbly thanking me for the honour I had paid them in visiting them twice, an honour that had never before been conferred on them. They then saluted me from their Island battery, as I was rowing off to the Forte. We immediately made sail for Jamaica, which, owing to calms and contrary winds, we did not reach till the 13th of May.

COPY of a DESPATCH from Governor Sir Stephen R. Chapman to Mr. Secretary Stanley.

Sir, The Bermudas, February 1834.

EVERY attention has been paid to your commands, as signified in your circular Despatches of the 5th September and 19th October 1833, on the subject of the Abolition of Slavery; and although it did not appear to me advisable to convene the Legislature of this Colony, until I should receive the promised draft of an Order in Council, as stated in the last of the above-mentioned letters, yet every preparation was made to ascertain the general disposition of the inhabitants at large, in the expectation of its early arrival.

Vide Papers printed by Parl. 15 April 1835, Part I. No. 177, pages 8 & 11.

The enclosed copy of the Royal Gazette extra, of this Colony, contains a copy of my opening speech to the Legislature on the 9th ultimo; I have also the honour to forward copies of the addresses to me from both Houses on the above-mentioned occasion; and as I deemed it important to adhere as much as possible to the phraseology and spirit of your Despatches, as relating to this Colony, I am not without hopes, that the course I have pursued will be satisfactory to you.

10 January 1834.

13 January 1834.

An Act has been passed abolishing Slavery in the Bermudas on the 1st August next, and there will be time, I trust, for my receiving any further commands from you thereon which may be deemed necessary. I am not, however, without an opinion that a little more time would have been preferable; but the majority of the inhabitants in favour of unconditional emancipation at that early period was so overwhelming, and the unanimity in the Assembly so entire, that the Legislature have only acted in unison with the decidedly expressed wishes of the country at large, in adopting this measure, and the Act has accordingly passed dispensing altogether with the system of apprenticeship.

The period until the 1st August is certainly very short, but I have impressed on the minds of many of the influential inhabitants the necessity of an early consideration of what may be deemed requisite towards the employment of those persons upon their coming into a state of freedom, as well as of those who may be thrown upon the public, either by their own determinatiou for change, or that of their owners to release themselves from an expense of maintaining such as are unwilling by their own industry, to support themselves, or who may be unable so to do. I do not, however, apprehend any difficulty which the Legislature, now engaged in the consideration of this matter, cannot meet.

I have the honour to enclose herewith attested copies of—

1. An Act for the Abolition of Slavery in these Islands in consideration of Compensation.

2. An Act to repeal the Laws exclusively applicable to free Black and free Coloured Persons, and extend to them the Laws applicable to White Persons, and to fix the Qualifications for Jurors, Voters, and the Electors and Candidates for certain Offices and Places of Trust.

EXTRACTS from the ROYAL GAZETTE, extra Newspaper, dated Hamilton, Bermuda, 10th January 1834.

Friday noon.

YESTERDAY, the day appointed by proclamation for convening the Legislature, the members of His Majesty's Council and the members of the House of Assembly having met accordingly in this town (Hamilton), a message from the administrator of the Government was sent, requesting their attendance at Mount Langton; where having assembled, his Excellency Sir S. R. Chapman was pleased to address them as follows:—

Mr. President and Gentlemen of the Legislative Council,

Mr. Speaker and Gentlemen of the House of Assembly,

I have brought you together at an earlier period than usual, for the purpose of calling your attention to an Act of Parliament, of which I have directed a copy to be sent to each of your Houses, intituled, "An Act for the Abolition of Slavery," dated 28th August last.

Though anxious as I have been to enable you to commence the labours pointed out by this Act, I have deemed it expedient to delay convoking you, until I should receive from His Majesty's Government the draft of an Order in Council, as promised in a Despatch from the Secretary of State for the Colonies, dated 5th September last, to serve as a model, though not for strict imitation, in the discharge of the duties imposed upon you by the operation of this Act. In the mean time, the principal inhabitants, the public in general, and the coloured population of this Colony, have been prepared to receive this important communication, whereby the interests of all classes of society are so deeply involved.

You will observe that this Act does not interfere with the appropriate duties of the Legislature of this Colony beyond the strict limits of necessity, and that a due and anxious regard has been manifested to the local knowledge of the Legislature.

Every information and assistance in my power I can afford shall be given; and as His Majesty's instructions and those of His Government are couched in language most conciliatory, I feel that they will be responded to in the same spirit by yourselves and the community at large; for I am persuaded that but one feeling of kindness pervades the minds of the inhabitants in general towards the coloured people of this happy and peaceable Colony; the greater part of whom have been fostered under the immediate eye of their owners, and who, from having formed a part of their respective families, will receive that encouragement and protection they have been accustomed to experience, it will tend much to the mutual comfort and advantage of all classes, and will be in accordance with the spirit and kind feeling of His Majesty to all his subjects.

Mr. Speaker, and Gentlemen of the House of Assembly,

To you, gentlemen, will belong, in the first instance, a considerable degree of anxiety and labour in ascertaining and balancing the views and interests of both classes, in framing and enacting such laws as will best meet the momentous subject now before us, which, whilst they preserve the general tranquillity of the Colony, will embrace permanent benefit and comfort; for the laws to be good, must be reciprocally advantageous to all.

For such supplies as may be requisite, I rely with confidence upon your usual liberality.

Mr. President, and Gentlemen of the Legislative Council,

Mr. Speaker, and Gentlemen of the House of Assembly,

In again addressing you respectively, and together, I am most anxious to ensure your cordial co-operation with each other, and with myself, in endeavouring to meet the just expectations of His Majesty and the British Parliament. In using the words of the Secretary of State for the Colonies, as relates to the slaves, it is stated, "That His Majesty, the Parliament, and the nation of Great Britain, are entitled to expect and demand the most tranquil and orderly submission to such laws as shall be framed for their public government in a state of freedom."

All the instructions I have received, and particularly the plan which has been drawn up as a draft of an Order in Council, copies of which shall be sent to each House, manifest an anxious desire on the part of His Majesty's Government to assist you in your labours towards the accomplishment of this great change.

It is by no means intended to fetter the discretion which has been vested by Parliament in the Colonial Assembly, and as much is left to your local knowledge and practical experience, as well as intimate acquaintance with the peculiarities of your respective laws, as suited to the society for which they were framed, I have no doubt but that a corresponding spirit of anxiety will show itself in all classes to meet the change which you are called upon to facilitate and ultimately to bring together, with myself, into operation.

BERMUDA.

The following Addresses from His Majesty's Council and the Honourable House of Assembly of Bermuda, in reply to his Excellency the Governor's Speech at the opening of the Session, 13th of January 1834:—

To his Excellency Major-General Sir Stephen R. Chapman, &c. &c. &c.

THE ADDRESS OF THE LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL OF BERMUDA.

May it please your Excellency,

WE, His Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Council of Bermuda, have the honour to offer our thanks to your Excellency for the speech in which our attention has been directed to the highly important business on which your Excellency has been pleased to convene the Legislature of this Colony. Aware of the numerous and serious difficulties which attend any extensive alterations, even when they are of the most beneficial character, in the existing constitutions of society, and participating with many of our fellow subjects in His Majesty's Colonies, in an intense anxiety to promote the safe and equitable adjustment of the claims of all parties to be affected by the abolition of slavery, we cannot but gratefully appreciate the judicious and liberal spirit manifested by His Majesty's Government and the British Parliament, in the enactment of a law, which has at once provided to a considerable extent compensation for the proprietor and enfranchisement for the slave; nor can we be less sensible to that wise and just forbearance of the Imperial Parliament, which has left to the discretion and local knowledge of the Colonial Legislatures, the privilege of substituting for the Imperial Act, such laws as may, without infringing the general principle of emancipation, so modify its provisions with reference to particular exigencies, as to render them more safe and convenient.

When the documents to which your Excellency alludes shall be laid before our House, your Excellency may be assured that our best abilities and diligence will be devoted to the duty which is devolved upon us by the constitution of this Colony, and that we shall gladly co-operate with the other branches of the Legislature in completing those local enactments which, on mature deliberation, may appear to us most advantageous to the interests of this community, and most likely to satisfy the just expectation of the King, his Parliament and his people, on this momentous subject.

We respond with satisfaction to the opinion implied in your Excellency's speech, that our duties in this respect will be much facilitated by the paternal care and kindness with which the slaves of this Colony have generally been treated by their proprietors, and by the religious instruction which has, of late years especially, been extended to that class of this community, as a necessary preparation for a measure which will place them in a condition of greater moral responsibility and less personal restraint.

By order of the House,
(signed) Robert Kennedy, President.

To his Excellency Major-General Sir Stephen Remnant Chapman, &c. &c. &c.

THE ADDRESS OF THE HOUSE OF ASSEMBLY OF BERMUDA.

May it please your Excellency,

WE, His Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the General Assembly of Bermuda, have to thank your Excellency for your Excellency's speech on opening the present Session.

On a measure of such unprecedented importance in colonial politics as that to which your Excellency has called our attention, contemplating as it does most extensive changes in our civil relations, we shall, of course, deliberate with all the anxiety due to the magnitude of the question, but with a sincere desire to acquiesce in and promote the views of our most gracious Sovereign as far as local circumstances may require or permit; and we, therefore, fully appreciate the benefits likely to arise from that full development of those views which the documents promised to be laid before us by your Excellency are intended to afford.

Maintaining, as this Colony ever has done, the fairest and most unimpeachable character for general kindness to its coloured population, "the greater part of whom," as your Excellency remarks, "have been fostered under the immediate eye of their owners, and have formed a part of their respective families," we, nevertheless, attach much value to the official recognition of the fact in your Excellency's speech; and we confidently hope that this circumstance will ensure to all our proceedings on this momentous subject shortly to occupy our attention, the most favourable construction both from your Excellency and His Majesty's Government.

We shall be ready upon the present, as upon all former occasions, to grant such supplies as the exigencies of the public service may require, having due regard to the resources of our constituents, and to the possible effect on those resources, from the changes which may be produced on the condition of our society.

By order of the House,

COPY of a DESPATCH from Mr. Secretary Spring Rice to Governor Sir S. R. Chapman.

Sir, Downing-street, 24 June 1834.

I HAVE received your Despatch, dated in the month of February 1834, containing the gratifying intelligence that the Legislature of Bermuda has passed an Act for abolishing Slavery from the 1st of August next, and I have the honour to acquaint you that the course which you pursued upon the receipt of my predecessor's several circular Despatches on this important subject appears to me perfectly satisfactory.

The Acts which are inclosed in your present Despatch are intituled respectively as follows:—

"An Act for the Abolition of Slavery in these Islands, in consideration of Compensation;" and

"An Act to repeal the Laws exclusively applicable to the free Black and free Coloured Persons, and extend to them the Laws applicable to White Persons; and to fix the Qualification for Jurors, Voters and the Electors and Candidates for certain Offices and Places of Trust."

The first of these Acts, which entirely abolishes Slavery from the 1st of August next, and dispenses altogether with the system of apprenticeship, is, I think, free from all objection, either of a legal nature or on grounds of discretion and sound policy.

The second Act relieves the free coloured population of the Bermuda Islands from every legal disability to which the white population are not subject, and thus far it is the necessary sequel or adjunct of the first Act.

But the Legislature have in this Act proceeded to raise very considerably the qualifications of Members of the House of Assembly, of Mayors, Aldermen and Common Councilmen, of Vestrymen, Churchwardens and Constables, and of the Electors by whom all those different functionaries are to be chosen. In some cases these qualifications are more than doubled. Before I can form a correct estimate of these provisions, it is necessary that I should possess more information than I can gather from your present Despatch. I should wish especially to be informed, as far as the means at your disposal will admit, what have been the actual numbers of the several constituent and elective bodies under the system hitherto in force, to what extent and in what particular directions those numbers will be diminished or increased by the operation of the Statute now under consideration; how far it is probable that under its provisions any of the free coloured population will, within any assignable period, actually participate in the privileges it professes to give them, or whether there is reason to conclude that the existing generation will find those privileges to have been nominal only. On all these points, and on any others which may occur to you as useful, I must request such information and remarks as you may be able to supply to me for the guidance of my judgment on the very important law which you have transmitted to me, in order that it may receive the decision of His Majesty in Council.

Sir, The Bermudas, 8th October 1834.

I HAVE the honour to forward to you a copy of the Bermuda Gazette, of the 16th ultimo, containing a copy of my Speech, on the occasion of the prorogation of the Legislative Assemblies at this place.

It may not be irrelevant to observe to you, that the feeling of the two Houses was strongly marked at the moment, the favourable sentiments of the community at large strongly manifested, and that the Executive stands high in public estimation in consequence of the emancipation of Slavery having taken place here at the earliest possible period.

Enclosure in No. 394.

Mr. President, and Gentlemen of the Legislative Council,

Mr. Speaker, and Gentlemen of the House of Assembly,

As your labours for the present Session have been brought to a close, I am happy in being enabled to release you from further attendance on your legislative duties. Public service of no ordinary character called you early into session, and the same cause has made it a protracted one; but your zeal in meeting the views of His Majesty's Government, have led you not to consider your time as a sacrifice, although your private interests have been affected thereby.

Important have been your labours during this Session, and eminently beneficial the results to a large portion of the community at least. You have exceeded even the most sanguine expectations of His Majesty, and the Parliament of Great Britain, in the unrestricted freedom which you have granted to the coloured population of this happy Colony; and although we were the last to receive the Despatches on this subject from His Majesty's Government, and the Legislature was in consequence convened at a later period than it otherwise would have been, yet you have the proud satisfaction of reflecting, and history will record, that in passing a law for conferring this great boon, you have been second to none. Happy am I in finding myself associated with yourselves, and I may say, with the public in general, in feeling, determination and action on this memorable occasion.

The many laws necessarily required by the change in our social condition, or suggested by a prudential regard to the possible consequences of an untried experiment, have rendered the present a most laborious as well as important Session; and although, in the various enactments contained in so large an addition to our civil and criminal code, there may be found upon experience, some matters calling for revision and improvement, their general spirit and tendency will, I am well assured, be found in perfect unison with that which has dictated the leading measure of the Session.

As relates to the legislative precautions which have been adopted by way of police regulation, the good order, the decorum, the exemplary observance of the memorable first of August, as a day of thanksgiving to the Author of all good, and the more than ordinary tranquillity which has reigned since, sufficiently evince that in the moderate extent of those precautions, you have formed a correct estimate of the character of the coloured population, while they also afford a flattering presage of their future good conduct in their new situation. On them I would earnestly inculcate, nay, in His Majesty's name, enjoin the most scrupulous observance of the laws, respect to the constituted authorities, and a deferential regard to their superiors, as the most suitable return for the civil privileges to which they have been admitted, and as evidencing in a manner the most satisfactory, that they are qualified to enjoy them.

In adverting to the complete success of this great measure, achieved without a dissentient voice, for the most perfect harmony and cordiality have pervaded your councils, I cannot but felicitate you on the proud station in which you stand.

As His Majesty's representative, forming a part of the Legislature of the Colony, and identified with you, as I feel myself in every matter touching the public interest and happiness, I cannot deny to myself the right of participating in this proud reflection.

In issuing a Proclamation, with the concurrence of the Council, which I thought it advisable to promulgate, setting apart the day on which freedom dawned on so large a number of our fellow subjects, as a day of thanksgiving to the Almighty, I acted in accordance, I have reason to believe, with the sentiments of the entire population of this Colony; and most happy was I to see and to learn, that the House of Prayer was indeed one of Thanksgiving.

To the clergy we are highly indebted for the doctrines inculcated on the occasion, so calculated to excite in the minds of the coloured population that tone and tranquil line of conduct, not on that day alone, but since; for all seemed to feel the solemn occasion which brought them together, and solemn and quiet was their demeanor throughout.

I cannot dismiss you, gentlemen, without recommending that your watchful attention be given to those whom you have thus benefited: and in the event of your foreseeing the probability of distress taking place, either as respects the white or the coloured population, arising from this event, that you will meet with kindness and consideration the wants of those requiring your support; and I can assure you, that I shall not be found wanting in aiding and assisting your endeavours, whether publicly or by private means. And as I have been working with you, and for you, for a period of nearly three years, I trust I shall have credit for an earnest wish to promote the prosperity and comfort of the Colony which His Majesty has been graciously pleased to entrust to my charge.

I must not omit to call your serious attention, when you retire to your domestic occupations, to the consideration of what may be required for the general good of the community at large; and although much may be done by giving employment to the labouring class, yet the enforcement of your police regulations may become necessary to prevent the ill-disposed, of which there will always be some in every community, from running counter to the laws, and for bringing them to punishment upon the infringement of them.

I will not further trespass upon your attention, gentlemen, than by merely adverting to the communication from His Majesty's Secretary of State, of his being gratified by the receipt of the intelligence that Bermuda had passed an Act abolishing slavery from the 1st day of August;

BERMUDA.

August: that the course I had pursued upon the receipt of his predecessor's circular despatches on this important subject were perfectly satisfactory, and that the Act which entirely abolished slavery from that date, dispensing altogether with the system of apprenticeship, is, in the view of His Majesty's Government, free from all objection, either of a legal nature, or on grounds of discretion and sound policy.

His Excellency was then pleased to prorogue the Colonial Parliament to Wednesday, the 8th of October next.

Copy of a DESPATCH from Governor Sir S. R. Chapman to Mr. Secretary Spring Rice.

Sir, The Bermudas, 7th October 1834.

IN reply to the inquiries contained in your Despatch of the 24th June ult., respecting the operation of the Act passed during the late session, for repealing such laws as apply exclusively to black and coloured persons, and altering the amount of qualification for the exercise of certain elective and representative franchises, I have now the honour to transmit the results of my inquiries under their respective heads:—

1st.—The amount in number of electors for a member of the Assembly, immediately previous to the first of last August, when the above Act went into operation, was 654 for the whole Colony.

2d.—The present amount of white electors as above is 615; thus showing a diminution of 39 in the number of white electors for a member of the Assembly under the new law, which increases the pecuniary amount of qualification.

3d.—The number of black and coloured persons at present known to be qualified to vote at an election for a member of the Assembly, under the new law, is 31.

4th.—The number of black and coloured persons at present known to be qualified for a seat in the House of Assembly, is three.

5th.—The number of persons qualified to vote at an election of a vestryman or churchwarden previous to the 1st of August, was 746.

6th.—The present number of white electors as above is 612, showing a diminution of 134 in the number of white electors under the new law.

7th.—The number of black and coloured persons at present known to be qualified to vote as above, under the new law, is 33.

8th.—The number of persons qualified to serve as jurors previous to the 1st of August, was 513.

9th.—The present number of white persons qualified to serve as jurors, is 447; showing a diminution of 66 in the number of white persons qualified to serve as jurors under the new law.

10th.—The number of black and coloured persons at present known to be qualified to serve as jurors, is 18.

11th.—The number of black and coloured persons at present known to be qualified to serve as vestrymen or churchwarden is 17.

12th.—The number of persons qualified to vote at an election for a mayor, alderman or common councilman for the two corporate towns of Hamilton and St. George was, previous to the 1st of August, 145.

13th.—The present number of white electors as above, is 137; showing a diminution of eight white electors under the new law.

14th.—The number of black and coloured persons at present known to be qualified to vote as above, under the new law, is 12.

15th.—The number of black and coloured persons at present known to be qualified to be elected mayor, alderman or common-councilman for the two corporate towns, is two.

From the foregoing returns, it will appear, that the white constituencies are all reduced in number under the operation of the new law. With respect to the black and coloured population, now for the first time admitted to the elective and representative franchises, it is to be remarked, that as that description of persons has has heretofore been excluded from the enjoyment of those franchises, it has never been customary to rate in the parish books any freehold property that such persons might possess, and the present returns, as respects that class of persons, being framed merely from the personal knowledge of the local authorities in the respective parishes, it is not improbable that their numbers will be found considerably larger when the freeholds possessed by those persons shall be valued, for the purpose of being assessed to the parish rates, in common with those of the whites, at next Easter.

The value of the freehold being now the only qualification required by law for any of the constituent bodies, there will, of course, be no impediment whatever to black and coloured freeholders exercising the elective franchise in any of the cases above referred to (if duly qualified as to the amount of their respective freeholds), in common with the white constituency.

With respect to the selection of jurors, the law which requires a juror to be a literate person remaining unchanged, this qualification is consequently necessary for a juror, in addition to the qualification in property which is now required for the exercise of the elective franchise in any of the capacities before mentioned.

I have, &c.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

No. 399.

—No. 399.—

EXTRACT of a DESPATCH from Lieut.-Colonel Wade to Mr. Secretary Stanley, dated Government House, Cape Town, 6th December 1833.

Vide Circular, July 1834; printed in Part I. Pap. Paper. No. 177.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Despatch of the 18th July last, enclosing a copy of a series of resolutions, by which the House of Commons and the House of Lords have declared the expediency of adopting immediate and effectual measures for the Abolition of Slavery, &c. &c.; also a copy of the Bill, which, in pursuance of those resolutions, His Majesty's Government have brought into the House of Commons.

The resolutions were published here in the colonial newspapers as far back as the month of July last, and, as no doubt Sir Lowry Cole will have already apprised you, excited no open expression of discontent whatever. Subsequently, on the 4th September, there was also published a letter from Mr. Borradaile, of London, to the Committee of the Commercial Body of Cape Town, communicating the result of an interview the Cape Trade Society had with you relating to the measure in question; and the general impression produced by that document was, that the interests of the slave proprietors of this Colony would be favourably considered by His Majesty's Government.

At the moment I received your Despatch, I was setting out on an excursion through the Cape and neighbouring districts of Stellenbosch, Swellendam, and Worcester, containing, with Cape Town, a large proportion of the slave population; and as I subsequently required from the several civil commissioners, resident magistrates, and protectors of slaves, confidential reports of the state of feeling observable among both proprietors and slaves, as arising out of the proposed measure, I was unwilling to hazard a reply until I was in possession of the most ample information I could collect on the important subject it referred to.

From the reports of the public functionaries, the communications I have received from many other individuals who have the best opportunities of ascertaining the state of the public mind, and from my own personal observations, I feel that I may venture to assure you, that there is no cause to apprehend, on the part of the slave proprietors in this Colony, any openly avowed hostility to the Bill, still less any thing partaking of systematic resistance to it, or that the measure will be here productive of any collision between the different classes of society. . . . . .

Before I proceed further with this part of the subject, I will state, that from the slaves themselves, I am satisfied there is nothing whatever to apprehend. It were needless on this occasion to recapitulate the great variety of circumstances that have, at all times, combined to deprive slavery, at the Cape of Good Hope, of many of its most odious features, and to impress upon it an essentially different character from what it bears elsewhere, and which have, at the same time, been greatly instrumental in preserving the imaginations of the slaves from those false impressions, which have so frequently been productive of the most fatal consequences in the West Indies. I will advert therefore only to a few of these, as forming, in some part, the ground of the opinion I have ventured to expresss.

1st. Slavery exists here, it is true; but as I believe has been universally admitted, in an exceedingly mitigated form.

2dly. The proportion which the slave population bears to the free, is, as compared with that proportion in other colonies, here reversed.

3dly. There are not here, and never have been, any plantation slaves, or slaves working in gangs under the whip; nor, except during a very short period of the year, viz. in the wine-making season, is there any manufacturing labour, requiring from the slave extraordinary exertion beyond his usual working hours.

4thly. A large proportion of the whole population is widely separated and dispersed over an immense extent of country.

5thly. There is not one proprietor of slaves in the Colony who possesses 100; but four who possess between 70 and 90; and 16 who have from 40 to 60; and besides these, there are very few indeed who have even 30; added to which, almost every one of the individuals above alluded to as possessing upwards of 40 slaves, and many of the smaller proprietors also, have either cattle or corn farms exclusive

exclusive of, and commonly at a considerable distance from the estates on which they themselves reside; and the slaves of these persons are in general distributed amongst their farms.

Without trespassing further on your time, the above facts (and there are a multiplicity of others which have all had the same tendency) will suffice to show that, in this Colony, concert among the slaves, for any purpose whatever, was and is impracticable; and to explain why it is that the discussion of the slave question here has never, at any period, excited exaggerated hopes on the part of those most interested in its final issue. In fact, complete unfettered emancipation has never once been dreamt of by the most civilized slave in the Settlement.

The totally uneducated and almost barbarous beings, who are permanently fixed on the far distant and isolated farms of their owners in the interior, and who rarely mix with others than their fellow slaves, never with any less ignorant than themselves, are indeed aware, that during the last few years, laws have been made with a view to the amelioration of their condition, (and they have extensively availed themselves of their right to appeal to the magistrate against the undue exercise, or what they may deem such, of domestic authority); but for any measure, pretending to do more than regulate the amount of their food and clothing, and prescribe the periods of their daily labour, and the quantum of punishment to be inflicted by their master, they are, I am convinced, unsolicitous, and certainly unprepared.

In the more populous parts of the Colony the case is different; and in the districts nearest to Cape Town, an expectation has been awakened among the slaves that they are about to receive some more important, but to them as yet undefined benefit, than has hitherto been conferred upon them.

At Cape Town, again, the slaves are, of course, considerably better educated and more advanced in civilization than in the districts; but not even here have their most anxious hopes ever led them to anticipate a measure, having for its object their immediate emancipation from slavery, and eventual total liberation from compulsory service. The great majority of these last are domestic slaves, or artisans, hired out by their owners at exorbitantly high wages; and as they are in the way of hearing the merits of this question hourly discussed, and perfectly understand the nature, and appreciate the value of a change, which will enable them to realize for themselves some portion, at least, of the profits arising from their knowledge and industry, a desire for freedom has of late rapidly increased among them, which, however, I must add, is not always participated in by the older slaves, or by those who are domesticated in the family of their owner. It is due to the slave population to add, that in no one instance have I been able to ascertain that their hopes and expectations have manifested themselves in turbulent or disorderly conduct; it is stated to me, indeed, by the protectors and their assistants, that complaints of an insolent and disrespectful bearing towards the masters have of late become more frequent than usual. . . . .

On this part of the subject I will only add, that of course very many slaves will hereafter be found, who will misunderstand or abuse both the probationary period of apprenticeship, and subsequent perfect emancipation; but, in my humble opinion at least, in an augmentation, a very considerable one, however, to the numbers, and almost as considerable an extension of the powers of the magistracy; and in well-digested apprentice and vagrant laws, carefully adapted to the various local and other peculiarities of the Colony and the people, will be found a perfectly sufficient remedy for any or all the evils which, it is obvious, will arise, and are indeed inseparable from this entire change in the frame of society.

I must, in the first place, be permitted to observe, that there is, I believe, no colony in which instances of manumission have been more frequent than at the Cape; and that the Dutch Government was constantly obliged, even to the last hour of its administration in 1806, to restrain the humane feelings of the slave owners on this point, and to obstruct emancipation by increasing, on different occasions, the amount of the deposit required from the person manumitting, and extending the period for which a guarantee was required to be given by him from five to ten, and subsequently to 20 years, avowedly because manumissions became so frequent, that the poor funds of the church were expected to prove inadequate to meet the demands to which such extensive emancipation necessarily exposed it.

Also, I feel that I shall be fully borne out by those best acquainted with this Colony, when I affirm, that the inhabitants in general cannot, with justice, be accused of brutal or inhuman treatment of their slaves; that there is not, and never has been at the Cape, an attachment to slavery; that the existence of it here has been a matter of necessity, not of choice; and that, until within the last few years, there was no disinclination on the part of the colonists to emancipation, on fair and equitable principles. On the contrary, more than one plan for the gradual extinction of slavery has emanated from the proprietors themselves, the latest of which was submitted for the approval of the Home Government by Major-General Bourke, in 1826; and I cannot help adding, that I have myself conversed with several slave proprietors of the better description, who were fully conscious of, and admitted the evils of slavery in all its bearings, its baneful influence on the general interests of society, its demoralizing effects on all who are concerned in or come in contact with it, slave or free; and its no less injurious consequences to the private interests of the proprietors themselves. . . . . .

First, That a liberal compensation and a speedy settlement of the claims will go very far towards quieting their discontent, and that in their eager desire to obtain possession of the compensation money, let it amount to what it may, will be found the best remedy for the prevention of delay in the settlement of their claims, as far as that delay shall depend upon themselves; for when they shall fully understand, that whether they accede to the award made in each case or not, the period for the commencement of the apprenticeship is fixed and determinate, but that the payment of the compensation money must altogether depend upon their acquiescence in or refusal to abide by the award of the Commissioners, they will be less inclined to have recourse to the privilege of appeal, or to oppose the completion of the measure upon frivolous grounds. Secondly, That in one very material point of view, I conceive this Colony will benefit to a greater extent than any other by the present measure. The slave property, if I may so call it, is here, as elsewhere, almost universally mortgaged; but there is this great difference, that whereas the slaves of other Colonies are, almost in every case, mortgaged to absentees in London and elsewhere, who will, of course, be entitled to receive the amount due to them out of the compensation fund; those of the Cape are mortgaged to the merchants and others resident in and belonging to the Colony, and consequently, the compensation money, although it may change hands, will ultimately remain here.

It must be confessed that there is no enactment in the whole Bill in which the interests not only of the master and apprentice, but of society at large, are more seriously involved, or which will be attended with more difficulty of application to this Colony, than in the complete extinction of domestic authority and substitution for it of the authority of the magistrate.

It appears from the 15th section of the Bill, that His Majesty is empowered to appoint special justices of the peace, to the number of one hundred, for the whole of the Colonies, for the purpose of giving effect to the measure; and it is but natural to suppose, that the number to be appointed in each will be in proportion to that of its slave population, and to the density of the latter; but it is only necessary to glance at the map, to be convinced that though the number to be allotted here should infinitely exceed the proportion due to the slave population of the Colony, it never can be at all commensurate with the vast extent of country occupied, and the widely scattered and isolated habitations of the farmers to whom the slaves belong. It being at the same time no less evident, that the farther removed from the surveillance of the magistracy and of society the slave owner resides, the greater the necessity which exists for the frequent visits of the justices. It must be recollected that there are at present in the whole Settlement but twelve magistrates, having their fixed residence in the district towns, with twenty-three justices of the peace, the majority of whom reside there also; whilst of the slave proprietors the greater part live at the distance of from two to ten days' journey, and some of them at a much greater distance from the nearest seat of magistracy.

The districts, as you are aware, are divided into field cornetcies, of which there are 160 in the Colony, some of which, although containing only a few inhabitants, extend over an immense space; and should the special commission be granted to one justice for each field cornetcy, it would hardly suffice for the performance of the important duties which must necessarily devolve upon him; and I must add, that it would be utterly unsafe to delegate to the field cornets any authority whatever in this matter, as they are themselves, probably without a single exception, proprietors of slaves, and closely connected by ties of friendship and of blood with others who are similarly situated.

The prejudices which very generally exist in regard to a "free labouring population," population," and the fears entertained as to the consequences of extensive vagrancy, are, as far as regards this Colony, certainly not unnatural, the inhabitants having daily before their eyes the effect of both in the persons of the "free blacks" and "Hottentots," who, since the promulgation of the law, (Ordinance, No. 50, 1828), "for improving their condition"; . . . . although many have acquired habits of industry, and a relish for civilized life, infinitely the majority are wandering about the Colony, subsisting on plunder and depredation, to whose idle and profligate character the records of the courts of justice bear ample testimony. Never having witnessed the effect of any other system of free labour than this, the farmer cannot or will not comprehend how it is possible that the evils above alluded to may be corrected, and the agricultural wants of a country, in as far as hands are concerned, be altogether supplied by any other means than compulsory labour, with mutual benefit to the owner and cultivator of the soil, and it would be utterly useless to endeavour to convince them of their error; experience alone can remove it.

It is not improbable that the far distant farmers may experience some difficulty in procuring labourers at the expiration of the apprenticeship; but I am not of opinion that this will generally be the case; for, were a Vagrant Act at this moment in force, it would be the means of adding to the present working classes several thousands of the free blacks and Hottentots who are at present scattered over the Colony without occupation. And although a law compelling these and all other vagrants to work for an honest livelihood, will have to contend here with difficulties of no ordinary description, arising from the vast extent of territory occupied by a scanty population, and the natural inclination of a large portion of the lower orders to a wandering independent life, I do not conceive the difficulties are insurmountable. . . . .

I have already stated that the resolutions were published here in the month of July last; had such not been the case, and that the first receipt of them had been with your Despatch, I should have promulgated them officially, accompanied by a proclamation in the spirit of the instructions contained in the latter, but as they had been made public so long ago without having caused any open expression of discontent, and as the dissatisfaction on the subject, be it what it may, had not at that period, and has not subsequently, assumed a character in the slightest degree requiring, or which would, I conceive, justify the interposition of authority, I have thought it better not to anticipate evil, or suppose that any discontent exists, and have therefore abstained from any official announcement on the subject. Were I, however, in possession of the Bill, as it received the royal assent, I should immediately publish it with an explanatory abstract, as in many places the inhabitants have expressed a great anxiety to be made acquainted with the details; and I am convinced that the sooner they are in possession of all the information on the matter that can be given, the better. . . . .

I have only to add, that I have not failed to communicate to the Attorney-General that part of your Despatch, which requires him "to engage immediately in the inquiry by what enactments the existing law therein referred to may be most conveniently adjusted to a state of society in which slavery will be unknown."

EXTRACT of a DESPATCH from Lieut.-Col. Wade to Mr. Secretary Stanley, dated Government House, Cape Town, 14th January 1834.

A COPY of the Act for the Abolition of Slavery had already reached the Colony, and been published in the newspapers, a few days before I had the honour of receiving your Despatch, giving cover to His Majesty's Proclamation of the 4th September last, together with twenty-five copies of the Bill, and I had, consequently, directed the Attorney-General to prepare a short explanatory abstract of the latter; which with a proclamation, framed in conformity to the instructions contained in your communication of the 16th July, it was my intention immediately to circulate throughout the Colony.

Vide Papers printed by Parl. 15 April 1835, Part I. No. 177, page 8.

The receipt, however, of the Despatch in question (which I beg to remark only reached me on the 5th instant, although bearing date the 5th September last) and its enclosures, at the very moment I was about to do so, rendered this mode of proceeding unnecessary; and I therefore transmitted to the public functionaries, clergy and others, an Extraordinary Gazette, containing the King's Proclamation, and explanatory abstract of the Bill above alluded to, accompanied by a circular Letter (copies of both of which I have the honour to enclose) requiring them to unite with the Colonial Government in removing groundless misapprehensions, and allaying any excitement which exaggerated hopes or fears might naturally tend to create on occasion of this the first official announcement on the subject, which will, I trust, meet with your approbation.

7 Jan. 1834.

I have much pleasure in informing you, that the public tranquillity has remained undisturbed since the date of my former Despatch.

Enclosure in No. 400.

(Circular.)

Sir, Government House, Cape Town, 7th January 1834.

In transmitting for your information and guidance the accompanying Proclamation of the King in Council, and in proceeding to point out to you how I conceive His Majesty's most gracious intentions may best be fulfilled, I feel that I should be guilty of the greatest injustice, were I not to embrace the earliest opportunity which has been afforded me, of acknowledging that the announcement of the contemplated and momentous change in the existing relations of society to which the Proclamation has reference, has not been, as far as I am aware, up to the present moment, productive of any one act, on the part of either slave owner or slave, tending to disturb the tranquillity of this Settlement; and I cannot but express my most anxious hope, that both parties will perceive the propriety and advantage of persevering in a line of conduct which I have not failed to report for the information of His Majesty, by whom, I have no doubt, it will be duly appreciated.

With a view to guard against the possibility of misconceptions, which might be attended by the most dangerous consequences to all classes of the community, the Attorney-General has prepared, by my direction, the accompanying explanatory Abstract of the general scope and meaning of the several provisions of the Act of Parliament; and it becomes my imperative duty at the same time to require the public functionaries, but more especially the colonial clergy and ministers of every religious persuasion, to unite with the local government, for the purpose of allaying any irritation or discontented feelings which may possibly be produced among the proprietors by the prospect of the contemplated change, and of dispelling any illusion under which the slaves may be found to labour, as to the real nature of that change.

It cannot, I conceive, be denied, that an early and final settlement of this question was essential to the welfare of the Colony, and the Bill having received the Royal Assent, the abolition of slavery, at the precise period therein fixed, has become inevitable; the peaceful extinction of it, however, must wholly depend upon the cordial co-operation of all classes of society with the Government in giving effect to the measure; but it is chiefly by the conduct and demeanor of the proprietors and slaves themselves that this very desirable end is to be obtained.

It is of the utmost importance then, that the proprietors should distinctly understand, that a cheerful acquiescence in the provisions of the law is not only required of them as a positive act of duty, but that their own individual interests, and the future welfare of the Colony, are deeply involved in the disposition and temper which they may evince on occasion of the promulgation of the Act;—for as, on the one hand, a hearty and zealous co-operation in prosecuting to its end the great design of absolving the Colony for ever from the reproach of slavery, will secure to them the approbation of the mother country, and at the same time considerably accelerate the completion of the preliminary arrangements for the distribution of the compensation money; so, on the other, any manifestations of hostility or resistance to the law, whilst they cannot have the effect of deferring, even for one hour, the emancipation of the slaves, or the subsequent final release of the apprentices from compulsory service, must inevitably retard the settlement of the claims of the proprietors, and cannot fail to produce unfriendly feelings towards the Colony, on the part of the people of Great Britain, who have made such an enormous pecuniary sacrifice to ensure a successful issue.

From the slaves His Majesty is entitled to expect and demand the most tranquil and orderly submission to such laws as shall be framed for their future government, whether as apprentices, or in a state of entire freedom; and no opportunity should be lost, of inculcating upon them, that they will best display their gratitude for the favour they are about to receive, by carefully abstaining from any insolence or insubordination towards their masters, and cheerfully performing the services which they may lawfully require of them; and that, by any turbulent or disorderly conduct, they will inevitably subject themselves to the severest punishments.

It is impossible at present to afford any further information as to the actual amount of the compensation to which the owner of a slave will be entitled, than is to be found in the Bill itself (which will be immediately published in the Government Gazette); but the Parliament having solemnly pledged itself to combine a due regard for the interests of the proprietors with the emancipation of the slaves, the former may rest assured, that the good faith of the British Nation will not be violated.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

It may be as well that I should here endeavour to remove an impression which is, I understand, very general, in respect of the rule by which the total amount of compensation money to be allotted to the Colony is to be apportioned. It is a mistake to suppose that the sum to be awarded to each proprietor will depend upon the number of slaves he may possess; the apportionment will, on the contrary, be regulated by the value which shall be affixed to each individual slave by the Commissioners who will be appointed for that purpose.

As regards the fears and apprehensions which are, I am aware, entertained on the following points, viz.

The entire substitution of the authority of the magistrate for that of the master during the period of apprenticeship;

The difficulties which may occur in procuring a sufficiency of labourers to cultivate the farms;

And the losses to which property may be exposed from the depredations of the idle and dissolute, at the expiration of that period;

you will not fail to impress upon the proprietors, that the Legislature has not abolished the domestic authority of the master, or decided upon the emancipation of the slave, without, at the same time, providing for "an efficient stipendiary magistracy," and "for the frequent and punctual visitation by the special justices of the peace of the apprenticed labourers within their respective districts;" and also for the enactment of laws "for the prevention and punishment of insolence and insubordination on the part of the apprentices towards their employers," "of vagrancy," or "of any conduct on the part of the apprenticed labourers injuring or tending to injure the property of their employers;" and the proprietors may further rest satisfied, that long before the period of the expiration of apprenticeship arrives, other laws will be enacted, having in like manner for their object the prevention and punishment of vagrancy after that period, and for securing a sufficiency of labourers to the Colony, by compelling, not only the liberated apprentices to earn an honest livelihood, but all others who, being capable of doing so, may be inclined to lead an idle and vagabondizing life.

It will be seen, on reference to the Bill, but particularly to the 16th section of it, that various regulations necessary for giving effect to the Act, are, as regards this Colony, to be provided for by Orders of His Majesty in Council. On this subject, I am to state, that the drafts of such orders will be made known throughout the Colony, before they pass into a law; and His Majesty's Government will not only admit, but will invite, and weigh with all care, such observations as they may call forth, and such suggestions as any person may be disposed to make, for the improvement of the projected regulations.

In conclusion, I have only to express my earnest and confident hope, that His Majesty's faithful subjects of every class throughout the Colony, will approach this question with the dispassionate feelings due to the immense interests at stake; and that they will unite in one common effort to remove possible misapprehensions, and allay the excitement which exaggerated fears and hopes may tend to create.

You will be pleased to cause His Majesty's Proclamation, and the accompanying Abstract, to be disseminated, as extensively as possible, throughout your neighbourhood.

I have, &c.

Copy of a DESPATCH from Governor Sir B. D'Urban to Mr. Secretary Stanley.

Sir, Government House, Cape of Good Hope, 1 April 1834.

Early in the last month the inclosed Memorial was presented to me for permission to hold a public meeting of "Proprietors of, and others interested in, Slave Property," with reference to the Slave Abolition Act of the 28th of August last.

No. 1.

As it was the opinion of several very respectable and intelligent individuals among the memorialists that no other measure would effectually answer the desired end of ascertaining the opinions of all the colonists upon the details of this most important matter, and considering, moreover, that the resulting representations of such a meeting would better perhaps, than any other means, serve to furnish by anticipation, "the suggestions and observations" (contemplated in your Despatch of the 5th of September last), "which His Majesty's Government will not only admit but invite, upon the draft (to be made known throughout the Colony) of an Order in Council for supplying the subordinate but necessary details for carrying into effect the series of general rules indicated by the Act, so that the Order in Council may not be promulgated without all the assistance which can be derived from those who are most conversant with the state and circumstances of the Colony;" I granted permission to hold the meeting accordingly.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

It was consequently held on the 22d of last month, and conducted with great decorum and propriety; and I have the honour also to transmit herewith the Minutes of its proceedings, which have been sent to me by the chairman.

The memorial, which I am thereby led to expect in a few days, shall form the subject of a separate Despatch; and I shall now therefore only express my hope, that the draft of the Order in Council, adverted to in the Despatch of the 5th September, may be on its way hither and soon arrive here, in order to enable it to be returned to England in due time, for the consideration of such "suggestions and observations" as may have been offered by the Colonists, before its promulgation, and for the order itself still to reach us before the Act of Parliament shall be in operation, viz. the 1st of December next.

The MEMORIAL of the undersigned Proprietors of Slaves at the Cape of Good Hope,

Humbly prayeth,

That an Act of the British Parliament having been published here by authority, together with a Proclamation of His Majesty, bearing date the 4th of September 1833, declaring an entire Abolition of Slavery to take place in this Colony from and after the 1st day of December next, the undersigned pray that it may please your Excellency to allow a public meeting to be held in Cape Town, on the 8th of March next, of the slave proprietors in general, for the purpose of taking into consideration the provisions of the said Act of Parliament, and to submit to His Majesty such regulations and measures as may be deemed by the slave proprietors to be absolutely necessary to protect their interests and the welfare and security of the Colony in general, in carrying into effect the several enactments of this Act of Parliament.

And Memorialists as in duty bound will ever pray.

Sir, Cape Town, 22d March 1834.

I do myself the honour as chairman of the public meeting of slave proprietors, held this day, under the sanction of his Excellency the Governor, to transmit for his Excellency's information copies of the resolutions unanimously passed at this meeting.

The petition founded upon these resolutions is in course of preparation, and will be laid before his Excellency at an early moment.

I have, &c.

(signed) J. J. L. Smuts,
Chairman.

The Honourable J. G. Brink, Esquire,
Acting Secretary to Government,
&c. &c. &c.

1st.—Proposed by Mr. Letterstedt; seconded by Mr. de Wet; and Unanimously resolved,—That this meeting is of opinion, that the classification or division of apprentice labourers, as set forth in the fourth and following sections of the Act of Parliament, dated 28th August 1833, has been framed without the requisite knowledge of the state of agriculture and the division of labour within this Colony, and that the same cannot be made applicable to the labouring classes here.

2d.—Proposed by Mr. Louw, of Phisante Kraal; seconded by Mr. Coenradie, of Bree River.

Resolved,—That this meeting is of opinion, that the limitation of working hours, as fixed by the said Act of Parliament for all prædial apprentice labourers, has been made without due acquaintance with the state of agriculture and the distribution of labour here; that this limitation limitation cannot possibly be observed within this Colony without the greatest injury to agriculture and the internal resources of this Colony, and without producing great injury to the moral character of the apprentice labourers themselves.

3d.—Proposed by Mr. Dreyer, senior, of Alphen; seconded by Mr. H. Cloete Llon.

Resolved,—That this meeting conceives that the interests of this Colony in general, as much as the well-being of the apprentice labourers themselves, require that no distinction should prevail between prædial and domestic apprentice labourers; and that with a view of accomplishing so desirable an object the slave proprietors and agriculturists are willing to forego the right acquired by them, under the provisions of the said Act of Parliament to the services of the prædial labourers, until the year 1840; and are content to allow all apprentice labourers who, at the passing of the Act, had attained their sixteenth year, to be classed as domestic labourers, and to be released from their apprenticeship on the 1st December 1838, upon those apprentices who, at the passing of the Act, were between their sixth and fifteenth, being apprenticed until they successively attain their twenty-first year.

4th.—Proposed by Mr. G. Vos; seconded by Mr. J. Van Breda.

Resolved,—That the 10th section of the Act of Parliament does not provide for the many circumstances when the husband or parent may be transferred separate from the wife, reputed wife, or children; and that this meeting humbly begs to submit to his Excellency the Governor the expediency of enacting some local regulation, authorizing, in cases of such transfers, the separation of a husband from his wife, or reputed wife, with their mutual consent, or whenever such separation may appear expedient for the well-being of either party, upon the case being submitted to a justice of the peace, and also to authorize the separation of parents from their children, after the latter shall have attained their twelfth year.

5th.—Proposed by Mr. A. Van Breda; seconded by Mr. de Kock.

Resolved,—That with reference to the 14th and 15th sections of the said Act of Parliament, it is the opinion of this meeting that from the vast extent of this Colony, and the scattered population thereof, it will be impossible to expect an adequate number of justices of the peace to act at the very high salaries contemplated in the said Act, without heavily burthening the expenditure of this Colony, if they are to be paid out of the revenue thereof, or without great injury to the slave proprietors, if borne upon the sum allotted as a compensation for the slave property; and that it is the opinion of this meeting, that in either case the interests of this Colony would be best considered by extending to the present justices of the peace and by conferring on other respectable resident inhabitants throughout the several districts the powers and authorities, to be delegated by a special commission under the said Act; and that many such persons would be found willing to perform those duties at the comparatively low salary of not exceeding 100 l., thereby materially relieving the distressed state of the finances of the Colony.

6th.—Proposed by Mr. J. de Villiers; seconded by Mr. Jones.

Resolved,—That the slave proprietors view with deep concern that so much time has already elapsed from the passing of the said Act before the same shall come into full operation within this Colony; and that this meeting humbly submits that the present state of anxiety existing throughout the Colony will be materially allayed upon his Excellency being pleased, with the Assistant Commissioners mentioned in the said Act, to proceed in the discharge of the important duties delegated to them, to frame and prepare by the time that the said Act shall become operative, a statement exhibiting the estimated value of each slave, so as to afford the proprietor or mortgagee some approximation to the compensation about to be received, and thereby to arrest the losses and injuries under which the slave proprietors are already suffering and are likely still further to suffer.

7th.—Proposed by Mr. Muller, of Tullagh; seconded by Mr. Advocate Brand.

Resolved,—That this meeting conceives it necessary, for the welfare of this Colony and the interests of the slave proprietors, as well as strictly conformable to the principles of equity and justice, that the compensation held out to the proprietors, should be paid at the same time when liberty is proclaimed to the slave. That the mortgagees are thereby at once deprived of the effect of their mortgages, and that the most ruinous consequences otherwise await the holders of slave property. That should it therefore be impossible to expect the entire amount of compensation due to this Colony, to be paid over at that period, this meeting solicits that his Excellency will be pleased to apply to His Majesty to place the sum of four hundred thousand pounds at the disposal of his Excellency the Governor and the Assistant Commissioners to be appointed under the Act, in order therefrom to make a proportionate advance to applicant mortgagees of slave property; the amounts thus advanced to be allowed them upon the final payment due to them under the Act.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

8th.—Proposed by Mr. Minnaar, of the Paarl; seconded by Mr. S. Van Reenen, of Constantia.

Resolved,—That it is the opinion of this meeting, that the mode contemplated to give the proprietors of slaves a right of appeal to His Majesty in Council from the appraisement of slave property, to be made under the said Act, will only subject the slave proprietors to great expense, delay and loss; and that his Excellency the Governor be therefore requested to solicit from His Majesty to extend to his Excellency the Governor for the time being, and the persons referred to in the said Act, the power of finally deciding upon all claims for compensation, upon taking to their aid a jury of nine men, to be chosen regularly from among the grand jury of the Colony.

9th.—Proposed by Mr. Adriaan Louw, of Koeberg; seconded by Mr. Advocate Hofmeyr.

Resolved,—That the date for bringing the said Act into operation into this Colony having unfortunately been fixed at the most critical period of the year, with reference to the agricultural interests of this Colony, that his Excellency may be earnestly solicited to prepare and enact such legislative enactments, to become operative at the same time with the Act, as may secure the harvest then about to be reaped, to restrain the labouring classes from acts of disobedience, vagrancy or desertion, and thereby protect the best interests of this Colony.

10th.—Proposed by Mr. R. Hoets, of Cape Town; seconded by Mr. Vander Spuy, of Koeberg.

Resolved,—That (the feelings of the slave proprietors, as to the operation of the Act, having been expressed by these resolutions) his Excellency the Governor be solicited to submit the same under the provisions of the 23d section of the said Act of Parliament, to the serious consideration of the Legislative Council of this Colony; and as these resolutions are submitted not to militate against the spirit of the said Act (in which it is the wish of the meeting to mark their general acquiescence), that his Excellency may be solicited under the aforesaid authority, to press the same for adoption upon the Legislative Council, in order that a declaratory Act may pass, which shall, in the terms of the Acts of Parliament, enable His Majesty to grant the relief prayed for.

11th.—Proposed by Mr. D. Eksteen, of Kerstenbosch; seconded by Mr. J. Cloete, of Constantia.

Resolved,—That a petition to his Excellency the Governor, founded upon the foregoing resolutions, be now read and approved, and submitted for signature.

12th.—Proposed by Mr. Van Reenen, of Ganzekraal; seconded by Mr. J. Kotze, of Berg River.

Resolved,—That the committee, nominated at a public meeting of the slave proprietors on the 17th September 1832, be thanked for their exertions on behalf of the interests of the slave proprietors, and that they be requested to continue their exertions in support of the interests of the slave proprietors and the slaves themselves, both in this Colony and in England.

13th.—Proposed by Mr. G. Meyer, of Cape Town; seconded by Mr. Jurgens.

Resolved,—That this meeting express their sincere thanks to his Excellency the Governor for the frank and candid manner in which he has pleased to sanction this public meeting.

14th.—Proposed by Mr. Advocate Cloete; seconded by Mr. A. Smuts, of Cape Town.

Resolved,—That copies of the foregoing Resolutions be transmitted by the Chairman to his Excellency the Governor, with the information that they have all been unanimously adopted by this meeting.

COPY of a DESPATCH from Governor Sir B. D'Urban to Mr. Secretary Stanley.

Government House, Cape of Good Hope,
21 April 1834.

Sir,

WITH reference to my Despatch of the 1st instant I have now the honour to transmit the Memorial of "Proprietors and others interested in slave property," resulting from the public meeting held on the 22d March last, with my appointment thereon.

No. 1.—22 March 1834.
No. 2.—19 April 1834.

The tone and temper of this Memorial seem to me moderate and unobjectionable, considering too how deeply the vital interests of the Memorialists are involved in the subject of it.

His

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

His Majesty's Government will judge how far their wishes can be met in any of the instances upon which they are expressed, "without being in contradiction to the Act of Parliament, or any part thereof;" but there is one part of their prayer to which I, with all deference but most earnestly, solicit a favourable consideration. It is that which prays that a certain portion at least of the compensation money may be made available within the Colony, by the time that the Act takes effect, viz. 1st December next. If this may not be acceded to, it is scarcely possible to foresee the extent of ruin and misery which will be the certain consequence, not only to the slave proprietors, but to all classes in the Colony, and necessarily therefore to the Colony itself.

With reference to the desire expressed in the Memorial for the formation of the Auxiliary Commission of Compensation, you will have seen by my Despatch of the 29th of March last, that I had already, without having received any official communication from the Commissioners of Compensation in England, taken the necessary preliminary measures for carrying that measure into effect.

I have, &c.

(signed) B. D'Urban.

P. S.—It appears to me not superfluous to request your reference upon the two important points of the "compensation money," and of the necessary number of "special magistrates," to the observations thereon in Colonel Wade's Despatch of the 6th of December last.

To His Excellency Sir Benjamin D'Urban, K. C. B., Governor, &c. &c. &c.
Cape of Good Hope.

The MEMORIAL of the undersigned Proprietors and others interested in Slave Property.

Humbly sheweth,

That the Memorialists having, under the sanction of your Excellency, assembled for the purpose of submitting such measures as may be necessary to the welfare of the Colony, as affected by the Act of Parliament for the Abolition of Slavery, take leave to suggest the following propositions, setting forth and tending to secure the interests both of the white and coloured population, without deviating from the spirit of the Act, especially as indicated by its 23d clause.

That the appropriation of the apprenticed labourer's time in the 4th and following sections of the Act, has been contemplated without full information or reference to the character of labour and nature of local circumstances.

That to preserve the apprentice in those industrious habits, which can alone render him competent in due time to earn an independent livelihood, and advance himself in the qualities of frugality, steadiness and application, so indispensable to the free burgher, and necessary to the well-being of society, it is requisite either to find him the means of occupation during the weekly disposable hours of his apprenticeship, or to make such arrangement as shall contract that period to the contentment both of the master and servant.

That the optional intermission of daily or weekly labour would strike at the root of every regular occupation, trade and manufacture, placing the master at the mercy of his assistant, defeating any certainty in operations requiring continuity, incurring a double expense in attendance, and entailing the decline of such as are, and the deprivation of such as would be, established; thus cutting off the future means of success and subsistence of the negroes themselves.

That the agriculturists of this Colony are for the most part poor, having invested their all in the part payment for slaves, and pledged their future labours for the residue of the purchase money. With means thus anticipated, his returns scanty and precarious, it is much if the farmer can (after paying his taxes and the annual interest due for these identical slaves or apprentices) pay wages for the apprentice's time at the busy seasons of harvest, wine-pressing, &c. The demand for their over-hours will therefore be simultaneous, occasional and dearly paid.

That even thus hiring would be a fresh expenditure upon the depressed produce of this country, diminish its extraction, and turn its export trade into foreign channels, to the future injury of the freed men themselves.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

That the compensation money being withheld for a long time (as it must be till all the stipulated arrangements be completed according to the Act) the owner of mortgaged slaves is thereby compelled to pay double for interest: first, the interest to his creditor for purchase money of the slave, and then the wages to that slave, turned into a free labourer; so that before the compensation money can arrive to him, his utmost frugality, and all the indulgence of his creditors, cannot preserve him from the necessity of materially reducing, or totally abandoning the business of his farm, whereby agricultural improvement will be lost, farms fall to decay, and the condition of the whole country retrograde, to the great misery of the white inhabitants, and the reflective prejudice of negro apprentices and freed men.

That, without further dilating upon the increased causes of poverty to the whole of the country proprietors, the isolation of their homesteads originally established, because of a spring on the spot, and frequently surrounded with an arid desert, afford the negro apprentice no chance of seeking for work in an immediate neighbourhood for his over-time, as in a densely populated or manufacturing country; and with very few markets, and those distant, difficult of access, and adequately supplied from their environs, he is deprived of encouragement even where the sufficiency of moisture might permit him to exercise his industry. His over-time must, therefore, whether he wish it or not, be leisure; and, to dissipate its ennui, there is no gainsaying that the vices of intemperance and gaming, the desultory pastime of the chace, &c. would be called in to render these irresponsible days, during six years, the bane of domestic order at the farm; but also devote the apprentice to habits as inveterate as they are subversive of those principles which must have been contemplated by His Majesty and the British nation, as calculated to prolong and render happy the existence of the dependent being, whose exaggerated bands have been broken at such vast expense.

That the prædial apprentice would, by the longer continuation of his term, be obliged to forego his family ties to the household female apprentice during two years, or the latter be virtually bound to the spot thus long beyond her due time.

Memorialists therefore submit, that it will not only better satisfy the prædial apprentice above sixteen years of age, but be more beneficial to him, that, as the aggregate of his spare hours would approximate to two years of his apprenticeship, he shall, instead of his weekly leisure hours, have the benefit of two years in the term of his apprenticeship, so that the term of the household and prædial apprenticeship shall expire together. And to the effecting of this suggestion, Memorialists add their most earnest supplication, as a measure calculated to avert a mass of wretchedness from the white colonists, and a miserable wreck of the good principles of the coloured inhabitants.

Memorialists beg leave further to represent, that the apprenticing of children of tender years with the same uncontrolled privilege as the grown up labourer, and for a shorter term than their attainment of the age of twenty-one years, would be unreasonable to the master, injurious to the skill and morals of the servant, and mischievous to social order.

That without recapitulating the temptations to irregularity, which would operate still more powerfully upon youth, unarmed with the sagacity and experience of the elder negro, with slight reference to the misguided tenderness, which would restrain the master from repressing nascent vice by domestic chastisement, and which leaves him the painful alternative of recurring to the hardening exposure of the magistrate's court, upon every aberration of thoughtless youth, or of allowing perverseness to ripen into crime, it is necessary to present to your Excellency's notice, that men who have families of their own to maintain, could not afford to teach their art or trade to apprentices, unless a few years of profit from their labour should be the bonus in reimbursement for the incumbrance, expense and trouble of their earlier years.

Memorialists, therefore, for the interest of both parties, and particularly for the forwarding in life, and the well-being of the freed youth under sixteen years of age, solicit that they be subject to apprenticeship until the age of twenty-one, under proper regulations.

That the separation of children from their parents, and these from each other, being sometimes desired by the parties themselves, and for their mutual advantage and restraint thereon appearing, as relates to the children, to be wholly unnecessary after twelve years of age, and on occasions (as where the parent is of irreclaimable bad habits) antecedent to that period, it is respectfully submitted that the Act, section 10, does on these points require to be qualified and explained by local enactments.

That the Memorialists, already impoverished by the continued languishing and unprofitable state of their export trade, are at this time with extreme difficulty able to meet the demands for the revenue, and have shown, in the course of the foregoing explanatory and deprecatory solicitations, that highly as they appreciate, and much as they hope from your Excellency's disposition to soften the rigour of this pronunciation of the will of the people of England, they can neither conceal from themselves, nor will they shrink from the view of others, that they must await a period of calamity;—a crisis, which will diminish the contributors and lessen the means of even such as remain.

With such an avowal of their knowledge of their trying situation, and with such a spirit of loyal obedience to a measure which destroys them, they are bold to declare that they confidently expect, in the solicitude of the sovereign, and the hands to which their fate has here been immediately intrusted, to meet with all the relief that the effectuation of the measure itself will admit.

Memorialists,

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

Memorialists, therefore, entreat your Excellency to recommend to His Majesty's gracious consideration, that in a Colony so extensive, so sterile and thinly spotted with farms, the special magistrates, to be efficient must be numerous; and that the salaries named in the Act, would in consequence be an intolerable burthen on the Colony; whilst Memorialists humbly offer to notice, that every useful purpose would be answered by extending the special commission to the actual justices of the peace (who would, moreover, require no interpreters), and by adding such number as might be further necessary, at a salary not exceeding one hundred pounds per annum, which Memorialists beg to add, would procure the services of men of education, intelligence and tried integrity throughout the Colony.

That a ruinous depreciation has, since the reception of the Act, ensued in slave property ordered for sale at auction; that the continuance of the uncertainty and anxiety thereon would, at a period when the mortgagees are rendered apprehensive for their security, be attended with such disastrous aggravation of this inevitable loss, that Memorialists deem it of the most imperious urgency that the public mind be quieted, and the interested parties re-assured, by the earliest possible promulgation of not only wholesome regulations, but of some guiding valuation; they, therefore, humbly crave that your Excellency will be pleased to appoint the Assistant Commissioners; and considering the pressure of the emergency, the large amount of property at stake, and that the suffering parties have in no manner brought their losses upon themselves, your Excellency will cause to be made up, before the said Act shall become operative, official statements, exhibiting the estimated value of each slave, whereby a proximate opinion can be formed of the accruing compensation money, and the proprietor and mortgagee be enabled to effect a compromise, without altogether breaking up the home and hopes of industrious families, who form, in number and respectability, the strength of the interior, upon vague and fluctuating apprehensions.

That as the Act of Parliament has adopted and acknowledged the principle of compensation in a manner equally solemn as emancipation, and as by not bringing them jointly into operation, an inevitable and certain ruin of nearly all the Colonists will therefore ensue, Memorialists pray your Excellency respectfully to submit to His Majesty's enlightened consideration the justness and fairness of ordering the compensation to take effect at the same time with the general emancipation.

That in the event of such being absolutely infeasible, your Excellency's Memorialists further beg leave to submit, that the greater proportion of slave property is held under mortgage; that the mortgagee, being by the first operation of the Act deprived of the effect and value of his mortgage, must sue the debtor, whose utter ruin will in most cases ensue, unless the Government at the same moment that it assumes and sets free the property be also prepared to liquidate the incumbrance thereon; that not only the interests of the proprietors of slaves require, but moreover that it would be but consistent with the first principles of justice and equity, that the amount of compensation to be awarded to the proprietors of slaves should be paid over to them at the same time when they are deprived of their right of property. But Memorialists, impressed with the difficulties which must necessarily beset the final appropriation of so large a sum to be allotted amongst so many, yet earnestly pray that your Excellency will, on their behalf, supplicate that His Majesty may be pleased to cause a sum of about four hundred thousand pounds (£.400,000) to be placed at the disposal of your Excellency and the Assistant Commissioners, so that provisional relief may, with due reference to proportionate value, be extended to applicant slave owners, in partial discharge of the mortgages now held, upon their slaves, and registered for adjustment upon the final apportionment under the Act.

That Memorialists request your Excellency to place before His Majesty their grateful acknowledgments for reserving to them the privilege to appeal to His Majesty in Council, and their humble suggestion, that if it meet His Majesty's pleasure, the slave proprietors would derive greater advantage (in obviating much cost, delay and obscurity of account) should His Majesty be graciously pleased to concede, that his Excellency the Governor of this Colony, and the Assistant Commissioners, were vested with powers finally to decide appeals, on calling to their aid nine persons indiscriminately out of the grand jury next on the court roll.

That this Colony has long laboured under much individual loss and vexation by the prevalence of vagrant and marauding habits among the coloured population, and without meaning to imply that there will exist a stronger disposition to restlessness and intemperance in the free apprentices than is found in the civilized poor in Europe, Memorialists humbly submit, that it is scarcely to be expected that there will be a greater bias to the contrary virtues, and that until experience shall convince them of the misery of seeking liberty in the wilderness, there will be more frequent and expensive depredations on the farmer's flocks, &c.

Memorialists therefore, with the fact before them that the Act unfortunately happens to commence its operation in the midst of harvest, and that the natural excitement arising from the alteration in condition, may lead the apprentice to an unmeasured conception of his liberty of will and person, humbly represent, that, as early as is consistent with the full consideration of a subject which they are well aware stamps the entire institutions of a country with the character of abasement or elevation, a sound and well-digested law for compelling persons who have no ostensible means of subsistence to account for their time, and to accept of employment to give them a legal settlement, and oblige them to contribute to the upholding of that system of order to which they are debtors for protection, should be enacted and promulgated, so that apprentices may seasonably learn, that whilst their rational liberty is guaranteed, there will be no scope allowed for licentiousness and desertion.

Memorialists, convinced that the advantage of one class can never be permanently founded upon the loss or detriment of another, have sought in all their representations as much the interest of the coloured as of the white population; they have kept strictly within the spirit of the Act; they have candidly stated the claims of the Colony, founded upon the universally recognized principles of justice. That admitted, Memorialists will neither withhold their wishes nor exertions, that the freed people shall become all that their deliverers can desire, and that the thus regulated Act would in due time render them.

Memorialists therefore humbly trust, that your Excellency will confirm their hopes, and after a declaratory enactment in Council to that effect, submit to His Majesty their request for the grant of provisional relief, as before solicited.

And your Excellency's Memorialists, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

Sir, Colonial Office, 19th April 1834.

With reference to the Memorial of Proprietors and others interested in slave property, dated 22d March 1834, and presented to his Excellency the Governor on the 7th instant, I am commanded to transmit to you herewith, for the information of Memorialists, the accompanying appointment of his Excellency thereon; and have the honour, &c.

APPOINTMENT.

"MEMORIAL of Proprietors and others interested in Slave Property, dated 22d March 1834," and presented to me on the 7th April following:

I have given my careful attention to this Memorial, and I hasten to transmit it to the Secretary of State for His Majesty's most gracious consideration.

By a reference to the 16th clause of the Act of Parliament of the 28th August 1833, as well as to the 23d clause of it, the Memorialists will be aware that the latter of these does not apply to this Colony, because it is one of those Colonies to which the legislative authority of His Majesty in Council extends, and consequently the office of supplying by local enactments such subordinate details as, without being repugnant or contradictory to the Act, or any part thereof, may be necessary for giving effect to the series of general rules which it indicates, for regulating the future relations of the employer and of those who are to labour in his service, devolves upon His Majesty, acting with the advice and consent of His Council; accordingly, the necessary local enactments for that purpose in this Colony will be made by an Order of His Majesty in Council; but that this may not be passed without first having had the advantage of local knowledge and experience, I have been instructed by His Majesty's Government to expect (and doubtless shall receive by one of the first mails from England now so long due) "a draft of the proposed Order in Council, that it may be generally made known throughout the Colony; and His Majesty's Government will then not only admit, but invite and weigh with all care such observations as it may call forth, and such suggestions as any persons may be disposed to make for the improvement of its projected regulations; so that it may not be finally promulgated without all the assistance which can be derived from those who are most conversant with the state and circumstances of the Colony."

Doubtless the representations and observations contained in the Memorial will not fail to furnish most essential suggestions upon the expected draft of the Order in Council, wherever they may be applicable to its provisions, and may not be found "repugnant or contradictory to the Act of Parliament."

Meanwhile, in transmitting the Memorial, I earnestly and especially recommend to the favourable consideration of His Majesty's Government, that part of it which prays, that the compensation, or at least a certain portion of it, may, as soon as possible, be rendered available in this Colony for the important and vital object therein set forth. I had already,

before

before the Memorial was prepared, appointed the "Auxiliary Commission" to which it adverts. I had not either been unmindful of the necessity of a law for providing for the location and employment of those who wander about the Colony, without either the one or the other, and its preliminary arrangements are in progress. It is not to be denied, however, that to render it effectual without being sometimes individually oppressive, is a task of no ordinary difficulty; it would indeed, at any rate, have been indispensable, before the conclusive enactment of such a law, for the legislators to become acquainted with the provisions which the Order in Council, with reference to the 16th clause of the Act of Parliament, will naturally have proposed, in that regard for the regulation of the apprenticed labourers, in order that there may be collision between the one and the other.

WITH reference to the latter part of the Despatch which I had the honour to address to you on the 1st of April last, I think it right to apprize you, that hitherto no "draft of the Order in Council," therein adverted to as announced in your Despatch of the 5th September last, (and of which I have been in anxious expectation), has yet been received by me.

Sir, Downing-street, 12 September 1834.

I HAVE to acknowledge the receipt of your Despatch of the 31st of May last.

For various reasons to which I need not stop to advert, it has not been thought necessary or advisable to submit for the consideration of the King in Council any distinct measure for the purpose of regulating the future relations of the apprenticed labourers at the Cape to their employers.

It has been considered that such a measure, grounded as it should be upon a comprehensive knowledge of the habitual relations in which all the parties concerned stand to each other, would best be devised and completed on the spot.

The accompanying circular instruction to the Governors of certain Sugar Colonies will impart to you generally the views and wishes of His Majesty's Government, in regard to the nature of the detailed enactments by which the intentions of the Legislature are to be carried into effect; and I beg leave to recommend to you to take the necessary steps for preparing the draft of an ordinance for the consideration of the Legislative Council, which shall be grounded upon the principles and rules laid down in the paper annexed to the circular instructions.

P. S.—It will be advisable, for the sake of despatch, that in all cases in which the proposed Cape Ordinance may differ from the Order in Council, you should report to me, most fully and distinctly, the reasons which in your mind make such deviations necessary.

Government House, Cape of Good Hope,
Sir, 7 January 1835.

WITH reference to my Despatch of the 31st May, I have the honour to inform you, that yours to me of the 12th of September last, with the models of enactments for the guidance of the Legislative Council, reached me on the evening of Saturday the 29th of November.

I lost no time in proceeding thereon, and the Attorney-General having framed without delay a draft of an Ordinance, it was proposed to the Legislative Council, read a first time, and published on the 5th of December; and as soon as the prescribed three weeks had elapsed, again brought under discussion and passed, and is herewith transmitted.

Ordinance, No. 1. 5 Jan. 1835. printed in the Appx. (B.) No. 76.

The principles of the Act of Parliament and models transmitted have, I believe, been carefully observed; but the whole slave population have been classed as nonprædial labourers; this being alike the desire of the employers and employed, and doubtless much to the advantage of the latter, as will readily be seen by the enclosed schedule. The labour besides, in this Colony, of farmers, differing very widely from that in the West Indies, and being so promiscuous that it would have been in many instances impracticable to class it, and would have constantly led (and was accordingly deprecated by the labourers themselves) to the placing near connexions, husbands and wives for instance, respectively in different conditions; the one becoming altogether free two years sooner than the other.

No. 2.

I believe that this Ordinance is well adapted to those whom it concerns, and I therefore humbly trust to its receiving His Majesty's gracious approval and confirmation.

COPY of a DESPATCH from Mr. Secretary Grant to Governor Sir B. D'Urban.

Sir, Downing-street, 30th April 1835.

I HAVE received and laid before the King your Despatch of the 7th January, enclosing an Ordinance, intituled, "An Ordinance for giving due effect to the provisions of an Act of Parliament, passed in the third and fourth years of the reign of His Majesty King William the Fourth, intituled, 'An Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies; for promoting the industry of the manumitted Slaves; and for compensating the Persons hitherto entitled to the services of such Slaves,' and dated the 28th August 1833."

This Ordinance has been passed in fulfilment of the conditions imposed by the Act of Parliament for the Abolition of Slavery on the different Colonial Legislatures, in order to entitle the colonists to a participation in the compensation fund. In this instance, that obligation appears to have been fulfilled in the most complete and satisfactory manner. The law is in effect a mere transcript of His Majesty's Order in Council, made for a similar purpose in relation to Trinidad, St. Lucia and Mauritius, with such changes only as are necessarily incident to the essential distinctions between those Islands and the Colony of the Cape of Good Hope, in rural economy, climate, and topographical circumstances.

I observe, however, that this Act supposes (see cap. 1. sections 1 & 3,) the employment of no less than 22 special justices, which number you have subsequently reduced to 14, and I am willing to believe that the extent, and still more the inaccessible character of many of the interior districts, would probably render the law altogether nugatory, if a very much larger number of magistrates were not employed for the execution of this Ordinance, than those who have been sent for this purpose from this kingdom. Hence may perhaps arise the necessity for the employment of some of the proprietary body as special magistrates, though I feel myself called upon to desire that you will avoid having recourse to such assistance, unless when it may be impossible to procure any other.

In this ordinance, the distinction between prædial and non-prædial apprenticed labourers, is entirely superseded. The whole slave population of the Colony are hereafter to be considered, for the purposes of the Act of Parliament, as non-prædial. It appears to me that this is an extremely judicious arrangement, since there is no doubt that the distinction was made by Parliament exclusively on account of the peculiar circumstances of the slaves in the sugar colonies. If the Colony of the Cape of Good Hope alone had been in question, Parliament would certainly have proceeded upon the principle which has been adopted by the Governor and Legislative Council. The result is, that in this important settlement every vestige of slavery will have disappeared by the 1st of December 1838.

In cap. 10. of this Ordinance, is a declaration, that hereafter the interests of an employer in the services of any labourer shall be liable to be seized and taken in execution, under process of law against such employer. In this case, the abandonment of the distinction between prædial and non-prædial labourers, may give to the Ordinance an effect injurious to the whole body, which could scarcely have been contemplated. Although the legal distinction between the two classes may, for the present purpose, have been disregarded, they will not the less be distinct from each other in point of fact. A man accustomed to work on a particular farm, and having there his home, his connexions and attachments, local and personal, ought not to be detached from it in satisfaction of the debts of his employer. At the present day, there is no part of the British West Indies in which the law admits such a separation. It appears to me, therefore, desirable that you should propose for the adoption of the Legislative Council an explanatory Ordinance, declaring that no labourer habitually employed on any farm, should be liable to be removed from it in pursuance of any judgment or execution against the employer; but that, in all such cases, the land and the services of the attached husbandmen must be seized and sold together.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

Such are the only remarks which have been suggested to me by the perusal of the Ordinance, which, in all other respects, has appeared to me entitled to His Majesty's unqualified approbation; and I have accordingly to acquaint you that, subject to the qualification which I have mentioned, His Majesty is pleased to confirm the said Ordinance.

AN ACT for relieving the Slave Population from the Obligations imposed upon them by the recent Act of the Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, intituled, "An Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies; for promoting the Industry of the Manumitted Slaves; and for compensating the Persons hitherto entitled to the Services of such Slaves."—(Passed 4th June 1834.)

Whereas by the 23d section of an Act of the Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, passed in the 3d and 4th years of the reign of His Majesty King William the Fouth, intituled, "An Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies; for promoting the Industry of the Manumitted Slaves; and for compensating the Persons hitherto entitled to the Services of such Slaves," it is enacted, "that in case the Governor, Council and Assembly of any one or more of His Majesty's Colonies aforesaid shall, by any Act or Acts of General Assembly for that purpose made, substitute for the several enactments thereinbefore contained, or any of them, any enactments accomplishing the several objects in such thereinbefore contained enactments respectively contemplated as fully and to the like effect, but in a manner and form better adapted to the local circumstances of any such Colonies or Colony; and in case His Majesty shall, by any Order or Orders to be by Him made, by the advice of His Privy Council, confirm and allow any such Act or Acts of Assembly, and shall in and by any such Order or Orders in Council recite and set forth at length the several provisions and enactments of that Act for which such other enactments as aforesaid shall have been substituted by any such Act or Acts of General Assembly, then and in such case so much and such parts of that Act as shall be so recited and set forth at length in any such Order or Orders of His Majesty in Council shall be suspended and cease to be of any force or effect in any such Colony from and after the arrival and proclamation therein of any such Order or Orders of His Majesty in Council, and shall continue to be so suspended so long as any such substituted enactments shall continue in force and unrepealed, and no longer."

And whereas the Governor, Council and Assembly of this Colony, having maturely considered the system of apprenticeship prescribed by the said Act of Parliament in all its bearings, have arrived at a conviction of the expediency of dispensing with the same, and allowing the slave population to pass to a state of absolute and entire freedom on the 1st day of August 1834:

And whereas the ordinary local resources cannot be justly expected to be equal to bearing the increased expenditure which must obviously be required for accomplishing the several objects contemplated in this Act, and the Legislature is therefore imperatively called upon to appeal to the generous and benevolent feeling and consideration of the King's Most Excellent Majesty, and implore His gracious assistance in relieving this ancient Colony from "the 4½ per cent. impost," a burthen which has long and severely pressed upon its interests, under which Colonies not more conspicuous for their loyalty and attachment to His Majesty's person and Government, though possessing infinitely greater wealth and local advantages, have never laboured, and from which its present impoverished condition and dejecting prospects now urge it, with all due and profound reverence for His Majesty, and an implicit reliance upon His royal and paternal care, and the solicitude He has invariably manifested for the welfare of all classes of His faithful subjects, to prefer its strong equitable claim to be in future equally free:

1. May it therefore please Your Most Excellent Majesty, that it may be enacted, and be it enacted by the Governor and Commander-in-Chief of Your Majesty's Islands of Antigua, Montserrat, Barbuda, St. Christopher, Nevis, Anguilla, the Virgin Islands and Dominica, and the Council and Assembly of this Your Majesty's Island of Antigua, and it is hereby enacted and ordained, by the authority of the same, that all and every the persons who, on the 1st day of August 1834, shall be holden in slavery within this Colony or its dependencies, shall upon and from and after the said 1st day of August 1834 become and be, to all intents and purposes, free and discharged of and from all manner of slavery, and of and from the obligations imposed by the said hereinbefore in part recited Act of the Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, intituled, "An Act for the Abolition of Slavery Slavery throughout the British Colonies; for promoting the Industry of the Manumitted Slaves; and for compensating the Persons hitherto entitled to the Services of such Slaves," and shall be absolutely and for ever manumitted; and that the children thereafter to be born to any such persons, and the offspring of such children, shall in like manner be free from their birth; and that from and after the said 1st day of August 1834, slavery shall be and is hereby utterly and for ever abolished, and declared unlawful within this Colony and its dependencies.

2. And be it further enacted, that the said persons so manumitted shall on the said 1st day of August 1834 be considered eligible, in the several parishes in which they were last holden in slavery, to receive parochial relief on the same footing as all His Majesty's other subjects in this Colony.

3. And be it further enacted, that until the 1st day of August 1835, it shall not be lawful for the owners or directors of plantations to evict or expel any labourer or labourers, person or persons, who shall be willing to continue to perform such work as shall be assigned to him, her or them, and shall truly and faithfully perform the same for stipulated wages, or who shall be then labouring under any such disease or mental or bodily infirmity as may render him, her or them incapable of earning his, her or their subsistence, from the habitations or tenements which he, she or they respectively personally occupied in their state of slavery, except in case of insubordinate, quarrelsome, disorderly or riotous behaviour, or in case of drunkenness, theft, trespass or other gross delinquency on their part, when it shall be competent to any two or more justices of the peace, upon due and impartial inquiry made into the merits of the complaint, by an authority under their hands and seals, to sanction the expulsion of any such delinquent; but the said owners or directors of plantations shall be and are hereby required to permit and suffer the said labourers and persons to have and enjoy respectively the personal occupation of the said habitations or tenements, by way of a temporary and gratuitous accommodation, for the year ending on the said 1st day of August 1835, and no longer, without any molestation or interruption of or by the said owners or directors of plantations, under a penalty of 5 l. for every offence, to be recovered and applied in the manner hereinafter mentioned.

4. And be it further enacted, that from and after the said 1st day of August 1834, all owners or directors of plantations in this Colony shall be and are hereby required to supply those persons who in their state of slavery were attached to such plantations respectively, and shall at the time of emancipation be afflicted with any such disease or mental or bodily infirmity as may render them incapable of earning their subsistence, with such food, clothing, lodging, medicine, medical attendance, and such other maintenance and allowances, as by the laws now in force in this Colony an owner is required to supply to and for any slaves being of the same age and sex, and under the same circumstances as such persons shall respectively be, until proper arrangements and due and adequate provision shall be made for their maintenance and relief by the respective parishes, or by some other benevolent and effectual plan in their favour, and no longer, under a penalty of 5 l. for every offence, to be recovered and applied in the manner hereinafter mentioned.

5. Provided always, and be it enacted, that in the event of any dispute or difficulty in ascertaining whether any particular individual shall be included in such number of persons, it shall and may be lawful for the parties interested to make their appeal to two or more of the nearest of His Majesty's justices of the peace, who, taking to their counsel some experienced medical practitioner, shall under their hands and seals make a peremptory and conclusive decision in this behalf.

6. And be it further enacted, that the penalties imposed by this Act shall and may be recovered before any two or more justices of the peace; and all justices of the peace are hereby empowered and required, upon complaint to them made, to grant a warrant to bring the offender before them, at the time and place in such warrant specified; and if on conviction of such offender on his or her confession, or on the evidence of any one or more credible witness or witnesses upon oath (which oath such justices are hereby empowered to administer), any such penalty shall not be forthwith paid, it shall and may be lawful to and for such justices to levy the same by distress, and for want of distress to commit every such offender to the common gaol, there to remain without bail or mainprize for any time not exceeding 20 days, unless such penalty, and all reasonable charges attending the recovery thereof, shall be sooner paid; and all such penalties, when so recovered and levied as aforesaid, shall be paid into the public treasury, to be applied to the general uses of the Colony.

AN ACT for establishing a new System of Police, and for increasing the Power of the Magistracy of this Island in the Appointment of Rural Constables, and for providing and regulating a House of Correction.—(Passed 31st July 1834).

Preamble.

WHEREAS it is highly expedient and necessary that the police establishment of this Island, and the laws regulating the same, should be altered and modified, so as to render them more suitable to the changes in the social condition and circumstances of the Colony, consequent on the entire abolition of slavery, from and after the 1st day of August next:

May

May it therefore please Your Most Excellent Majesty, that it may be enacted, and be it enacted, by the Governor and Commander-in-Chief of Your Majesty's Islands of Antigua, Montserrat, Barbuda, St. Christopher, Nevis, Anguilla, the Virgin Islands and Dominica, and the Council and Assembly of this Your Majesty's Island of Antigua, and it is hereby enacted and ordained, by the authority of the same, that the several laws, establishing and regulating the police now in force in this Island, shall, from and after the 1st day of August next, be repealed, and the same are hereby repealed and declared void and of none effect.

All laws regulating the police now in force, repealed.

2. And be it enacted and ordained, by the authority aforesaid, that his Excellency the Governor and Commander-in-Chief, or, in his absence, the Commander-in-Chief for the time being, shall select and, by commission or warrant under his hand and seal, appoint such able-bodied and discreet persons, between the ages of 21 and 45 years, as may appear to him to be properly qualified for their respective stations, to form a body of general police; that is to say,

Governor, by commission or warrant, to appoint able-bodied persons between 21 and 45 years of age, to form new police.

One superintendent, or chief inspector of police, who shall receive monthly out of the public treasury, for the services to be by him performed, a salary of 600 l. currency per annum.

Four assistant inspectors of police, who shall each receive, in like manner, a salary of 220 l. currency for his services.

Twenty serjeants or subordinate officers of police, who shall each, in like manner, receive a salary of 120 l. currency for his services.

And one clerk of police, who shall receive, in like manner, a salary of 200 l. currency for his services.

Composition of police: 1 superintendent, 600 l. currency, per ann.; 4 assistant inspectors, 220 l. per ann. each, and 20 serjeants or subordinate officers, at 120 l. per ann. each; 1 clerk, 200 l. per annum.

3. And be it enacted and ordained, by the authority aforesaid, that every member of such body of police shall, on his appointment, take the following oath: "I do swear that I will, to the utmost of my ability, faithfully execute the several duties as of police, in the preservation of the public peace, and in the prevention of all offences against the persons and properties of His Majesty's subjects, as is required of me by and under an Act of this Island, intituled, 'An Act for establishing a new System of Police, and for increasing the Power of the Magistracy of this Island in the Appointment of Rural Constables, and for providing and regulating a House of Correction.' So help me God." And it shall not be lawful for any member of such police to pursue any other occupation in life, or take any fee whatever, or other emolument, beyond his salary for the performance of any of the duties required of him.

Every member of police to take oath of office.

Form of oath.

Members of police to pursue no other occupation in life.

4. And be it enacted and ordained, by the authority aforesaid, that in the event of any vacancy by death, resignation or removal in this body of police, such vacancy shall, as promptly as possible, be filled up by a new appointment from his Excellency the Governor, or the Commander-in-Chief for the time being; and in the event of the incapacity, disobedience, insobriety or any misconduct on the part of any subordinate member of such police, it shall and may be lawful for the superintendent to report the circumstances to his Excellency the Governor, or Commander-in-Chief for the time being, who shall have power to cause the instant dismissal of such person or persons, and to make a new appointment in his or their room.

Vacancies by death, removal or resignation, to be filled up by new appointment by the Governor.

5. And be it enacted and ordained, by the authority aforesaid, that the persons composing such police shall wear such simple and unexpensive dress or uniform, or shall be distinguished by such badge or letters and numbers, on a conspicuous part of their dress, as his Excellency the Governor, or Commander-in-Chief for the time being, may be pleased to direct and appoint; and they shall each be furnished, at the public expense, with a suitable staff of office, and shall each be exempted from the performance of militia duties.

Police to wear such dress, uniform or badge as the Governor shall direct, and to be furnished with staff of office, to be exempted from militia duty.

6. And be it enacted and ordained, by the authority aforesaid, that the duties of the said police shall be to aid and assist the magistrates in the performance of their duties, and vigilantly to detect, arrest, apprehend and bring to justice all persons guilty of felonies, larcenies of all descriptions, misdemeanors and trespasses, as well as all rogues, vagabonds, idle and disorderly persons, and to suppress and prevent all tumults, riots, brawls, outrages and disorders, and all other offences of any kind soever against the public peace and laws of this Island.

Duties of police to aid and assist the magistrates, to apprehend all persons guilty of felonies, &c., all idle and disorderly persons, rogues, vagabonds, &c.

7. And be it enacted and ordained, by the authority aforesaid, that the superintendent of the said police shall be required to keep, for his exclusive use, two active and serviceable horses, to enable him to be constantly on the alert, to visit frequently the different posts or stations where any portion of such police may be placed, and to proceed as promptly as may be to any part of the Island; and he shall make such rules and orders for the interior government and discipline of the said body of police, taking care that each individual thereof performs the duty assigned him; and, if need be, he shall exercise the subordinate officers to the use of arms; and he shall report all particulars which may come under his observation relating to the preservation of the public peace, as often as may be required, to his Excellency the Governor, or Commander-in-Chief for the time being; and to enable such superintendent to act with more promptitude and decision on any particular emergency, he shall be named and appointed as one of His Majesty's justices in the several commissions of the peace for this Island; and it shall and may be lawful for the said superintendent, not only to command and control the persons composing such body of police, but at any time, as need may be, to put himself in communication with any other of His Majesty's justices of peace for this Island,

Superintendent of police to keep 2 active serviceable horses, to visit frequently out-stations, to frame rules for interior government of police, to exercise subordinate officers to the use of arms.

Superintendent to be in the several commissions of the peace; justices of the peace to co-operate, to call to his aid ordinary constables or rural constables.

Island, who are all hereby required to co-operate with him, and to give him every aid and information in their power in the lawful execution of his duties; and it shall and may be lawful for the said superintendent, at any time, to call to his aid and assistance any neighbouring constable or constables, whether the same be the ordinary constables of divisions appointed by His Majesty's justices in grand sessions, or the rural constables on neighbouring plantations, to be appointed under and by virtue of this Act, who are each and all hereby required to afford a ready and prompt assistance, and to obey any written or verbal summons by or on behalf of the said superintendent of police.

Each assistant inspector to act as chief or senior at his station.

8. And be it enacted and ordained, by the authority aforesaid, that each assistant of police shall act as the chief or senior officer at the particular station to which he may be appointed, under the supervision and direction nevertheless of the superintendent, who shall be regarded as the superior of the whole police department within the Island.

Every inspector and subordinate officer of police to have the same authority belonging to constables.

9. And be it enacted and ordained, by the authority aforesaid, that every assistant inspector and serjeant, or subordinate officer of police, shall have the authority appertaining generally to the office of constable, and each and every of them shall have the same power and authority in executing all warrants, summonses and other orders of magistrates generally, as any other constable duly appointed and sworn by virtue of any law or usage now in force.

Clerk of police to be stationed in St. John's; to attend sitting magistrates, to keep record of all convictions.

10. And be it enacted and ordained, by the authority aforesaid, that it shall be the duty of the clerk of police, who shall always be stationed in St. John's, to attend the sittings of any magistrate or magistrates before whom any offenders may be brought for examination by the agency of the police, to make out the necessary summonses, warrants and commitments, to file and preserve all documents and correspondences relating to matters of police, all notes and particulars of written examinations, to assist the clerk of the Crown and public prosecutor in preparing all criminal cases for trial, and to keep a register in a book of large size and strongly bound, in which shall be set down the date of any particular complaint or offence charged, the name of the party accused and party by whom accused, together with any general remarks which may promise to be useful in the investigation of any future charges or complaints.

Principal station, or head-quarters, to be the town of St. John, at the old gaol, to be repaired for such purpose.

11. And be it enacted and ordained, by the authority aforesaid, that the principal station, head-quarters or rendezvous of the said police department shall be in the town of St. John, at the public building formerly occupied as the common gaol, and to which the present police officers shall be annexed, and which shall immediately undergo sufficient repair for this purpose, and have suitable places for the temporary confinement of offenders taken into custody, and detained for examination before the justices; reserving nevertheless, in the said public building, suitable apartments for the use and accommodation of the sitting magistrates, or any other magistrates before whom parties may be brought for examination, or who may be engaged in any judicial proceedings appertaining to their offices; and the said police apartments shall be provided, at the public expense, with such seats, benches, tables, arms and arm-racks as may be required, and with at least two good lamps, which shall always be kept burning during the hours of darkness, at the public cost; and the arms to be provided shall consist of at least one fusil or blunderbuss, with appropriate belts and pouches, one pair of pistols, and one sword or cutlass, for each member of police, with an adequate supply of requisite ammunition, which said arms shall at all times be kept clean and in perfectly serviceable order and repair; and such station in St. John's shall be the centre of an intimate and constant communication with the other police offices on all matters relating to the disturbance of the public peace, and to the commission of all offences of a serious character.

Each member of police to be furnished with 1 fusil or blunderbuss, with belts and pouches, 1 pair pistols and 1 cutlass, with ammunition, &c.

Ordinary strength of police in St. John's, 1 assistant inspector, and 8 subordinate officers.

12. And be it enacted and ordained, by the authority aforesaid, that the ordinary strength of the police force at St. John's shall consist (exclusive of the superintendent) of one assistant-inspector and eight subordinate officers.

Besides general and extended constabulary duties, members of police in St. John's to patrole the streets, lanes, wharfs, &c., and to apprehend all suspicious persons, and commit them to the watch-house.

13. And be it enacted and ordained, by the authority aforesaid, that over and above the more general and extended constabulary duties contemplated by this Act, the members of the police station in St. John's shall be required, as far as their numbers may permit, to keep watch and ward, and shall visit and inspect the different precincts, streets, lanes, wharfs, purlieus and outskirts of the said town, patrolling at such hours and successive intervals during the day and night, and in such rotation as the superintendent of police may think fit to direct, in order to the prevention and detection of all felonies, burglaries, firing of buildings, robberies, larcenies, affrays of persons, outrages and disorders, or injuries to property of any kind, as well as to apprehend all night-walkers, rogues, vagabonds and other idle, disorderly, lurking and suspicious persons, and to lodge all such as may be so taken into their custody at the watch-house or apartment allotted for that purpose within the police station, till their several offences be inquired into, and determined on by the sitting magistrate, or any other magistrate appointed for the town or district of St. John.

Police in St. John's to apprehend all persons at any time selling or bartering sugar canes, and all other articles, contrary to the law for abolishing Sunday markets, all persons riding or

14. And be it enacted and ordained, by the authority aforesaid, that the said police stationed in St. John's shall be and are hereby authorized to apprehend all persons at any time selling, bartering or disposing of sugar canes, all persons selling, bartering or disposing of articles contrary to the spirit and intent of the law of this Island for the abolition of the Sunday markets, all persons furiously or improperly riding or driving in the streets, all carters who may be found riding on their carts, or who may not have the owner's name or initials, or the plantation to which the same belong marked legibly on the same, all persons flying kites, playing with bat and ball, or other games whereby horses may be startled, or persons committing any nuisances, dangerous or unsuitable for the public streets; and such police officers shall detain any such offender or offenders, and carry him, her or them with as little delay as possible before the sitting magistrate, or any magistrate, who, on due conviction on oath of any such offender or offenders, shall have authority to fine him, her or them in a sum not exceeding 5 l., or, in default of immediate payment thereof, to commit the offender or offenders to the common gaol or house of correction for a period not exceeding 21 days, unless the said fine be sooner paid.

or

driving furiously in the streets, all carters riding on their carts, all persons flying kites or playing at bat and ball, &c.; offender to be carried before sitting magistrate; on conviction, offender to be fined 5 l. and in default of payment, to commit to gaol or house of correction for 21days, maximum.

15. And be it enacted and ordained, by the authority aforesaid, that the police on duty in St. John's shall be required to take up all animals straying or feeding in the public streets, and which by law may be liable to be pounded, and at any time after three days public notice may destroy all hogs found loose in the public streets.

Police in St. John's to take up all animals straying or feeding in the public streets, and after three days notice to destroy all hogs found loose upon the streets.

16. And be it enacted and ordained, by the authority aforesaid, that two other stations of police shall be formed and established; one in the town of Falmouth or English Harbour, or in the immediate vicinity thereof, and the other in the town or vicinity of the town of Parham; and until suitable and convenient buildings can be erected or provided for such purposes, houses shall be hired at the public expense, not exceeding 100 l. per annum, each having contained therein, adjoining or attached thereto, secure and commodious apartments for the temporary safe custody of offenders apprehended by the said police, and intended to be brought to justice by them.

Two other stations of police, one at Falmouth or English Harbour, and the other at Parham; houses to be provided at the public expense, not exceeding 100 l. per annum each.

17. And be it enacted and ordained, by the authority aforesaid, that the ordinary establishment at each of the last-mentioned stations shall consist of one assistant inspector and four serjeants or subordinate officers of police, who, besides their staves, shall be provided with arms, accoutrements and ammunition as are hereinbefore specified; and the said members of police shall be subject to the like control and regulations as those in St. John's; and from them shall be required the same duties and observances, as far as the local circumstances of the station may render practicable or expedient, taking all offenders who may be apprehended by them for examination before any one or more of the nearest of His Majesty's justices of the peace, two or more of whom shall, if to them it seem more convenient, associate themselves and sit on some stated day of the week in petty sessions, for the purpose of hearing and determining on such matters as may be brought before them by the said police.

Ordinary establishment at each station to be, 1 assistant inspector, and 4 serjeants or subordinate officers, to be furnished with arms, &c., in like manner as the police in St. John's, and to perform the same duties.

18. And be it enacted and ordained, by the authority aforesaid, that another station of police shall be formed and established at the Old Road, either at the Old Road Fort, or at Johnson's Point Fort, or both, the buildings of which, if not already suitable to the purpose, shall receive such requisite alterations as may render them more commodious, unless a more suitable and convenient position can be obtained in lieu thereof, under the authority of his Excellency the Governor, in Bermudian Valley or New Division; and the ordinary establishment at such station shall consist, in like manner, of one assistant inspector and four serjeants or subordinate officers of police, who shall be subject to the same control, regulations, and the performance of the same duties in the active preservation of the public peace, and in the prevention and suppression of all crimes and offences against the laws of this Island, as is hereby required from all other members of the department of police; and on apprehending any offender or offenders against the public peace or laws of this Island, they shall take them, as promptly as possible, before any one or more of the nearest of His Majesty's justices of the peace, two or more of whom shall have authority, if to them it seem more convenient, to associate themselves, on any stated day of the week, in petty sessions for hearing and determining all such matters as may be brought before them by the said police.

One other station of police to be at the old road, either at Old Road Fort or Johnson's Point Fort, under the authority of the Governor, to consist of 1 assistant inspector and 4 serjeants; duties the same as other members of police.

19. And be it enacted and ordained, by the authority aforesaid, that there shall be provided, at the public expense, books, to be kept at the several out-stations of police, for the due recording of all proceedings within their cognizance respectively; and on the assistant inspectors thereat shall devolve the duties of clerk to the station.

Books, at the public expense, to be provided for each station. Proceedings to be recorded.

20. Provided always, and be it enacted, that nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent the superintendent of police from changing or shifting temporarily the out-stations of police as events or circumstances may seem to require, and as quarters for their accommodation can elsewhere be procured, as well as to withdraw or draft from any station, with the view of augmenting the strength at any other station, as well as at any time to relieve and change the individual members of police from one post to another, as to the said superintendent may seem fit and proper.

Superintendent may change out-stations as events occur, as well as withdraw or draft from any to augment the strength at any other station, as well as to relieve and change any individual member of police.

21. And be it enacted and ordained, by the authority aforesaid, that in the event of its appearing expedient to his Excellency the Governor or Commander-in-chief for the time time being, on the representation of the superintendent or chief officer of police, that any one of the out-stations should be removed to any other part of the country, or that any number of the persons composing the police establishment should be detached and posted in any other part of the Island, his Excellency shall be and is hereby authorized to hire or rent suitable houses or quarters for their accommodation and lodging, at a rate not exceeding 100 l. currency per annum for each, which sum the public treasurer shall be and is hereby authorized to pay.

Governor empowered, on the representation of superintendent, to remove any out-station to any part of the country, and to hire or rent suitable quarters at public expense, not exceeding 100 l. per annum.

Present substituted police to perform all the duties required from the pre-existent police under the Alien Act. Book to be kept at each station for registering the names of aliens.

22. And whereas an Act of this Island was passed on the 16th day of July 1823, intituled, "An Act for preventing Aliens of dangerous Principles from residing in this Island, and for establishing other Regulations for the Security of the Inhabitants," the chief duties of which Act were thereby imposed on the then existing police establishment: And whereas strangers were then made, and still continue to be subjected to certain rules and regulations therein laid down as necessary for the public welfare: And whereas by this Act that police is hereinbefore declared to cease to have existence; Be it therefore, and it is hereby enacted and ordained, by the authority aforesaid, that the present substituted police shall do and perform all the duties heretofore required from the pre-existent police, the duties of which shall merge into the new system of police established by this Act; and that a book shall be kept at each station for the registering of the names and domiciles of all aliens, agreeable to the provisions contained in the former before-mentioned Act; and the whole of the other duties therein prescribed to said police shall be devolved on the police established under this Act.

In every case where complaint is made before a magistrate against any person, magistrate to demand 6 s. for his warrant.

23. And whereas it frequently happens that complaints are exhibited before the magistrates of the said Island which turn out upon investigation to be very frivolous and vexatious; Be it and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that in every case where a complaint is made against any person or persons, that the magistrate or magistrates to whom such complaint is made shall demand as a remuneration for his or their trouble, for issuing the warrant and hearing the complaint, the sum of 6 s.

If person complained against found to be in error, party to pay 12 s., and complainant reimbursed the 6 s. paid for the warrant.

24. And be it further enacted, that if upon hearing the complaint in any case, the person or persons so complained against shall be found to have been in error in any degree, that then and in such case, whether they be bound over to appear to answer to such complaint at the next Court of King's Bench and grand sessions of the peace, or other sessions of the peace, to be holden for the said Island, or the complaint dismissed upon reprimand or otherwise by the said magistrate or magistrates, that he or they shall order or direct that the said party so complained against or found in error, shall immediately, and before departure from the presence of the said magistrate or magistrates, reimburse to the said complainant the said sum of 6 s. so paid for obtaining the warrant to appear and answer to the said complaint, and shall also pay to the said magistrates the further sum of 6 s., making together the sum of 12 s.; if otherwise, the said sum of 6 s. paid for issuing the warrant and hearing the complaint, to be borne by the complainant.

Party complained against refusing to pay such sum of 12 s., to be committed to common gaol for 7 days.

25. And be it enacted and ordained, by the authority aforesaid, that should the party complained against refuse to pay, under the circumstances aforesaid, the said sum of 12 s., when so ordered and directed, the said magistrate or magistrates are hereby authorized and directed to commit him, her or them so contemptuously refusing, to the common gaol, there to remain for the space of seven days or until the said sum of 12 s. be fully paid and satisfied.

Any two justices, on the request and recommendation of owner or director of plantation, whereon may be living 100 persons, labourers and their families, to appoint under their hands 2 persons out of that number, or 1 person if under 100 and not less than 50, to act as constables or constable on such plantation. Same powers incident to the office of constable.

26. And be it enacted and ordained, by the authority aforesaid, that it shall and may be lawful for any two of His Majesty's justices of the peace, on the request and recommendation of the owner or director of any plantation whereon may be domiciliated the number of 100 persons, labourers, and their families, to appoint by precept in writing, under their hands respectively, two persons out of that number, or one person if under 100, and not less than 50, to act as constables or constable on such plantation, which constables or constable shall have and are hereby declared to be invested with all the powers and authorities incident and belonging to the office of constable generally, and as such shall and may act, if need be, in the performance and prosecution of his or their duty as fully and effectually on any other plantation as on the particular one for which he or they may have been appointed, in preserving the public peace, and apprehending all offenders against the same, and in preventing or suppressing all tumults, riots, trespasses, misdemeanors and felonies; and such magistrates are hereby empowered to administer to all such persons so appointed, the following oath; viz.

Form of oath to be taken by constables.

"I. A. B., do swear, that I will well and truly serve our Sovereign Lord the King in the office of rural constable for the plantation called ———— and as constable generally, if need be, without favour or affection, malice or ill-will; and that I will to the best of my power cause the peace to be kept and preserved, and prevent all offences against the persons and properties of His Majesty's subjects, and that while I hold the office, I will, to the best of my skill and knowledge, discharge all the duties thereof. So help me God."

Not to prevent justices from appointing special constables when necessary.

Provided always, that nothing in this Act contained shall alter, affect or abridge any power or authority which by law appertains to any justice or justices of the peace to appoint special constables in cases of actual necessity.

Constables appointed and sworn, to be enrolled in the office of clerk of the vestry of the parish, and list thereof published every half year. Constable to be furnished, at expense of plantation, with staff of office.

27. And be it further enacted, that every such constable so appointed and sworn shall, on the requisition of the justice making such appointment, be enrolled in the office of the clerk of the vestry of the parish in which the plantation for which such constable may be appointed shall be situated, which clerk of the vestry shall, and he is hereby directed to publish in one of the newspapers of this Island, half yearly, a list of such constables so appointed; and such constable shall, at the expense of such plantation, be provided with a staff of office, and every staff so supplied shall bear the name of the plantation to which the said constable is appointed, in addition to the usual marks, which staff shall be given up to the owner or director of the plantation whenever any constable so appointed removes from it; which removal, whenever the same shall occur, shall be deemed and taken to be a removal from office,

office, so as to give the magistrates aforesaid the opportunity of making a fresh appointment to the office so vacated.

Constable to receive 4 s. 6 d. for executing justice's warrant, and 9 d. per mile.

28. And be it further enacted, that every such constable shall, for every warrant under hand and seal which he may execute, be entitled to receive from the public treasury the sum of 4 s. 6 d. for the caption, and 9 d. per mile for every mile such constable shall convey the person apprehended to the magistrate issuing the warrant, and from thence to his ultimate destination.

Gross dereliction or wilful neglect of duty by constable, to be inquired into by magistrate, and upon conviction dismissed from office.

Dismissal of constable not to prevent remedy at law by party aggrieved.

29. And be it further enacted, that all gross dereliction or wilful neglect of duty on the part of such constable or constables shall be inquired into by the magistrate or magistrates of the division, and that on conviction before him or them, it shall be in the power of such magistrate or magistrates to dismiss from office the person or persons who may be so convicted before him or them: provided always, that such conviction and dismissal shall not prevent, lessen or impeach, any remedy at law which any party aggrieved by any such offence of such constable might or would have had if such conviction and dismissal had not taken place.

Rural constables not required to attend any of the courts, unless summoned.

30. Provided nevertheless, and it is hereby further enacted, that nothing herein contained shall be construed to extend to require the attendance of such constables at the Court of King's Bench and grand sessions of the peace, or at any other courts held for the said Island, unless specially summoned thereto.

Until provision made for the erection of houses of correction in the several parishes, south wing of New Gaol to be central house of correction.

Tread-wheel, and other machinery, to be provided at the public cost.

31. And be it further enacted and ordained, by the authority aforesaid, that until full and adequate provision shall be made for the erection and maintenance of houses of correction in the different parishes, or other convenient districts of the said Island, there shall from and after the 1st day of August next be established a central house of correction at the New Gaol, near the town of St. John, for the reception and confinement of such rogues, vagabonds, idle and disorderly persons, and such other persons as may be committed by any of His Majesty's justices of the peace under the authority of any Act of this Island to such house of correction; and that there shall be provided therein, at the public cost, a tread-mill or tread-wheel, and such other machinery, materials and implements as may be necessary to set on work on such tread-mill or tread-wheel, or in the breaking or hewing of stones, in picking oakum, or any other suitable, customary or eligible manner, all such persons as for their several offences may by any such justice or justices be committed to such house of correction and sentenced to hard labour.

South wing of New Gaol to be enclosed with thick wall, with door of communication with the gaol yard.

32. And be it enacted and ordained, by the authority aforesaid, that to extend and enlarge the before-mentioned New Gaol near St. John's, so as to afford the necessary additional space and accommodation which will be required therein in consequence of the present enactment, the unoccupied southern wing of the range of buildings wherein the said gaol is comprised, and which has hitherto been reserved for an hospital and public dispensary, shall be connected with the said gaol by opening a door of communication with the gaol yard, and the whole of the said southern wing shall likewise be inclosed with a secure and substantial wall at the public expense.

Justices assembled at grand sessions to appoint 3 of their number to act as visitors of house of correction; to visit at least four times a year, or oftener, and to report to next grand sessions; to frame rules and regulations, &c.

33. And be it enacted and ordained, by the authority aforesaid, that the justices assembled at the grand sessions of the peace to be next holden for this Island shall appoint three justices of their number to act as visitors of the house of correction, who shall visit and inspect the same four times a year, or oftener if need be, and report the state thereof to the next sessions, and shall draw up such orders and rules for the proper governing and regulating the said house of correction, for keeping the prison wholesome and clean, for receiving, separating, (according to their sex or the nature of their offences), dieting, clothing, relieving, employing, reforming, managing, punishing and watching of all such persons as shall be sent to, confined or continued in the same, and may also examine into the behaviour and conduct of the officer or officers, and treatment of the prisoners, as may occur to their observation; but such rules and orders so to be made shall not begin to have force and effect till they have been submitted to the justices in sessions and duly confirmed by them, when such rules and regulations shall be printed in plain legible characters, and fixed in some conspicuous part of such house of correction: provided nevertheless, that the following shall form part of such rules and regulations, and shall be observed and enforced at the said house of correction until added to and rendered more copious by such visitors and bench of justices aforesaid; viz.

Rules to form part, and to be added to rules framed by justices.

1st. That the several persons who shall be committed to the house of correction to be kept to hard labour shall be employed (unless prevented by ill health) every day during their confinement (except Sundays, Christmas-day and Good Friday) for so many hours as the day-light will admit, not exceeding 12 hours, being allowed thereout to rest half an hour at breakfast, an hour and a half at dinner, and that the intervals shall be noticed by the ringing of a bell.

2d. That the master of the house of correction shall adapt the various employments which shall be directed by the justices at sessions to each person in such manner as shall be best suited to his or her strength and ability, regard being had to age and sex.

3d. That the males and females shall be employed, and shall also eat and be lodged in separate apartments, and shall have no intercourse or communication with each other.

4th. That every person so committed shall be sustained with bread, or any coarse but wholesome food, and water; but persons under medical care shall be sustained with such food and liquor as the medical attendant shall direct.

5th. That the master and such other persons, if any, as shall be employed by the justices to assist the master, shall be very watchful and attentive in seeing that the persons so committed are constantly employed during the hours of work, and if any person shall be found remiss or negligent in performing what is required to be done by such persons, to the best of his or her power and ability, or shall wilfully do any waste, spoil or damage of any kind soever, the master shall punish every such person in the manner hereafter directed.

6th. That if any person so committed shall refuse to obey the orders given by the master, or shall be guilty of profane cursing and swearing, or of any indecent behaviour or expression, or of any assault, quarrel or abusive words to or with any other person, he or she shall be punished for the same in the manner hereafter directed.

7th. That the master shall have power to punish the several offenders as before described, by close confinement, and shall enter in a book, to be kept by him for the inspection of the justices at sessions and the visiting justices, the name of every person who shall be so punished by him, expressing the offence and duration of the punishment inflicted.

Justices assembled at grand sessions to appoint a fit person to be keeper of house of correction; to receive 200 l. per annum.

34. And be it enacted and ordained, by the authority aforesaid, that the justices assembled in grand sessions shall appoint a fit person to be the master or keeper of such house of correction, who shall receive quarterly, out of the public treasury, the yearly salary of the sum of 200 l.; and the said master or keeper shall give to the justices, if it seem proper, sufficient security for the continuance and performance of his services and duty.

Until justices shall assemble at grand sessions, Governor to appoint keeper of house of correction ad interim.

35. And be it enacted and ordained, by the authority aforesaid, that until His Majesty's justices shall be assembled in grand sessions, his Excellency the Governor shall have power and authority to nominate and appoint a master or keeper of such house of correction ad interim, who shall receive a remuneration for his services at and after the rate of the abovementioned sum per annum of 200 l.

Act to be in force for two years from publication.

36. And be it further enacted, that this Act shall be and continue in force for the space of two years from the publication thereof, and thenceforward to the next meeting of the Council and Assembly of this Island.

No. 20.

AN ACT for enabling Labourers, Artificers and Servants, to recover by Summary Process their Wages from their Employers, and for repealing an Act dated the 28th of October, in the year 1684, intituled, "An Act for enabling Artificers, Labourers and Servants to recover their Wages from their Masters."—(Passed 31st July 1834.)

Preamble.

WHEREAS from the change of circumstances in this Island, the provisions of an Act thereof, passed on the 28th day of October, 1684, "for enabling artificers, labourers and servants to recover their wages from their masters," have been rendered inadequate to the end therein contemplated:

And whereas from the alteration in the condition of the labouring classes in this Island about to take place, some enactment for the like purpose and effect will become highly necessary and expedient:

We, therefore, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Governor and Commander-in-chief in and over Your Majesty's Islands of Antigua, Montserrat, Barbuda, St. Christopher, Nevis, Anguilla, the Virgin Islands and Dominica, and the Council and Assembly of this Your Majesty's Island of Antigua, do humbly pray Your Most Excellent Majesty that it may be enacted and ordained, and be it and it is hereby enacted and ordained, by the authority of Your Majesty's said Governor and Commander-in-chief, and the Council and Assembly of this Your Majesty's Island of Antigua aforesaid, that it shall and may be lawful for any one of His Majesty's justices of the peace in this Island, on complaint to him made on oath by any artificer, labourer or servant therein, of the withholding from any such artificer, labourer or servant, of the just wages due to him or her, on any contract or agreement from any person or persons by whom he or she shall have been employed, to call before him such person refusing or neglecting to make satisfaction, and if, upon hearing and examining such person on oath, it shall appear to the said justice that any such wages are due and owing, or on an adjustment of claims between the parties, that any balance of wages is due or owing, such justice is hereby authorized to order the same to be paid to such artificer, labourer or servant within 10 days after order made, and if such order be not complied with, or in case of the party complained against having neglected to appear after being duly summoned by such justice, it shall be lawful for such justice to issue his warrant, directed to any constable of the division, authorizing and directing him to levy on the goods and chattels of any such person making default as aforesaid, and them to sell in satisfaction thereof, and of all costs and charges: provided always, that such complaint be made within 30 days from the time any part of such wages shall be due, and that such wages do not exceed the sum of 5 l. current gold and silver money; any law, custom or usage to the contrary notwithstanding.

Any one of the justices of the peace, on complaint made to him, on oath, of the withholding from any artificer, labourer or servant, his or her just wages, to call before him such person neglecting to make satisfaction, and upon hearing if wages are due, to order payment within 10 days; order not complied with, or party neglecting to appear, justice to issue warrant to constable of the division to levy on the goods and chattels of party, and sell in satisfaction, with costs.

Proviso; complaint to be made within 30 days, and sum not to exceed 5 l. currency.

2. And

2. And be it further enacted, that from and after the publication of this Act, an Act of the said Island, dated the 28th of October, in the year of Our Lord 1684, intituled "An Act for enabling Artificers, Labourers and Servants to recover their Wages from their Masters," shall be and the same is hereby repealed.

Act of the 28th October 1684, "for enabling artificers, labourers, &c. to recover their wages," repealed.

AN ACT for regulating Special Contracts between Labourers and their Employers, and enforcing a strict Observance of such Contracts.—(Passed 29th Dec. 1834.)

No. 21.

WHEREAS it is essential to the prosperity of this Island that special contracts between labourers and their employers should be properly regulated, and all breaches of the same by either party be promptly redressed by means of summary convictions. May it therefore please Your Most Excellent Majesty, that it may be enacted, and be it enacted by the Governor and Commander-in-chief of Your Majesty's Islands of Antigua, Montserrat, Barbuda, St. Christopher, Nevis, Anguilla, the Virgin Islands and Dominica, and the Council and Assembly of this Your Majesty's Island of Antigua, and it is hereby enacted and ordained, by the authority of the same, that special contracts between labourers and their employers in this Island shall not be valid if made to endure for more than one year, and unless the same shall be made or entered into in writing or otherwise, in the presence of two or more witnesses.

Special contracts with labourers not valid, if made for a term exceeding 12 months; nor unless entered into in the presence of two or more witnesses.

2. And be it further enacted, that any labourer bound by any special contract entered into in the manner and form hereinbefore prescribed, who shall absent himself or herself from his or her employment, even with reasonable cause, shall forfeit for the benefit of his or her employer the wages which shall have accrued during the time of such absence.

Labourers under contract to forfeit wages accrued during absence, even with reasonable cause.

3. And be it further enacted, that any labourer bound by any special contract entered into in the manner and form hereinbefore prescribed, who shall absent himself or herself from his or her employment with reasonable cause, and not give to his or her employer the earliest possible intimation of such intended absence and of the cause thereof, shall forfeit for the benefit of his or her employer twice the amount of the wages which shall have accrued during the time of such absence.

Labourer under contract failing to give employer the earliest information of intended absence, to forfeit twice the amount of wages accrued during such absence.

4. And be it further enacted, that any labourer bound by any special contract entered into in the manner and form hereinbefore prescribed, who shall absent himself or herself from his or her employment with reasonable cause for half or any smaller proportion of a day, shall forfeit a whole day's wages for the benefit of his or her employer.

Labourer under contract absenting himself without reasonable cause for half or smaller portion of a day, to forfeit whole day's wages.

5. And be it further enacted, that any labourer bound by any special contract entered into in the manner and form hereinbefore prescribed, who shall absent himself or herself from his or her employment without reasonable cause for more than half a day, shall forfeit three days' wages for the benefit of his or her employer.

Labourer under contract absenting himself without reasonable cause for more than half a day, to forfeit three days' wages.

6. And be it further enacted, that any labourer bound by any special contract entered into in the manner and form hereinbefore prescribed, who shall absent himself or herself from his or her employment without reasonable cause for two successive days, or on two distinct days within the same fortnight, shall, on conviction on oath before one or more of His Majesty's justices of the peace, be sentenced to hard labour in the house of correction for one week.

Labourer under contract absent without reasonable cause for two successive days, or two days within the fortnight, to suffer one week's confinement with hard labour in the house of correction.

7. And be it further enacted, that any labourer bound by any special contract entered into in the manner and form hereinbefore prescribed, who shall absent himself or herself from his or her employment without reasonable cause for three or more successive days, or on three distinct days within the same fortnight, shall, on conviction on oath before one or more of His Majesty's justices of the peace, be sentenced to hard labour in the house of correction for two weeks.

Labourer under contract absenting without reasonable cause for three days, to suffer confinement with hard labour in house of correction for two weeks.

8. And be it further enacted, that any labourer bound by any special contract entered into in the manner and form hereinbefore prescribed, who shall neglect to perform any labour for which he or she shall have so engaged himself or herself, or who shall perform the same in a negligent and improper manner, or who shall by wilful negligence damage the property of his or her employer, shall, on conviction on oath before one or more of His Majesty's justices of the peace, for the first offence, forfeit for the benefit of his or her employer any number of days' wages not exceeding six, and for the second offence shall be subject to imprisonment and hard labour for any time not exceeding one week, and for the third or any future offence, to three times that amount of punishment.

Wilful damage to employer's property, or negligent manner of performing contract, punishable by imprisonment and hard labour for six days, maximum; second offence, one week; and future offence, three times that amount.

9. And be it further enacted, that any labourer bound by any special contract entered into in the manner and form hereinbefore prescribed, who shall be convicted on oath before one or more of His Majesty's justices of the peace of endangering the property of his or her employer, or of any other person, by the careless use of fire or of drunkenness, or of ill-using any cattle or other stock, or of wantonly destroying or injuring the property of his or her employer intrusted to his or her charge, or of failing to provide, according to his or her ability

Labourer under contract, endangering property by careless use of fire or drunkenness, or ill-using cattle, &c., or wantonly destroying property, or failing to provide for his or her infant children, liable to imprisonment and hard labour for three months, maximum.

ability, for his or her infant children, shall for any such offences, at the discretion of the justice or justices of the peace before whom he or she shall or may be so convicted, be adjudged to imprisonment and hard labour for any term not exceeding three months.

Wages accruing during imprisonment forfeited to employer.

10. And be it further enacted, that during the imprisonment of any such labourer, all wages which according to his or her contract would have accrued to him or her, shall be forfeited for the benefit of his or her employer.

Ill-usage or nonpayment of wages on the part of employer, or imperfect fulfilment of contract, liable to penalty of 10*l.*; and in case of ill-usage, labourer to be released from contract.

11. And be it further enacted, that in the event of ill-usage, or of the wages for which the employer shall have contracted being unpaid or in arrear, or if any other part of the contract shall be unfulfilled on the part of the employer, it shall be lawful for any one or more of the labourers, not exceeding three, on behalf of himself, herself or themselves, and the other aggrieved parties, to complain to any justice of the peace in the parish of such ill-usage or breach of contract, and that it shall be lawful for such justice of the peace to adjudge the employer to the payment of the wages in arrear with costs, and a penalty not exceeding 10*l.* for the breach of contract, and in case of ill-usage, to discharge the labourer from his or her contract.

Persons employing labourer who may be already under contract, or in the occupation of a house on the estate of his employer, after due notice shall have been given of such pre-existing contract, to forfeit 10*l.* for each offence.

12. And whereas it is highly desirable that servants in husbandry should, as far as may be practicable, be associated in labour and located on the same estates; and it is both impolitic and unjust towards their present employers, as well as injurious to themselves, that they should be allowed to be seduced by the temptation of a temporary increase of wages held out to them by any other proprietor, with a particular object, to desert the estates to which they are attached, and where they enjoy the more solid advantage of permanent employment with a comfortable place of abode; Be it therefore further enacted, that if any person shall knowingly employ any servant in husbandry who shall either be under contract to another person, or retain the occupation of a house upon the estate of such other person, or if any person shall continue to employ any servant in husbandry so under contract to another, or so retaining the occupation of a house upon the estate of such other person, after receiving due notice of the relation in which such servant in husbandry stands towards such other person, the person so offending shall, on conviction on oath before any one or more of His Majesty's justices of the peace, forfeit for every offence the sum of 10*l.*, to be recovered and applied in the manner hereinafter mentioned.

Costs and penalties recoverable in same manner as prescribed by other Acts, and to be paid into public treasury.

13. And be it further enacted, that all wages and costs so adjudged to be paid, and all penalties imposed by this Act, shall be recovered in the manner prescribed for the recovery of penalties imposed by any other Act of this Island, and such penalties paid into the public treasury.

Nothing in this Act to invalidate verbal agreements for labour by the day or by the job, where parties have mutual confidence in each other, and content to forego legal remedies for non-performance.

14. Provided always, and be it further enacted, that nothing herein contained shall be construed to invalidate or interdict verbal agreements for labour by the day, or by the piece, task or job, with persons not already under contract as aforesaid, and where the contracting parties are content to forego the benefit of a legal remedy for non-performance, and place a mutual reliance on the good faith and integrity of each other for the due fulfilment of such agreements.

Mechanics and headmen, watchmen and stock-keepers, included in the term labourer.

15. And be it further enacted, that all persons who have not been trained to any employment but that of labour in the fields, or in the manufactories, all persons who have been trained to labour as smiths, wheelwrights, carpenters, or otherwise, as mechanics and artisans, and all persons who have been accustomed to the occupation of headmen or drivers, in superintending the labour of slaves, stock-keepers and watchmen, shall be considered as labourers within the meaning and provisions of this Act.

This Act in force for one year.

16. And be it further enacted, that this Act shall continue and be in force for one year from the publication thereof, and from thence until the next meeting of the Council and Assembly.

No. 22.

AT the Court at St. James's, the 10th day of June 1835:—Present, The King's Most Excellent Majesty in Council.

WHEREAS by an Act passed in the 3d & 4th year of His Majesty's reign, intituled, "An Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies; for promoting the Industry of the Manumitted Slaves; and for compensating the Persons hitherto entitled to the Services of such Slaves;" after reciting, amongst other things, that it would be desirable that such of the provisions of the said Act as related to the internal concerns of the said respective Colonies should be enacted in such respective Colonies, so far as might be possible, by the authority of the several local legislatures of such Colonies respectively, it is enacted, that in case the Governor, Council and Assembly of any one or more of His Majesty's Colonies should, by any Act or Acts of General Assembly for that purpose made, substitute for the several enactments thereinbefore contained, or any of them, any enactments accomplishing the several objects in such thereinbefore contained enactments respectively contemplated, as fully and to the like effect, but in a manner and form better adapted to the local circumstances of any such Colonies or Colony; and in case His Majesty should, by any Order or Orders

Orders to be by him made by the advice of His Privy Council, confirm and allow any such Act or Acts of Assembly, and should, in and by any such Order or Orders in Council, recite and set forth at length the several provisions and enactments of the said Act of Parliament for which such other enactments as aforesaid should have been substituted by any such Act or Acts of General Assembly, then and in such case so much and such parts of the said Act of Parliament as should be so recited and set forth at length in any such Order or Orders of His Majesty in Council, should be suspended and cease to be of any force or effect in any such Colony from and after the arrival and proclamation therein of any such Order or Orders of His Majesty in Council, and should continue to be so suspended so long as any such substituted enactment should continue in force and unrepealed, and no longer:

And whereas the Governor, Council and Assembly of the Island of Antigua, have, by a certain Act of General Assembly for that purpose made, bearing date the 4th day of June 1834, substituted for such of the several enactments in the said Act of Parliament contained as relate to the apprenticeship of the labourers therein mentioned, certain other enactments accomplishing the several objects in the said last-mentioned enactments of the said Act of Parliament respectively contemplated, as fully and to the like effect as the same are accomplished by the said Act of Parliament, but in a manner and form better adapted to the local circumstances of the said Island of Antigua: Now therefore, in pursuance of the said Act of Parliament, and in exercise of the powers thereby in His Majesty in that behalf vested, His Majesty, by the advice of His Privy Council, doth confirm and allow the said Act of General Assembly; and it is further declared, by the authority aforesaid, that so much and such parts of the said Act of Parliament as are recited and set forth at length in the schedule hereto annexed, are the provisions and enactments of the said Act of Parliament for which such other enactments have been substituted by the said Act of Assembly; and His Majesty doth therefore, by the advice aforesaid, declare that so much and such parts of the said Act of Parliament as are so recited and set forth in the said schedule, shall be suspended and cease to be of any force and effect in the said Island of Antigua from and after the arrival and proclamation therein of this present Order, and shall continue to be so suspended so long as such substituted enactments shall continue in force and unrepealed, and no longer. And the Right honourable the Lord Glenelg, one of His Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, is to give the necessary directions herein accordingly.

AN ACT for the Abolition of Slavery in this Island.—(Passed 30th July 1834.)

WHEREAS by an Act of the 3d & 4th William the Fourth, intituled, "An Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British Colonies; for promoting the Industry of the Manumitted Slaves; and for compensating Persons hitherto entitled to the Services of such Slaves," it has been rendered incumbent on us, in order to effectuate the views and intentions of His Majesty's Government, to pass an Act of this Island with similar enactments, and to confirm as far as we can the said Act: We, therefore, Your Majesty's dutiful and loyal subjects, the President administering the Government, and the Council and Assembly of this Your Majesty's Island of Montserrat, do pray Your Most Excellent Majesty, that it may be enacted, and be it and it is hereby enacted, by the authority aforesaid, that from and after the 1st day of August 1834, all persons who, in conformity with the laws now in force in this Island respectively, shall on or before the 1st day of August 1834 have been duly registered as slaves in the said Island, who on the said 1st day of August 1834 shall be actually within the said Island, and who shall by such registries appear to be on the said 1st day of August 1834 of the full age of six years or upwards, shall by force and virtue of this Act, and without the previous execution of any indenture of apprenticeship, or other deed or instrument for that purpose, become and be apprenticed labourers; provided that for the purposes aforesaid, every slave engaged in his ordinary occupation on the seas shall be deemed and taken to be within the said Island.

2. And be it further enacted, that during the continuance of the apprenticeship of any such apprenticed labourer, such person or persons shall be entitled to the services of such apprenticed labourer as would for the time being have been entitled to his or her services as a slave if this Act had not been made.

3. Provided also, and be it further enacted, that all slaves who may at any time previous to the passing of this Act have been carried with the consent of their possessors, and all apprenticed labourers who may hereafter with the like consent be carried into any part of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, shall from and after the passing of this Act be absolutely and entirely free to all intents and purposes whatsoever.

4. And whereas it is expedient that all such apprenticed labourers should, for the purposes hereinafter mentioned, be divided into three distinct classes; the first of such classes consisting of prædial apprenticed labourers attached to the soil, and comprising all persons who in their

their state of slavery were usually employed in agriculture, or in the manufacture of colonial produce, or otherwise, upon lands belonging to their owners; the second of such classes consisting of prædial apprenticed labourers not attached to the soil, and comprising all persons who in their state of slavery were usually employed in agriculture, or in the manufacture of colonial produce, or otherwise, upon lands not belonging to their owners; and the third of such classes consisting of non-prædial apprenticed labourers, and comprising all apprenticed labourers not included within either of the two preceding classes; Be it therefore enacted, that such division as aforesaid of the said apprenticed labourers into such classes as aforesaid, shall be carried into effect in such manner and form, and subject to such rules and regulations as shall for that purpose be established under such authority, and in and by such Acts of Assembly as hereinafter mentioned: provided always, that no person of the age of 12 years and upwards, shall by or by virtue of any such Act of Assembly be included in either of the said two classes of prædial apprenticed labourers, unless such person shall, for 12 calendar months at the least next before the passing of this present Act, have been habitually employed in agriculture, or in the manufacture of colonial produce.

5. And be it further enacted, that no person, who by virtue of this Act shall become a prædial apprenticed labourer, whether attached or not attached to the soil, shall continue in such apprenticeship beyond the 1st day of August 1840, and that during such his or her apprenticeship no such prædial apprenticed labourer, whether attached or not attached to the soil, shall be bound or liable by virtue of such apprenticeship to perform any labour in the service of his or her employer or employers for more than 45 hours in the whole in any one week.

6. And be it further enacted, that no person, who by virtue of this Act shall become a non-prædial apprenticed labourer, shall continue in such apprenticeship beyond the 1st day of August 1838.

7. And be it further enacted, that if, before any such apprenticeship shall have expired, the person or persons entitled for and during the remainder of any such term to the services of such apprenticed labourer, shall be desirous to discharge him or her from such apprenticeship, it shall be lawful for such person or persons so to do by any deed or instrument to be by him, her or them for that purpose made and executed, which deed or instrument shall be in such form, and shall be executed and recorded in such manner, and with such solemnities as shall for that purpose be prescribed under such authority, and in and by such Acts of Legislature as hereinafter mentioned: provided nevertheless, that if any person so discharged from any such apprenticeship, by any such voluntary act as aforesaid, shall at that time be of the age of 50 years or upwards, or shall be then labouring under any such disease or mental or bodily infirmity as may render him or her incapable of earning his or her subsistence, then and in every such case the person or persons so discharging any such apprenticed labourer as aforesaid shall continue and be liable to provide for the support and maintenance of such apprenticed labourer during the remaining term of such original apprenticeship, as fully as if such apprenticed labourer had not been discharged therefrom.

8. And be it further enacted, that it shall be lawful for any such apprenticed labourer to purchase his or her discharge from such apprenticeship even without the consent or in opposition, if necessary, to the will of the person or persons entitled to his or her services, upon payment to such person or persons of the appraised value of such services, which appraisement shall be effected, and which purchase money shall be paid and applied, and which discharge shall be given and executed in such manner and form, and upon, under and subject to such conditions as shall be prescribed under such authority and by such Acts of Legislature as hereinafter mentioned.

9. And be it further enacted, that no apprenticed labourer shall be subject or liable to be removed from this Island, and that no prædial apprenticed labourer who may in manner aforesaid become attached to the soil, shall be subject or liable to perform any labour in the service of his or her employer or employers, except upon or in or about the works and business of the plantations or estates to which such prædial apprenticed labourer shall have been attached, or on which he or she shall have been usually employed on or previously to the said 1st day of August 1834: provided nevertheless, that with the consent in writing of any one or more justices of the peace, holding a special commission by virtue of the said hereinbefore recited Act of the 3d & 4th of William the Fourth, it shall be lawful for the person or persons entitled to the services of any such attached prædial apprenticed labourer or labourers to transfer his or their services to any other estate or plantation within this Island to such person or persons belonging, which written consent shall in no case be given or be of any validity, unless any such justice or justices of the peace shall first have ascertained that such transfer would not have the effect of separating any such attached prædial apprenticed labourer from his or her wife or husband, parent or child, or from any person or persons reputed to bear any such relation to him or her, and that such transfer would not probably be injurious to the health or welfare of such attached prædial apprenticed labourer, and such written consent to any such removal shall be expressed in such terms, and shall be in each case given, attested and recorded in such manner as shall for that purpose be prescribed by Acts of Legislature as hereinafter mentioned.

10. And be it further enacted and declared, that the right or interest of any employer or employers to and in the services of any such apprenticed labourers as aforesaid shall pass and be transferable by bargain and sale, contract, deed, conveyance, will or descent, according to such rules and in such manner as shall for that purpose be provided by any Acts of Legislature as hereinafter mentioned: provided that no such apprenticed labourer shall by virtue of any such bargain and sale, contract, deed, conveyance, will or descent, be subject or liable to be separated from his or her wife or husband, parent or child, or from any person or persons reputed to bear any such relation to him or her.

11. And be it further enacted, that during the continuance of any such apprenticeship as aforesaid, the person or persons for the time being entitled to the services of every such apprenticed labourer shall be and is and are hereby required to supply him or her with such food, clothing, lodging, medicine, medical attendance, and such other maintenance and allowances, as by any law now in force in this Island an owner is required to supply to and for any slave, being of the same age and sex as such apprenticed labourer shall be; and in cases in which the food of any such prædial apprenticed labourer shall be supplied, not by the delivery to him or her of provisions, but by the cultivation by such prædial apprenticed labourer of ground set apart for the growth of provisions, the person or persons entitled to his or her services shall and is or are hereby required to provide such prædial apprenticed labourer with ground adequate both in quantity and quality for his or her support, and within a reasonable distance of his or her usual place of abode, and to allow to such prædial apprenticed labourer, from and out of the annual time during which he or she may be required to labour, after the rate of 45 hours per week as aforesaid, in the service of such his or her employer or employers, such a portion of time as shall be adequate for the proper cultivation of such ground, and for the raising and securing the crops thereon grown, the actual extent of which ground, and the distance thereof from the place of residence of the prædial apprenticed labourer for whose use it may be so allotted, and the length of time to be deducted for the cultivation of the said ground from the said annual time, shall and may be regulated by such Acts of Legislature as hereinafter mentioned.

12. And be it further enacted, that subject to the obligations imposed by this Act, or to be imposed by any such Act of Legislature as hereinafter mentioned, upon such apprenticed labourers as aforesaid, all and every the persons who on the said 1st day of August 1834 shall be holden in slavery within this Island, shall upon and from and after the said 1st day of August 1834 become and be to all intents and purposes free and discharged of and from all manner of slavery, and shall be absolutely and for ever manumitted, and that the children thereafter to be born to any such persons, and the offspring of such children, shall in like manner be free from their birth; and that from and after the said 1st day of August 1834, slavery shall be and is hereby utterly and for ever abolished in this Island.

13. And whereas it may happen that children who have not attained the age of six years on the said 1st day of August 1834, or that children who after that day may be born to any female apprenticed labourers, may not be properly supported by their parents, and that no person may be disposed voluntarily to undertake the support of such children, and it is necessary that provision should be made for the maintenance of such children in any such contingency; Be it therefore enacted, that if any child who on the said 1st day of August 1834 had not completed his or her sixth year, or if any child to which any female apprenticed labourer may give birth on or after the said 1st day of August 1834, shall be brought before any justice of the peace holding any such special commission as hereinbefore mentioned, and if it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of such justice that any such child is unprovided with an adequate maintenance, and that such child hath not completed his or her age of 12 years, it shall be lawful for such justice, and he is hereby required on behalf of any such child, to execute an indenture of apprenticeship, thereby binding such child as an apprenticed labourer to the person or persons entitled to the services of the mother of such child, or who had been last entitled to the services of such mother; but in case it shall be made to appear to any such justice that such person or persons aforesaid is or are unable or unfit to enter into such indenture, and properly to perform the conditions thereof, then it shall be lawful for such justice, and he is hereby required by such indenture to bind any such child to any other person or persons to be by him for that purpose approved, and who may be willing and able properly to perform such conditions; and it shall by every such indenture of apprenticeship be declared whether such child shall thenceforward belong to the class of attached prædial apprenticed labourers, or to the class of unattached prædial apprenticed labourers, or to the class of non-prædial apprenticed labourers, and the term of such apprenticeship of any such child shall by such indenture be limited and made to continue in force until such child shall have completed his or her 21st year, and no longer; and every child so apprenticed as aforesaid by the order of any such justice of the peace as aforesaid, shall, during his or her apprenticeship, be subject to all such and the same rules and regulations respecting the work or labour to be by them done or performed, and respecting the food and other supplies to be to him or her furnished, as any other such apprenticed labourers as aforesaid: provided always, that the said indenture of apprenticeship shall contain sufficient words of obligation upon the employer to allow reasonable time and opportunity for the education and religious instruction of such child.

14. And whereas it is necessary that various rules and regulations should be framed and established for ascertaining with reference to each apprenticed labourer within this Island, whether he or she belongs to the class of attached prædial apprenticed labourers, or to the class of unattached prædial apprenticed labourers, or to the class of non-prædial apprenticed labourers, and for determining the manner and form in which, and the solemnities with which the voluntary discharge of any apprenticed labourer from such his or her apprenticeship may be effected, and for prescribing the form and manner in which, and the solemnities with which the purchase by any such apprenticed labourer of his or her discharge from such apprenticeship, without or in opposition, if necessary, to the consent of the person or persons entitled to his or her services, shall be effected, and how the necessary appraisement of the future value of such services shall be made, and how and to whom the amount of
